Try Miss McFarlane's Favorite Recipe for BISCUITS

½ teaspoon salt — 4 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
2 cups pastry flour (or 1½ cups bread flour) — 2 tablespoons shortening
½ cup milk, or half milk and half water

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Cut in the chilled shortening. Now add the chilled liquid to make soft dough. Toss dough onto a floured board and do not handle more than is necessary. Roll or pat out with hands to about ½ inch thickness. Cut out with a floured biscuit cutter. Place on slightly greased pan or baking sheet and bake in hot oven at 450° F. 12 to 15 minutes.

"For Light, Flaky
Biscuits
use Magic Baking Powder," says Miss M. McFarlane, dietitian of St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto

"I RECOMMEND Magic because I know it is pure, and free from harmful ingredients."

Miss McFarlane's opinion is based on a thorough knowledge of food chemistry, and on close study of food effects upon the body. On practical cooking experience, too.

Most dietitians in public institutions, like Miss McFarlane, use Magic exclusively. Because it is always uniform, dependable, and gives consistently better baking results.

You'll find Magic makes all your baked foods unusually light and tender . . . and gives you the same perfect results every time.

Chinese Sunset

(From the North American Review)

The hills are monkeys crouching
In hostile camps each side the valley;
Their wrinkled blue-black skins
Shine through their gray, mist-matted hair.

Upon the bending boughs of day
The sun't ripe, lush persimmon hangs

Sharp, eager teeth are in the sun's bright skin;
Rich juice runs out along the slavering jaws,
The last faint tinge is licked way.

The eastern horde is silent,
Saving, shrewd;
They hold their sugared-ginger moon
In calm, black, epicurean hands.

The western gluttons hide their tense, round-bellied time,
Knowing the gods are with them—
They will have silver-sugared ginger in the cool night hours,
Leaving that other raw-boned, dreaming camp
Only the cloudy unstrained wine of dawn.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's, and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states Orme is Sheila's real husband. David Orme takes the witness stand.

"Your honor," the district attorney blurted, "I fail to see what bearing the witness's musical abilities with sandpaper or otherwise, have on the issue being tried before the court. Surely the present testimony is irrelevant and immaterial to say the least of it!"

The hurt indignation in the prosecutor's voice failed to win any response from the angular, unmoved face of the judge.

"This man has taken the stand in his own defence, charged with the most serious offense in the criminal code." He might have been waving aside the importunities of a troublesome child, "I am inclined to give the witness considerable latitude. You may proceed, Mr. Orme."

Orme had awaited the end of the interruption with apparent indifference.

"I was studying with Ysaye in Belgium, and was to make my formal debut the following year, when a bicycle accident resulted in the amputation of two of my fingers."

He glanced down curiously at his hand, as if, even yet, the tragic finality of that accident were hard for him to grasp.

"Naturally, that ended my career. But as I had lived nothing but music all my life, it did not occur to me that any other occupation was open to me. Friends interested themselves in my behalf and secured me the post of sandpaper artist in a jazz band." Again the exquisitely carved lips writhed in that sardonic smile.

"I am trying to be brief, but these things have really a great deal to do with what happened afterwards."

Orme glanced upward with a look of apologetic inquiry at the judge.

In some subtle fashion the angles of the judge's face had lost some of their sharpness.

"Take your time, Mr. Orme. The court is willing to hear whatever you have to say."

"Good boy!" whispered the Q twin to his mate—and received a warning glare from the bailiff.

"When I saw Miss O'Shay on the stage," Orme went on, twisting his hands together in his lap, "I thought she was the most glorious person I had ever seen. She was like a movement from Tartini's 'devil's trill' sonata. She restored music to me—the music I could no longer bear to hear.

"I had not the faintest notion of seeking her acquaintance—there really would have been no way for me to do so if I had wanted to, and the idea did not enter my head. But—for some reason she noticed me, sitting there below her night after night in the orchestra pit. She learned my name, sent me a note, and asked me to call one night after the performance. She was like that. She could always take what she wanted, hold it—and throw it away.

"I know this will sound almost incredible, but she really did love me, poor and unknown as I was, a failure with no possible prospect of success."

There was a mute apology in Orme's smile, and yet no one in the court room found it hard to believe that the facilely emotional, impulsive Sheila O'Shay had been stirred by the man with the face of a Greek statue whose worshipping eyes followed her every movement from the orchestra pit.

"She did love me then!" Orme's voice rang out, suddenly loud, in passionate affirmation. "It was as if somebody had stepped down out of heaven and lifted me up."

There was a long pause; then he went on with forced calmness. "We were married. And then, of course, she got over it—in what seemed a very little while. She—there were other men. I—found it very hard. You see, I—"

The face of the man in the witness chair became so ghastly white that the bailiff hastily handed him a glass of water. He looked down at it, as if he hardly knew what it was. Then he gulped the entire contents of the glass, handed it back with a murmured, "Thank you, I'm all right now," and continued:

"She told me that I had no right to dictate her conduct—that she earned more in a week than I did in a year—that she had—bought me, like any other bauble that caught her fancy, and that, the fancy having spent itself, she was through with me. And yet, I struggled on. I could not believe it would end like that. I couldn't see love as an easy thing, easily relinquished. It wasn't like that with me, you see."

There was another long pause. The judge stared out of the window. Graham prodded a sheet of paper before him with the point of a pencil. The district attorney referred to some documents in a cardboard file at his elbow. The faint swish of pencils, racing across copy paper, catching up, was audible from the press rows.

The jury regarded Orme with strained attention. He seemed to be calling upon some inner reserve of strength, gathering together his resources. At last he moved slightly, sitting up very straight in the witness chair.

"One night," he said in a low, penetrating voice, "she told me that she did not believe I had ever been a real musician. She said I had never been good for anything but to rub sheets of sandpaper together. She cast slurs on my music—on music! I lifted my fist,"—Orme glanced down at his clenched hand as if it belonged to someone else—"and struck her down. Then I left."

Suddenly he slumped back in the chair, his head falling forward on his lifted hand.

"We will take a recess for ten minutes. The jury will bear in mind the admonition of the court not to discuss this case with others or among themselves—"

CHAPTER XLIV.

When Orme resumed his place on the witness stand, a splotch of color on each cheek had replaced his deadly pallor. If he was aware of an approaching crisis, this was his only tribute to it.

"On the fifteenth of March of this year I discovered that my wife had entered into a bigamous marriage with Mr. Ellsworth."

His tone was studiously detached, as if the statement referred to nothing more disturbing than a mortgage or a bill of sale. "I wrote her a letter—a hurt and angry letter. I will admit that I even had the strange idea that if I could talk with her, she would come back to me. On the evening of March eighteenth I did see her."

"We walked along the street, talking. It was soon made absolutely clear to me that whatever feeling for me Sheila had once had was as lost, as forgotten, as one of her last year's costumes.

"I don't know just why, but the idea of this bigamous marriage was more revolting to me than anything that had gone before—a queer kind of pride, of self-respect, perhaps. It seemed utterly humiliating to throw our marriage into the garbage can, as if it were of no significance whatever. I offered to allow her a divorce, but she did not want Mr. Ellsworth to know that legally she was still married to me. I don't recall clearly what we said.

"It is all rather confused in my mind. I remember that we stood on a street corner. And then I left her and went out to the auto camp where I had been staying. That is all."

"You may examine your witness, Mr. Graham."

The expression on Graham's naturally sunny countenance was almost comically disconsolate. He looked as acutely uncomfortable as a dog who finds a tin can tied to his tail and sits tight with the realization that the slightest movement will let loose a hideous cancatenation of sound.

His reproachful gaze flickered for a moment across the inscrutable face of the judge. Very evidently the defence attorney considered that a punishment was being inflicted upon him which he didn't deserve; but he wisely decided to let bad enough alone. He forced his voice to a tone of jaunty indifference.

"No questions," he said.

"You may cross-examine."

The district attorney softened his habitual roar to a dulcet reasonableness.

"There are a few points in your recital, Mr. Orme, which the people would like to have further elucidated. I will ask you to look at this letter, entered in evidence as people's exhibit A."

"The defence stipulates that the letter in question was written by Mr. Orme," Graham said wearily.

"Well, then, I will ask you, Mr. Orme, is the wording of this letter that of a man actuated by affection for the recipient?"

"I'll say it wasn't," the A twin commented in a sibilant whisper.

"No talking in the courtroom, please!" barked the disciplinary bailiff.

"I told you I was angry when I wrote it. And 'affection' is hardly the term I should use for my feelings towards Sheila O'Shay. I loved her—terribly." Orme spoke with tremulous intensity.

"Quite so. And this lady whom you 'loved terribly'," the district attorney sneered, "you first knocked down, then abandoned, and then disregarded so completely that you did not learn of her subsequent marriage until almost a year after it had taken place." Although he merely leaned forward across the table, the district attorney seemed fairly to spring upon the man before him. "And what, may I ask, were you doing in the meantime?"

"I don't know," Orme said dully. "I seem to have been just wandering around."

The Feast of Silence

How the glory of your going is sweet again and new
When the August moon is at your feet and twelve stars fell the glow
Of the light that drenched our darkness and wove the only blue
For the mantle of Assumption from the air where lilies blow.

How the armor of October flashes challenge to the sky
On the smoldering bridge of summer when the harvest wars are won.
Till the life-blood of the wounded

For the staining of your roses at

But all the yearning world is still when Love lifts up your name—

Lo, in snow-fall of December flowers
the mystery of the flame
That is burning in His silence, the silence of your choice.

Centuries Old Relics Found Cached in New Mexico Cave

Boulder, Col.—Relics of early occupation of Arizona caves have been found by Earl H. Morris of the Carnegie Institute and are now being catalogued by the Laboratory of Anthropology in Santa Fe, N.M.

Mr. Morris found six lon-braided sashes of animal hair—two white, two black and two brown. The white hair has been identified as dog hair. The sashes and two wooden flutes decorated with feathers were so well cached in Broken Flute Cave, fifty miles south of Shiprock, N.M., that they are in good condition.

Necklaces hung with wildcat and mountain lion claws and quartz beads were also found. Mr. Morris says the caves reveal the material culture of Basket-Weaver III. period in full detail.

Gardening in Far-Away India

In northern India for four or five months—October to March—the climate is dry and cold, with a crisp, delicious tang in it, and this combination, with the never-failing warm sunshine, provides that contrast which makes days spent outdoors such a special delight. For months together there is no hint of storm, no possibility of unpleasant extremes of heat or cold, and during all this time you can work, or play, or laze, in the garden, enjoying every moment of the day.

Perhaps the very best way to know and love your garden is to sleep in it, not just for a night or two now and then, but as the habit of months. Those who have never done this would hardly believe what transformations happen in a garden in the hours of night and early morning, how it is altered and affected by the subtle changes of darkness, moonlight, starlight and dawn.

At night trees and flowers seem to take on a different appearance and meaning. In the darkness, color gives place to shape, and you realize the varied beauty of broad stiff leaves and of delicate feathery ones, of branches that are slender and sweeping, and others that are thick and upright. Some leaves reflect the silver of the moon and shine like water in its light, while others absorb it and become even darker by contrast. And when there comes the little ruffling wind of early dawn, each tree seems to welcome it in a different way. Some shiver and rustle like a silken shirt. In India the pipul tree especially makes this lovely sound. But others sway and bend soundlessly to the little wind's caress.

The most mysterious time of all, in a garden, is between moonset and dawn, when the silver light gradually ebbs away as the moon sinks behind the trees, and in its place is a strange semi-darkness. A deep stillnes lies over everything, the prelude to that lovely bird chorus which begins with the coming of light.

There was one tree in my garden which revealed to me how colors seem actually to change at dawn. It was a beautiful Gold Mohur tree, whose smooth trunk divided into branches which arched upward, entwined like human arms, then swept down again within a foot of the ground, so that in spring, before its leaves came, when it was covered with huge clusters of red blossom, it looked like a flaming scarlet umbrella. In the bright glare of an Indian summer day, its trunk was a pale hard gray, and the blazing brilliance of its flowers seemed a part of that burning heat which beats down from the sky and up again from the ground. But as it emerged, a blurred shadow of color, from the semi-darkness, its trunk was softened to a dark elephant gray, and the great flower clusters, as the dawnlight touched them, were a soft yet glowing rose color, so that in those few moments before the intense sunshine brought back their hard brilliance, they had all the fresh dewy beauty of the rain-washed flowers of temperate countries.

Winnipeg, Man—Fifty-seven years ago, in 1874, to be exact, Mr. Samuel B. Blackhall, of Winnipeg, deposited $2 with the Dominion postal savings bank branch in Winnipeg.

Evidently, he forgot all about it until just recently, when he decided to ask the Government for his money. The account was still on record, and it was a pleasant surprise for Mr. Blackhall to find that his original $2 with compound interest at 3 per cent., had grown to $10.53, which he received.

"SICK HEADACHE?"

IT is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Aspirin and heads it off.

Keep Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. In every package of Aspirin tablets are proven directions which cover colds, headaches, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, and even rheumatism.

Wild Fugitives

Archibald Rutledge in The Virginia Quarterly (October, '31).
(Author of "Plantation Game Trails," "Children of Swamp and Wood").

A general misconception concerning wild animals—and one that causes a good deal of real suffering to tender-hearted people—is that wild things exist in a state of terror, both because of their natural enemies and because of man. But to one who has roamed the woods most of his life, nature is no madhouse of terrors, and her children are characterized by serenity and joy.

Wild creatures, as far as we can fairly judge, have no imagination. They live from moment to moment, occupied with but one idea at a time. They are untroubled by either the past or the future. Our own acute spiritual awareness and our clairvoyant, volatile imagination serve to make life for us both terrible and beautiful.

Of the mythical terrors that we imagine for wild creatures, perhaps none is greater than that supposedly inspired in the fox and the deer by the pursuit of hounds. As far as I have been able quietly to observe, over a long period of years, neither the fox nor the deer is much concerned over the chase; and at times the fugitive appears to derive a positive degree of pleasure from it, discovering in it the elements of an exciting game.

A pet buck of mine that I had raised with a bottle was on terms of friendly intimacy with my hounds; and in the autumn, when he had his new antlers and when his physical well-being was at its height, he used actually to provoke the dogs to give him a race. It was a strange yet accountable sight to see the proud stag, mincing arrogantly, lowering his head and bulging his neck, approach the hounds drowsing in the sun by the old barn. He would paw mischievously at them, snort in their faces, feign to menace them with his gleaming horns. After this mock threatening had gone on as far as the hounds could stand it, they would "take notice," rousing themselves, at which the buck would bound away in artificial panic. Stimulated by what appeared to be the deer's real fright, the dogs would take up the chase, sending the lithely joyous fugitive flying down the avenue, over fences, through thin strips of woods, back along the river, and thence to the avenue again, and so up to the house. As the buck would near home, he would miraculously transform himself from a wild deer into our tame one, would break off the race, and would not even deign to look back at the hounds which, with tails waving and long ears flying, were clamoring on his trail. As soon as the dogs had come to where the deer had stoped, they stopped too. The fun was over, and everybody was happy. Each had had his "daily dozen."

During my lifetime I have been privileged to see certainly more than a thousand wild deer pursued by hounds, and I have yet to see a deer in distress because of this pursuit. So superb is the deer's natural vitality, so keen are its senses, so familiar is it with the forests where it ranges, and so adequate is its speed that it can take excellent care of itself. Nor are we to forget that such a fugitive may take whatever course it chooses, whereas its pursuers have to unravel its many trail.

Deer play in front of dogs; they dodge; they skulk; they exercise an almost incredible precience to do what is least expected. If ever hard pressed, they take to water, and wherever the deer is found, it is commonly found in such numbers that fresh trails are constantly crossing one another. As a result, dogs pursuing one deer will usually rouse others, so that the whole affair, instead of being the stern pursuit of one unhappy fugitive, is far more likely to be a sort of relay race, or merry-go-round.

What is true of the deer's elusiveness, and failure to take very seriously the pursuit of the clamoring pack, is true likewise of the fox, between which and the dog there exists an ancient and honorable enmity. Many a time I have been afforded an opportunity to observe the behavior of a fox at some distance ahead of the dogs; and usually the pursued appears to take a wily and sardonic delight in outwitting the pursuers. It must be remembered that most of these chases in the wilds are tests of mental rather than of physical supremacy. It is commonly the superior strategist who wins.

One November day I was in the woods alone, when the far-off music of a pack of hounds in full cry was borne to me. There were fox-hunters on the place adjoining mine, and evidently they had their quarry started. Because foxes, like deer, have their regular runs, and because in those woods their runs are known to me, I was able, since the race was coming in my direction, to take a position enabling me to see the fugitive.

Hardly had I settled myself before the fox came within sight, stealing along in his inimitable wary fashion. He was trotting rather idly, his fluffy brush straight out behind him; at intervals he would pause to look ahead, to listen, and to look back. There is no more characteristic pose assumed by a fox on the move than the one he commonly takes when he comes to a log in his path. Putting his forefeet on it in order to secure strategic elevation, he will survey the whole stage of the forest. I saw my fox take this stance; and for about two minutes he did not move. Wild creatures pursued by hounds have come to learn that the real danger is often ahead rather than behind. After satisfying himself that the coast was clear, the fox, instead of crossing the log and following the path, turned down the prostrate tree, ran its length, and then, through dense bay-bushes, returned to the path.

But a better manoeuver was to come. A storm had uprooted a huge yellow pine; the dead top lay fringing the path; the roots had torn up with them a great half-moon of earth. Where the pine top touched the path, there was a wide slash of water. The fox avoided the water, yet did not pass it, but, at its widest part, leaped across it straight into the shadowy shelter of the old pine-top, from where he ran down the log, climbed the strange mound of earth, and there lay down, some ten feet off the ground.

In due time came the hounds, puzzling out the trail. At the water they became completely bewildered, and for some moments they cast about vainly for the lost scent. One dog went almost under the fox, which never moved. At last the oldest hound gave notice that the fugitive had run the log. Instantly the fox leaped lithely down the farther side of the embankment on which he had been craftily reposing, and I saw him bobbing away serenely through the woods. He must have been a good half-mile away before his pursuers straightened on his tracks; and by that time he was probably making a new puzzle for them. For in such cases the fugitive is generally the real master of the situation; and insofar as I have observed him, his attitude betrays less fear than a certain amused curiosity, and a certain assurance in his own superiority, which subtly reflects contempt upon the following pack.

Considering predatory creatures and their prey, we have to admit that a stalking or a chase often ends in death. But in practically all such cases, the victim suffers merely the initial shock, which is, so far as we can fairly judge, attended by little pain. Death in the wilds seems to me merely the operation of one of nature's indispensable, and, upon the whole, beneficent laws.

"What's this, daughter. You let Mr. Brown, whom you barely know, kiss you."

"Now, father, let's get this thing right. I didn't let him kiss me, I merely let him try."

Sunday School Lesson

January 24. Lesson IV.—Jesus and the Samaritan Woman—John 4: 9-26. Golden Text—Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.—1 Timothy 1: 15.

ANALYSIS

I. LIVING WATER, 4: 7-16.
II. FACING THE FACTS, 4: 17-19.
III. ... SPIRITUAL RELIGION, 4: 20-26.
IV. CHRIST'S FOOD, 4: 27-42.

INTRODUCTION—In order to avoid even the appearance of rivaling the work of the Baptist, Jesus and his disciples withdrew to Galilee. They took the shorter, Samaria route. It was noon (the sixth hour, Roman reckoning, v. 6) when the party came to Jacob's Well. There it was that Jesus met the Samaritan woman.

I. LIVING WATER, 4: 7-16.

This encounter was all the more remarkable because Jew and Samaritan so bitterly hated each other. The broiling heat of noon may be part of the author's symbolism to make more vivid the teaching that is to follow about the refreshing water of life.

Recognizing him by his dress to be a Jew, the woman was surprised to be accosted by the stranger. An ordinary Jew would not speak to a woman, much less a Samaritan—and such she evidently was. Jesus began by asking her for a drink. To establish the essential friendly contact with those whom you would win, have them do you a favor. His appeal to human kindness, going beneath all racial and religious differences, was successful. While the stranger was quenching his thirst, the woman with familiar impudence twitted him, "How is it that you, a Jew, should ask drink of me, a woman, and a Samaritan at that?" v. 9. Ignoring her banter, he told her of "living water"—that is, running spring water as contrasted with the stagnant water of a cistern. See Gen. 26: 19. In our lesson "living water" symbolizes the spiritual life that never becomes exhausted. He said to her, in effect, "You are trying to satisfy yourself at the stagnant pools of life's sin and folly. You are failing in your quest. Life has grown stale for you disappointing. The gift that I offer you will meet your soul's deepest need, bring out the best that is in you. One satisfaction after another, comes to those who live my kind of life."

She missed his deeper meaning. She answered him half in jest, half in earnest, v. 15. She wanted her life made more comfortable. Religion for too many of us is just being comfortable in this life and safe in that which is to come.

II. FACING THE FACTS, 4: 17-19.

Finding her inclined to be flippant, Jesus sobered her by suddenly confronting her with the seamy side of her own life. "Call your husband." As Professor Dow says, "Before Jesus can do anything for us, he insists on frankness. The whole facts of our moral life must be faced before the evil can be cured." Under the penetrating gaze of this uncanny stranger the woman felt as if all of her past life stood exposed before him. See her exaggeration in v. 39. The reply of Jesus in vs. 17, 18 was probably only "Thou hast well said." In reporting the conversation to her friends she particularized the sins which he had brought home to her conscience. She was unable to hide her real character. So are we. "What you are speaks so loudly, I do not hear what you say." We cannot fool God, nor, usually, our neighbors.

Those who regard the woman in this story as merely the type of the Samaritan people, see in her five husbands the gods of the five nations settled in Samaria by the Assyrians (2 Kings 17: 24-34), the sixth being the God of Israel whom they "do not know" (v. 22), that is, do not worship according to the pure rites.

III. A SPIRITUAL RELIGION, 4: 20-26.

The sudden turn of the conversation to deal with true worship would seem to support the view that the story is allegory. The woman, changing the subject, began a theological discussion. She was the victim of an unspiritual religion—churchy, but not godly. She thought of God as in a place—the temple on Mount Gerizim, v. 20. We say of a church, "This is God's house." But everywhere is God's house. He is to be reverenced in the person of everyone we meet. If we fail to honor him there, our reverence for special places is mockery.

The woman worshipped a God who was a Samaritan. Do we worship a God who is a Britisher? We did, during the war. The Germans worshipped a God who was a German. Is our God a United Churchman, or does he belong to the Anglo-Saxon race? A good lady was shocked at the suggestion that perhaps Jesus of Nazareth had a swarthy skin. Imagine a Jesus who did not look like "us"!

Denationalize God, recognize him as the Father Spirit who "inspires" the best we know in human character, worship him honestly, reverence him in the personalities around us, dedicate the best we have to the highest we know—that is the true worship.

IV. CHRIST'S FOOD, 4: 27-42.

At this point we have a good illustration of John's characteristic lack of interest in a story for its own sake, once it has illustrated the truth he wishes to tell. The woman disappears.

To the surprise of the returned disciples, Jesus did not wish for any food, v. 32. He had derived so much spiritual satisfaction from doing his Father's will and helping some one that he forgot all about physical hunger, v. 34. In the multitude whom the woman was bringing to him from the village (v. 30) he saw the speedy harvest from the good seed he had sown, v. 36.

The Samaritans were not satisfied with hearsay. They came to Jesus themselves and found him to be their Saviour. So must we all pass from an unquestioning credulity to a first-hand, thoughtful faith.

"The Guardian" Lives On

Montreal Daily Star: British journalism has lost one of its most distinguished figures and the newspaper world one of its greatest forces for good through the death of C. P. Scott, managing director of the Manchester Guardian. He was its editor for fifty-seven years, and he had brought it into the very forefront of the world's really great newspapers. A man of unimpeachable integrity, brilliant intellect and keen discernment, he held before him a staff of distinguished writers who were eminently well qualified to give those ideals vivid and convincing expression.

Mr. Scott wielded an influence perhaps unparalleled by any other English editor since the days of Delane, and he enjoyed a reputation within the ranks of his own calling excelled by none. He made the Manchester Guardian notable not only for its sturdy spirit of independence, but also for its high literary quality, and he leaves it one of the outstanding newspapers in the Empire. His editorship was an inspiration to all with whom he was associated, and he did honour to the profession his great gifts adorned.

A Religious Salesman

A certain minister was trying to raise money for a religious purpose. Raising money seemed to be out of his line, and he went for advice to Dwight L. Moody. Moody decided to see what could be done and suggested to the parson that they call on some of his prospects. Very logically they set out first to call on a rich widow. On the way Moody asked his friend how much he intended to ask her to give. "Oh, perhaps $250." Moody made no comment, but when they reached the house he pushed forward and said to the lady,

"Madam, we have come to ask you for $2000 to help build the new Mission."

She threw up her hands in horror. "Oh, Mr. Moody, I cannot possibly give you more than one thousand!"

That was the way he did it.—Gamaliel Bradford, in D. L. Moody.

"It is customary to seal a proposal with a kiss is it not?"

"It used to be, but nowadays it is considered best to have a witness"

London Scientists Believe Substance Pure Vitamin D

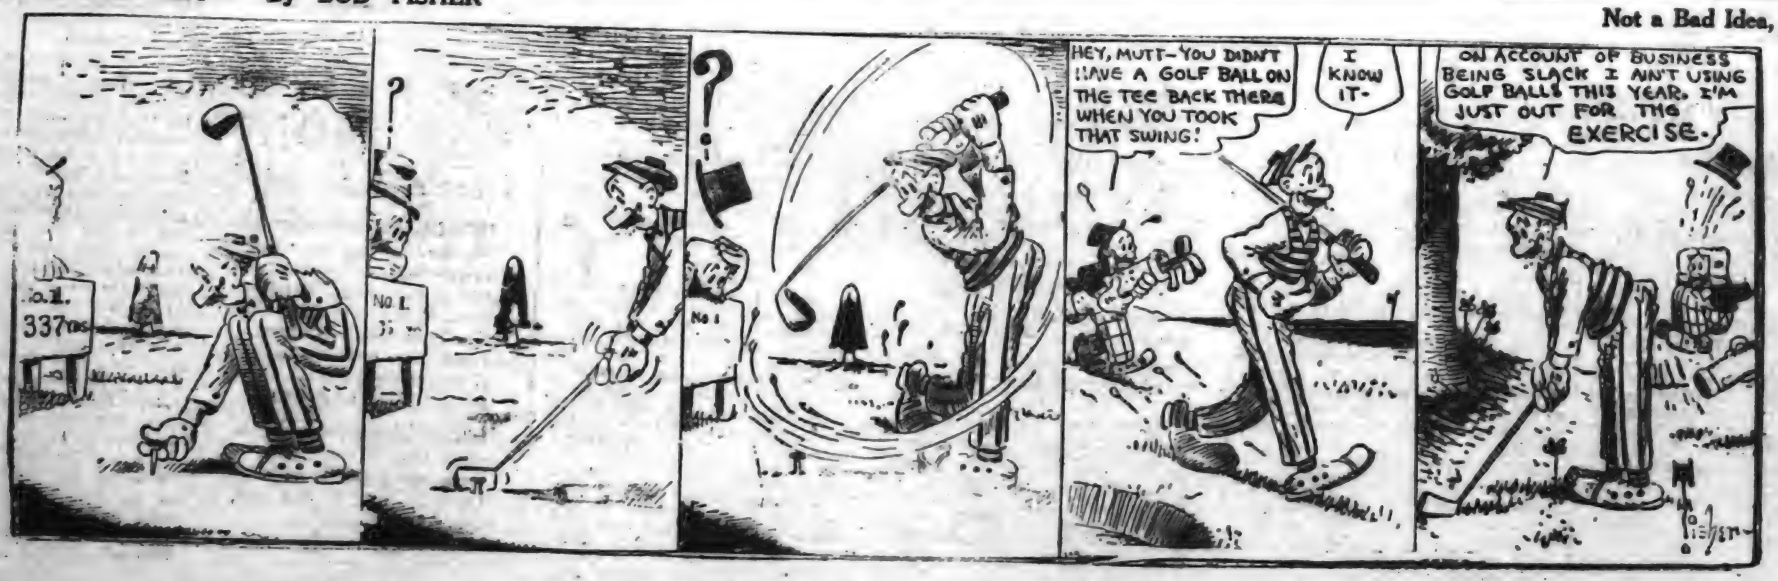
London—Dr. Robert Bourdillon has just announced that after months of experimenting at the National Institute for Medical Research, he and a group of five London scientists had isolated a substance they believed to be pure vitamin D.

"We have isolated a pure white crystalline substance which we have named calciferol and which we have every reason to believe is pure vitamin D," he said. "It is certainly vitamin D in a purer state than has ever existed before."

Recalling the fact that vitamin D has long been known as a cure for rickets, Dr. Bourdillon said the importance of the discovery apart from its scientific merit was that the vitamin could now be administered in correct doses.

He added that their success came almost simultaneously with that of Professor Windaus and other German scientists who produced the same substance recently while working on the same lines.

The Integrity of Canadian Banks



Le Soleil, Quebec (Lib.): Since the beginning of the crisis there has been no banking disaster in Canada. Our great financial institution have resisted the depression with such strength that they deserve our admiration and our confidence. Other countries have not been as fortunate as we have. Bank failures have been exceedingly numerous in the United States. In the last ten years at least 6,987 banks in the States have gone under with $2,586,000,000 of deposits In the last two years more than three thousand banks disappeared. Here in Canada we have been fortunate in saving all our institutions, and we believe that all serious danger is now passed. We have turned the corner of the crisis.

A FRESH START

We have all heard about the storm-driven ship whose crew was half frantic for water. At last another ship came near, and they cried, "Water! water! we are perishing with thirst." "Dip down into the ocean," was the answer; for they were off the Amazon, which hurls its mighty flood of fresh water far out into the briny Atlantic. In the same way there are many who are longing for a fresh start, a new chance, who have the opportunity every day of their lives if they will only reach out and take it. "Every day is a fresh beginning."

The Oxford and Cambridge teams of skiers from the Old Country picked Canada and the Laurentians this year as the scene of their exploits, in place of Switzerland during the Christmas-New Year vacation, as part of the all-British programme of spending within the Empire. Signs of Spring

We hear a lot these days about the signs of an early spring, even the daily papers are printing many items on the subject. It's true we are having a very mild winter, and we hope we will have an early spring—but no man knows what a day may bring forth. We have never seen a winter yet without some snow, and it might be a good thing if we had a big snow storm, for there are many men who need work. After all is said, a mild winter may mean a late cold spring. We have to go through February yet and we will likely get our bones chilled about Valentine Day. Look out for lots of snow the first week in March. Here are a few cases of unusual happenings for January—

Mr. Omar Turney and his brother Winfred saw a canary in an apple tree on Jan. 20.

Mr. Geo. Duller picked a mushroom measuring nine inches across on Jan. 19.

Mr. John McGowan of the 7th Line, Trafalgar Tp., was plowing on his farm Tuesday, Jan. 19th.

A lady in the south end of the village has pansies blooming in her garden.

Chief Constable Rutledge reports that he has some ducks laying eggs. This is unusual, in fact, we never heard of ducks laying in January before—have you?

Mr. Jack Kee, was plowing on his farm on the Centre Road, one mile north of Cooksville, yesterday

W. Courtney, Cooksville, has been appointed Treasurer of Toronto Township to succeed G. B. Jackson Esq, resigned.

Cooksville is one of the many places which needs no relief from the Township funds, and while it is very heavily assessed has the smallest amount of Tax arrears.

Here and There

In 1930 the Canadian Pacific Railway paid out in taxes in Canada $7,447,605 and for the year 1931 its taxes will run to over $7,500,000: This brings the company's total tax payments in Canada from its incorporation to date to more than $121,000,000.

Jim Londos, world heavyweight wrestling champion, on a recent trip into the New Brunswick woods, bagged a black bear, weighing 800 lbs. The animal, wounded by two shots, charged Londos who dropped his rifle and resorted to a knife with which he killed the bear.

Nova Scotia is coming into its own as a holiday province. In 1931 more than a quarter of a million tourists visited the province, the largest number of summer visitors in its history, according to records by Hon. P. C. Black, provincial Minister of Highways.

To have joined the Canadian Pacific Railway at the time of its organization in 1881 and in the last seven years to have examined more men for promotion to engineer rank, than any other employee of the company, is the outstanding record of Albion Maynes, of Toronto, who has just retired from the position of Rule Examiner for the Motive Power department at Montreal.

The Brockville Recorder in a recent editorial urges all Canadians who are figuring on holidaying outside the Dominion this winter to consider the advantages of British Columbia where the Canadian dollar stands at par and where the climate is the equal of any to be found in the United States. Great Britain, the editorial adds, has set the example for Britishers which Canadians should be patriotic enough to follow.

The high reputation of Canada for the pacific settlement of disputes with foreign powers is an example that exerts considerable influence in the councils of the League of Nations and indicates that the Dominion should play an important part in the coming disarmament conference at London, says Colonel David Carnegie, C. B. E., noted lecturer on the promotion of peace, who recently sailed for Great Britain aboard the Duchess of Richmond.

Beginning their first Canadian tour, the ski teams of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, arriving at Halifax by Canadian Pacific steamship Montcalm, went on via Montreal to Lucerne-in-Quebec and from thence went to Ste. The teams were welcomed at the Windsor station, Montreal by Lord Duncannon, son of the Governor-General, himself an under-graduate of Cambridge University.

Young People's Enjoyable Evening at The United Church

Over 100 on Monday enjoyed an exceptionally fine evening at the Young People's Association. The increased attendance and interest speak well for the meetings, so capably arranged by the Programme Committee. Mr. Omar Turney conducted the Devotional Period which was in keeping with the programme of a national character. At the conclusion of the business, Marion Lindsay gave some interesting information on recent current events which is a pleasing feature of each meeting under the management of Mrs. McArthur. The programme arranged and conducted by Graydon Clipperton, consisted of historical sketches of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Canada, followed by national airs, readings and instrumental selections to add to an excellent programme. Mrs. O. Turney, convener of "The Surprise," featured each evening brought on a contest amusingly enjoyed by all.

Monday, Feb. 1st, will be the night for the next meeting. Some timely questions will be answered. What does youth expect of the church? and What does the church expect of youth? Wilbert West, member elect of the Ontario Boys' Parliament for Peel will be present and give an address on the work of the Boys' Parliament. The association has planned a Valentine social evening for February 15th.

WHAT WILL THE NEW YEAR BRING?

NEW YEAR! New year!
Little spirit of the new year!
At my portal waiting near, so near
My trembling heart says if I speak
That you will hear, will hear.

New year, new year, what will you bring to me?
Joy on rainbow pinions wing to me.
Love, with voices sweet, to sing to me.
New year, new year, I beseech you,
Let my tender longing reach you!

New year, I fear not your morrowday
Sweetest joys may still strew sorrow's way.
In December I shall borrow May.
New year, smiling I shall meet you!
New year, welcoming I greet you!

New year, new year, you and God alone
Hear my heart thus speak in humble tone.
Grant me deeper life for living,
Give me greater love for giving.
—Mary Gow Walsworth.

A GREETING TO NEW YEAR.

We Can Live It but Once, So Let Us Spend It Worthily.

We are on the threshold of a new year. We do not know what the year holds for us, but we are not afraid of it. We have learned to look for kindness and goodness in all our paths, and so we go forward with glad hope and expectation.

It is always a serious thing to live. We can pass through any year but once. If we have lived negligently we cannot return to amend what we have slurred over. We cannot correct mistakes, fill up blank spaces, erase lines we may be ashamed of, cut out pages unworthily filled. The irrevocableness of life ought alone to be motive enough for incessant watchfulness and diligence. Not a word we write can be changed. Nothing we do can be canceled.

Another element of seriousness in living is the influence of our life on other lives. We do not pass through the year alone. We are tied up with others in our homes, our friendships, our companionships, our associations, our occupations. We are always touching others and leaving impressions on them. Human lives are like the photographer's sensitized plates, receiving upon them the image of whatever passes before them. Our careless words drop, and we think not where they fall, but the lightest of them lodges in some heart and leaves its blessing or its blight. All our acts, dispositions and moods do something in the shaping and coloring of other lives.

It is said that every word whispered into the air starts vibrations which will quiver on and on forever. The same is true also of influences which go out from our lives in the commonest days—they will go on forever. This should make us most careful what we do, what we say and what quality of life we give to the world. It would be sad, indeed, if we should set going unholy or hurtful influences, if we should touch even one life unwholesomely, if we should speak even a word which starts a soul toward death.—Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller.

"Dipping" on New Year's.

In the midland counties of England the "Sortes Sanctorum" obtained great credit on New Year's in the olden time. A Bible is obtained at random and the finger of a blindfolded person placed upon the page. The text so pointed out refers to events which will happen during the year. This is called "dipping." An old lady once "dipped" into the book of Job and avowed she had trouble to the 31st of December following. If the "dipping" is not done before 12 o'clock noon the charm will have no efficacy.

Two New Year's Days.

Lord Dundas, being wished a happy new year, replied, "It had need be happier than the last, for I never knew one happy day in it." Wilberforce said, "The last year has been the happiest of my life." Romaine's New Year's wish for his people was, "God grant that this may be a year famous for big Buying."

Musical Night at St. Andrew's Ch.

Nights will come and pass away
Some nights we are sad, some times we are gay,
And time is fleeting, Oh! so fast,
But pleasant memories always last,
And when we throw wide memory's gate,
On pleasures past, we want the date,
For that treat (Arthur) we thank you,
You gave Jan. 22nd Nineteen Thirty-two.

It was a winter month, but it was a summer night. Every available space in the Sunday School room of the old St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church was brought into service. A musical treat was promised, and a musical treat was given. Miss Cora Woodruff, President of the Young Peoples Society presided. The meeting was opened with the greatest of all musical numbers, the good old Psalm sung to the same old tune that was sung in the Presbyterian church for hundreds of years in the past and so often now, "I to the hills will lift my longing eyes." Then Rev. Mr. McCree led in prayer.

The chairlady then explained the way the Y.P.S. arranged their meetings. They held a meeting every two weeks during the winter months. Two members would be appointed to take charge of a night devoted to literature, two to arrange for a missionary night, etc.

Then she said this is our musical night and everything is left in Arthur Adamson's charge, and she could promise everyone a real treat. Then she told a story of a man going along the road with a team of horses. One horse was tearing ahead and the other was lagging behind, when some one asked what kind of a team that was he was driving, he said, "They are an agreeable matched team, one was willing to do the work and the other was willing to let it." So that seemed to be the way the society did with Arthur, he was always willing to do so much and they were willing to let him.

Then the chairlady said, before we hold another of our regular meetings Mr. and Mrs. McCree will be serving their Master in another part of his vineyard. And on behalf of their society she wanted to thank them both for the untiring, helpful kindness shown to them throughout the six years they worked so harmonious together. They were never weary in well doing. And no malice or guile was ever heard from their mouth. Mr. McCree then thanked them for the kindness they had always shown to them, saying all their work with them was such a pleasure, it never seemed like it was a duty and pleasant memories around them would always twine when they would think about the pleasant six years they spent with the Streetsville congregation.

The scene was changed. The musical part was started by the Johnston orchestra—four sisters and a brother. And it must have delighted the hearts of the youthful artists the way every selection was appreciated, which was shown by the hearty applause they received. Billy Ramage (imitating Harry Lauder), who on several previous occasions added to an evening's entertainment in Streetsville, was in splendid form. Jimmy Ramage and Dan Cockran gave a number of selections on mouth organs; Jimmy Ramage a number of selection on different instruments. Mr. Robinson gave several selections on the orchestra bells. The music was beautiful, accompanied by Miss Hollingshead on the piano. Mr. Geo. Vaux took us on a travelogue through the Western States, explaining the different scenes as the lantern slides passed through the Mormons' country, beautiful buildings, roads and bridges, immense gardens of beautiful roses and many other scenes of beauty.

The meeting was closed when the audience rose and sang "God Save the King," when a life-sized picture of the King and the flag appeared on the canvas.

Sometimes after an entertainment we find ourselves wondering was it all worth while so often it is a weariness to the flesh. What a difference there was that night. No one seemed to want to take the trip we were treated to in our imagination, but were satisfied to be in Streetsville, when they saw the free-hearted hospitality that was shown to the artists who took part in the entertainment by the excellent refreshments served by the ladies of the congregation. This musicale and all the rest of the entertainment is well worth hanging in the chambers of our memory to look back to with pleasure in years to come.

DIAMOND WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rogers celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding on Jan. 25th. Mr. Rogers is 87 years old and his wife 82. Sam is an old Streetsville boy, born in Trafalgar Township, on the farm now owned by Mr. Henry Campbell. His father, Joseph Rogers, carried on farming operations there for a number of years until the family grew up and it was thought necessary to buy more land, so he bought the farm in Toronto Township, lot 33, 2nd con. N. D.S., 200 acres. This farm has gone into the third generation of the Rogers clan. Samuel, at the age of 28, became dissatisfied and struck out for Proton Township in the County of Grey, taking with him a horse and one pair of oxen. He carried on farming, also sawmill and custom grain chopping. The log house and the old barn were replaced with the very best of modern equipment. He was in the council for a number of years; was reeve of his township and warden of Grey County. When he had everything fixed just right, the fever to go west came on. He let his son, Tom, have charge of the farm and started out for the prairies, with Lloydminster as his destination. There was no train into that town, so he had to go 200 miles by wagon. He took up land there and brought in carloads of horses from Ontario; gathered cattle and farm implements and when the immigrants came along he was there with the things they needed. He carried on there until the end of the Great World War, sold out everything, built a house in Edmonton and is enjoying fairly good health.

Mrs. A. Nelson of Toronto, sister of Mrs. James Irvine of Streetsville, was present at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers which took place in Goderich in 1872.

Annual Vestry Trinity Church

The annual vestry meeting of the congregation took place on Monday with a representative attendance. The rector, Rev. R. J. W. Perry, was in the chair. Mr. A. Dennis was re-elected Vestry Clerk, which honorable position he has filled very efficiently for many years. After the reading and confirming of the minutes, the rector gave his eighth annual report which dealt with the present standing of the congregation and the developments during the past eight years, both in the rectory and on the grounds and in the church, cemetery and church grounds, consumating in the building of the Parish Hall, which makes our church surroundings most commodious, attractive and useful. He voiced his appreciation of the work of the different organizations with their officers, the work of the choir and the leader and organist, and especially of the very capable work of the Wardens, which wins the approbation of all the congregation. He voiced the appreciation of Mrs. Perry and himself because of the many tangible evidences and expressions of good-will of the congregation and their many friends to them.

The reports were all, as usual very satisfactory, with good balances in all departments.

The wardens report was read by Mr. Bailey, showing: receipts $2788.48; Women's Auxiliary to Missions $109.21, in addition to Dorcas work and a number of bales sent for Western needs; Sunday School $138.26; Willing Workers $357.76; choir $31.12; Tennis Club $71.70; Parish Hall $5058.52; Girls' Auxiliary $14.22. Total $8569.47. Donations to Missions $329.91.

The work done on the grounds and hall by the congregation and the donations of pictures, chairs, piano, hall organ, work on tables, stoves, counters, dishes, shelves, basement floor, floor of upper hall, cement work, shrubs, plants, and many other things is estimated at least $1000, making the value of the hall to the present about $6058.52. The total expenditure for the year is therefore approximately $10,000, with no indebtedness on any of the church property. A member of the congregation gave his Christmas cheque for nearly $30.00, which puts the cemetery on a firm basis.

The reports were received with a sense of deep thankfulness and appreciation.

The church organ was a major contribution, which wins the silent admiration of the church members.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of Messrs. J. E. Bailey and C. J. Crozier as the chief officers, the church wardens; Vestry clerk, Mr. Arthur Dennis; Delegates to the Diocesan Synod, Geo. S. Bonham, Thos. Lugg and Thos. Crozier; Envelope committee, Misses Edith Drennan and Mary Crozier and Messrs. Arthur Arch, T. Lugg and Albert Quennell.

Advisory Board, Wardens and Jack Drennan, G. S. Bonham, H. F. Staley, and Herman McClintock.

Sidesmen and ushers, E. Crozier, V. Steggall, W. Crozier, W. Lovatt, E. Steggall, T. Lugg, G. Crozier, F. Croxall B. Brighty, T. Sharp, A. Quennell, R. Dadd, F. Haddon.

Garden Party Committee, H. F. Staley, Mrs. Graydon, Mrs. Wright and H. McClintock.

The officers elected at the regular meetings of the different associations:
W.A.—President, Mrs. Graydon; Sec., Miss M. Peck; Treas., Mrs. W. T. Thompson.

W.W.—Pres., Miss M Peck; Sec., Mrs. Wright; Treas., Mrs. Hammond.
S.S.—Sec.-Treas., Frank Haddon; Teachers, the Rector. Miss Peck, Miss B. Quennell, Miss D. Graydon, Miss H. Haddon, Mrs. Saxon.

Miss Chester and Miss Drennan have charge of the Girls' Auxiliary, with Blanche Lugg, Sec., and Gladys Dadd, Treas.; Miss B. Quennell, Dorcas Supt.

Miss Peck and Miss Hoople have charge of Juniors; Mary Switzer, Sec., and Miriam Perry, Treas. Mrs. Moore, Sec. of the Little Helpers.

Hearty votes of thanks were given to all the officers of the different associations, the Wardens, the Rector, and Mrs. Perry, to the women and young men, who have so freely and heartily given their services in many different ways, as well as the more mature men, who have given so much of their time and thought, as well as gifts, in promoting the work of the church.

The meeting closed with the doxology and the blessing by the Rector.

The annual S.S. and Young People's entertainment takes place this Thursday night, in the Parish Hall, with a good program. All welcome. Admission 25c and 15c.

An Appreciation

When the news reached Streetsville that St. Andrews' congregation was about to lose their minister, Rev. W. T. McCree, M.A., there was sadness among the people whom he had associated with since coming to Streetsville almost seven years ago.

Again a city church is claiming St. Andrews' minister. Comparatively speaking the cities seem ruthless and cruel—used to getting what they want and apt to want a great deal. For a long succession of years the cities have claimed a heavy toll from St. Andrew's church. Year after year Streetsville has sent some of her best to swell the city crowd and churches. Meanwhile she has had to look on and smile, just as a mother whose sons seek and win fortunes in distant lands.

But what mother or church ever saw her sons or minister leaving without a secret pang? Soon the pulpit will be declared vacant, then truly we will look upon ourselves as a flock without a shepherd.

Rev. W. McCree and amiable wife and family have endeared themselves not only to the congregation but have made many friends in Streetsville.

However much we regret their going, we wish them God's speed in their new home. (Contributed).

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

The Women's Institute held a splendid meeting at the home of Mrs. Dr. Smith, on Thursday last. Mrs. J. Caslor presiding. The programme was in charge of Mrs. C. H. Falconer, convener of Canadian Industry, who told us of many industries in Peel County, which we had not known of before.

Roll call was ably answered by giving a Peel Co. Industry, a splendid report of our Xmas Cheer was given.

The Doll-Dressing Contest was won by Mrs. Hisey. A debate was staged, Resolved that a jolly, untidy woman is more conducive to a happy home life than a tidy crank. The arguments, pro and con, provoked much laughter, but the judges decided that the good housekeeper won. We sent five dollars towards a radio for children's aid in Milton. Mrs. Ardagh was appointed as our representative to the Central Relief Committee, which, we understand, will be organized in the near future. Lunch was served by Mrs. J. A. Workman, Mrs. W. Faulkner and Mrs. Frank Workman.

S.H.S. NOTES

On Friday, January the 22nd, the Literary Society held a meeting. The program was supplied by the members of Third Form. John McClintock, Charles Herson, and John Schnarr presented a humourous sketch. In this they were assisted by Ross Hollingshead's dog. Edna Stephens recited a poem entitled "When the Minister comes to Tea." Edith Rogerson and Mildred Quennell delighted the assembly with a piano duet. Alex Dick, and Laura Plumb played the part of the hero and the heroine in a short play, entitled "Used Cars for Sale. Mac Gibson, John McGill, John McClintock, Hazel Greensides and Bert Cooke also took part. In February Second Form will be called upon to present an afternoon's entertainment. Serious work has been started on the year book, and advertisers are advised to get in touch with Bill Munro, the Business Manager.

Scout Notes

This week's column is dedicated to the parents of our scouts. It was a pleasure to see the youngsters coming in, forty-three altogether, and at that four others were confined to their homes with colds.

A committee of six citizens of the village has been appointed and will be invested on February 10th, the date for the Investiture of Scouts.

We expect four patrols in uniform and full colours will pay us a visit on that occasion. A campfire talk will be given by a Trinity College Staff member. The Toronto Township Executive will be on hand in full force, and many suggestions and pieces of advice will no doubt be given.

We want every interested adult to attend if possible. Come in and join the fun, we are sure you will all enjoy it.

Again we say our thanks to the Streetsville Review in allowing us to use their hall last Wednesday. The boys certainly weren't disappointed. Our next meeting will be in the usual quarters.

Please remember the date, Feb. 10th. Everybody is welcome. We know you will not regret it.

Production Important

"This modern statement that we don't need to pay any more attention to production, but rather concentrate on marketing our products is not altogether correct, and many farmers who are voicing it are really doing harm to themselves" declared Dr. G. I. Christie, president of O.A.C., in an address before the Western Ontario Dairymen's Association. "You cannot market your cheese unless the farmers use the best quality of milk in producing it. You cannot disregard production since it is the first and most important step in the marketing of your produce. The problem of production has been left to the men on the farms too much and it is up to others to step in and help them if they too are to prosper. So long as we have a barrier between the farmer-producer and the men who market his goods there can be no real progress. Suspicion and selfishness prevent it. There must be co-operation between these two."

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid is arrested she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realises she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states that Orme is Sheila's real husband. Orme takes the witness stand.

"Oh, yes, wandering around. And your wanderings, I take it, were conducted by automobile?" questioned the district attorney.

"I have never had a car," replied Orme.

"Yet you made the public automobile camp your headquarters. Can you explain that discrepancy?"

"Some one must have given me a lift on the highway as far as the auto camp. Then, when I was there, I stayed. I had no money, you see."

"Quite so, no money. And having thus belatedly discovered your wife's marriage to a rich man, you doubtless saw an opportunity to recoup your finances by threatening to make the illegality of her marriage known."

"I would not have taken a cent from Sheila if I had been dying!" Orme's face, which had paled to the gray-white of dead ashes at the opening of the cross-examination, suddenly flamed.

"Of course not! And yet your earnings as a sandpaper artist could scarcely have supported your menage during the period of your married life."

Graham half rose to object, thought better of it, and relapsed into his seat.

"I did not think of money then one way or the other. I did not dream that she thought of it either. I loved her."

"So you have told us. And yet you made no effort to keep in touch with her affairs—affairs which were rather widely published—until three days before her death?"

"I have told you that I did not know of her marriage to Ellsworth."

"And having had your little chat with the lady, you left her on a street corner—having made no attempt to follow up the steps conveyed in your letter to her—and fled back to the auto camp, where you concealed yourself under the assumed name of Daniel Osgood?"

"It was the name by which I was known there. I adopted it after I left Sheila."

"Oh!!! And just why did you find it necessary to adopt an alias at all?"

"I—don't know."

The district attorney dropped his air of elaborate sarcasm. He half rose from his chair, pointing his finger menacingly at the man in the witness chair. His voice boomed through the courtroom.

"David Orme," he roared, "I suggest that you deliberately waited until Sheila O'Shay was in a position which you could threaten. I suggest that you used threats of exposure in order to wring money from her, and that, when she refused to submit to blackmail, you struck her down in a rage—you had done just that before, I believe you said—and killed her.

"I suggest that you were in possession of an automobile in which you drove the body to the marsh and which you afterwards junked or ran into the bay; that you then very astutely thought to lose yourself in the floating population of the auto camp, hiding under an assumed name, in order not to arouse suspicion by attempting to flee from the scene without funds. I suggest, David Orme, that you did wilfully and feloniously murder Sheila O'Shay!"

Orme rose to his feet, his eyes fixed in a fascinated stare on the face of the prosecutor. He was trembling violently from head to foot, but he steadied himself with both hands on the arms of the chair behind him.

"Before God, I don't know whether I killed her or not!" he screamed in the high shrill voice of hysteria. "But I don't think it can be possible—because I loved her more than my music, more than anything else on earth!"

CHAPTER XLV.

After the emotional stress of the morning session, the quiet urbanity of Dr. Cavanaugh, as he settled himself comfortably in the witness chair restored an atmosphere of normality to the tense courtroom.

Dr. Cavanaugh was very much at ease and completely at home, and he showed it. He distinctly conveyed the impression that murder trials were no treat to him. He took the oath with the careless nonchalance of a caller presenting himself to a familiar hostess, and awaited developments with a manner that subtly combined a willingness to be helpful with a patient acceptance of inconvenience to himself in thus being interrupted.

"Will you tell the jury, doctor, something of your professional career?"

"I was graduated from the Harvard medical school, and after my internship was for several years on the staff of Graham hospital for nervous and mental diseases. I then spent four years in study abroad. I was a member of the Viennese Psychoanalytic Society which met with Dr. Sigmund Freud of Vienna in the first study of psycholanalysis. I also spent a year with Dr. Jurrg in Zurich.

"I may say that I am not an adherent of any one school of psychoanalysis—in fact, I think I may be said to have made my own original contributions in the field. On my return to this country, I established my own psychiatric hospital and clinic. For the last six or seven years, I have retired from active practice, although I am still sometimes called into consultation and have taken such cases as have interested me from the point of view of research."

"You are a specialist in nervous and mental diseases?"

"Psychopathology is my particular field—yes."

"And have you written anything for publication on the subject?"

"I have contributed articles too numerous to mention to the medical journals of America, France, England, Austria and Germany. I am the author of several books—'Abnormal Aspects of Genius,' Abnormal Behavior in Relation to Medical Jurisprudence,' 'The Criminal Mind' and 'Autistic Thinking in Normal Life' are probably those best known to the layman."

"And you have, I think, served as alienist in a number of criminal cases?"

"As alienist, or sometimes rather as a psychological investigator—yes. I was expert witness for the prosecution in the case of the people versus James Kelly, the case of the people versus Edwards and Edwards, the case of the people versus Mary Emerson, the case of the people versus Watson and Eaves. Kelly was condemned to death; Edwards was condemned to death and his sister to life imprisonment; Mary Emerson was convicted but died before the date set for execution; Eaves was too young to receive the death sentence, and Watson, after conviction, was killed in an attempted jail break. I was witness for the defence in the trials of Edna Raleigh, Hubert Smith, Everett and Laura Connelly and John Potts. Raleigh, Smith, the Connellys and Potts were acquitted.

"I may add that in numerous instances my services have been requested to conduct a preliminary investigation which in some cases prevented the accused from coming to trial and in others identified the criminal who was being sought. Many of these investigations were such as not to require my presence in court, but I believe they have been more or less a matter of public knowledge."

The jury was obviously impressed. The cases mentioned by Dr. Cavanaugh included a group of the most spectacular trials of the last decade. His name had gone forth in magazines and newspaper stories as a wizard who pulled amazing white rabbits of truth out of the black hat of mysterious circumstance, and his books were written in a strikingly vivid, though by no means sensational, style which had brought them readers far beyond the circle of his professional confreres.

It was quite true that so far as was known he had never been engaged to investigate a case which he had failed to solve, and that the side which secured his services in a trial had invariably received a favorable verdict.

"I believe, doctor, that you have been popularly referred to as 'The Man Who Makes No Mistakes'?"

"Oh, my dear Mr. Graham!" Dr. Cavanaugh protested amiably. "We must concede a good deal to popular exaggeration. Perhaps"—he took the jury into his confidence with a deprecating smile—"It is only that my mistakes have never found me out!"

Graham, beaming like an impresario whose star performer is capturing the audience, waved the point aside.

"You are acquainted with the defendant, David Orme?"

"I am."

"You have examined him professionally?"

"I have."

"Will you kindly explain to the ladies and gentlemen of the jury the circumstances and results of that examination?"

"I have seen the defendant more than once."

Graham looked slightly surprised, but recovered himself promptly.

"Very well; go right ahead, doctor."

"I will be as brief and non-technical as possible. If your honor and the jury will bear with me—" Dr. Cavanaugh glanced upward at the judge's bench—"I will go over the entire circumstances of my dealings with the defendant."

"You have all the time at your disposal that you need, doctor!" Even the judge treated this witness with marked and courteous respect. He no longer stared out of the window or gave his bored attention to the wranglings of Graham and the district attorney. It happened that this was the first case he had tried in which the great Dr. Cavanaugh appeared as expert witness, and he obviously looked upon it as an opportunity full of interest.

Plant Varieties Produced By X-Rays at McGill U.

Montreal—Successful attempts have been made in the botanical laboratories of McGill University to produce new types of plants through the use of X-rays, it was announced at the university by Professor C. Leonard Huskins, whose papers on botanical research led to much discussion at the recent meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

A tremendous number of varieties of a plant can be developed in a comparatively short time, the McGill botanist said. For instance, a plant was introduced to this continent from China about 100 years ago and today botanists can identify more than 1,000,000 varieties of the original, he pointed out.

With the use of X-rays botanists can produce varieties of plants much more quickly than nature would ordinarily accomplish. The chromosomes whose characteristics govern the form of the new variety are influenced directly by X-rays, Professor Huskins said.

Factors governing the rate of breathing of trees and plants were discussed by Professor George W. Scarth, another McGill botanist, who said that the acidity of certain cells in the leaves of plants controlled the opening and shutting of the breathing pores. Many persons, he said, believe that plants in the home help to purify the air. This is only true in the daytime, Professor Scarth explained, as plants give off carbon dioxide at night just as individuals do. In the daytime the light causes them to use carbon dioxide from the air, thus helping to use up waste gases given off in breathing. He suggested that plants be removed from bedrooms at night.

Danes and Dutch Sign Commercial Treaty

Amsterdam — Denmark and the Netherlands recently concluded a commercial and shipping treaty on the basis of the most-favored-nation clause, for a period of five years, which can be prolonged for an indefinite time by mutual consent.

According to the regulations laid down in this treaty, subjects of each country are to enjoy the same rights as nationals, in respect to residence, the running of an enterprise and taxation. The parties promise most-favored-nation treatment with regard to levying of import and export duties, interior taxes and other rights.

New Treatment For Pernicious Anemia

Discovery By University of Michigan Offers Simplified Method

Ann Arbor, Mich.—A new and simplified treatment for pernicious anemia, eliminating many of the uncertainties and difficulties of present treatments, has been perfected by research scientists at University of Michigan.

The new treatment involves intravenous injection of concentrated liver extract and obviates the necessity of frequent doses of liver, liver extract or substitutes administered by mouth against which patients rebel.

Experiments leading to this development were carried on during the past several months at the Thomas Henry Simpson Memorial Institute for Medical Research at the University of Michigan under direction of Drs. Raphael Isaacs and Cyrus C. Sturgis.

The intravenous extract of liver is necessary for patients who are too ill to take medicine by mouth. Liver extracts for intravenous use have been prepared previously by others, but because of the presence of certain unknown substances, there are serious reactions such as headache, chills and fall of blood pressure. The Simpson staff has succeeded in so purifying the extract that now reactions are eliminated. The new extract is 15 to 30 times more potent than the extracts given by mouth.

The newest discovery followed earlier work which resulted in the development of dried hog's stomach as a substitute for liver in treatment of the disease. Hog's stomach, known as ventriculin, was announced by the institute in 1929 and was widely accepted in the medical profession as being much more concentrated and less odious to the patient than liver. The new treatment promises to excel both previous methods in benefits to sufferers.

Four to six injections of the new extract into the veins of a pernicious anemia sufferer have restored the blood to normal. After the blood has been replenished with red corpuscles it is possible to maintain this state by single injections at intervals of from four to six weeks.

Relics of the Past Preserved in England

Redhill, Surrey, Eng.—England's oldest windmill—the Post Mill, built at Outwood in 1665—has been having its sails put in order by the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings. Two entirely new sails were added, and the two remaining old ones repaired.

Until fairly recent times the windmills were not only a feature of the pastoral landscape, but also the very necessary means of grinding corn. Food for men and animals, and wealth for the owners were provided by the mills.

Since the introduction of mechanical methods, however, the windmills have lost their medieval importance, and one by one have fallen into disuse, and often into decay, their owners, the millers, finding it impossible to afford the periodical extensive repairs to the sails which are necessary.

While investigating the number of windmills deserving of special preservation, the Socety for the Protection of Ancient Buildings discovered that the Outwood windmill was the oldest. It is still working, being the only one in Surrey still in use.

There is a tradition that workmen in the top story witnessed from it in 1666 the raging of the great fire of London. The miller, who holds the mill on a 500-year lease, and the owner of the manorial rights have agreed to enter into a covenant with the society never to demolish the mill and to preserve it in a proper state of repair.

The brothers who originally owned the Post Mill quarreled, so history relates, and one of them built a second windmill only 50 yards away, with the object of superseding the old mill and taking its trade. But the veteran held its own; its rival closed down and today stands derelict. The first reference to a windmill in English history was made in 1189.

A BATTLE OF THE ELEMENTS AT GRAND CANYON

FORTUNATE, indeed, the traveler who stood beside the camera man as he caught this dramatic winter battle of the elements in the Grand Canyon of Arizona.

For weeks on end, in midwinter, the Grand Canyon glows under brilliant sunshine and blue sky. But when snow does come to the Canyon rims, as it must do at any elevation of 7,000 feet in this latitude, then the visitor may witness incredible scenes like this.

Travel is continuous throughout the year to the South rim of the Grand Canyon, but Winter seals the North rim which is 1200 feet higher, for months on end. Through Pullmans over the Santa Fe Railway approach within 100 yards of the Canyon edge, South rim, and it is but a step to the informal comfort and crackling fireplaces of El Tovar hotel. Snow, when it comes, may lie thick in the pine forest, but it rarely interrupts the motor drives along the rim roads, and not often even the thrilling saddle trips down the inner-Canyon trails. As one rides down and down, the snow thins out and gradually disappears. Imperceptibly one passes from the crisp cold of the upper world to the hints of spring at Phantom Ranch, 5,000 feet below.

Diesel Motors Approved For U. S. Blimp Fleet

Akron, Ohio—After extensive experiments on the blimps Defender and Puritan, the Goodyear Zeppelin Corporation announced that the use of heavy oil-burning Diesel engines was an unqualified success.

As a result, it is thought that the remainder of the Goodyear blimp fleet, as well as future rigid airships like the U.S.S. Akron, will be equipped with Diesels.

"With the use of noninflammable helium as lifting gas, and heavy oil-burning engines for propulsion, the last fire hazard of airship operation has been removed," said Mr. Paul W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Company.

The use of the Diesels also makes for better speed and better handling conditions, Mr. Karl Fickes, chief of blimp operations, pointed out. The Defender's speed was stepped up from 42 to 55 miles an hour by the installation of the two 225-horsepower motors, he declared.

Potato Prices Show 100 P.C. Increase in Britain

London—Potatoes sold for $2.10 a bushel at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Leicester, on Jan. 12, an increase of 100 per cent. over prices paid a fortnight ago.

Farmers of the Isle of Elp, Cambridgeshire, issued a protest against reports that growers are hoarding potatoes in order to raise prices. They said farmers' stocks are from 30 to 40 per cent. lower than for many years past.

When You

CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Aspirin was meant for just such times, for it insures your comfort. Freedom from those pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block that threatening headache while it is still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you've caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Aspirin tablets when you travel. Have some at home and keep some at the office. Like an efficient secretary, they will often "save the day" and spare you many uncomfortable, unproductive hours. Aspirin is harmless, so keep it handy, keep it in mind, and use it. No man of affairs can afford to ignore the score and more of uses explained in the proven directions. From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains which seem almost to bend the bones, Aspirin tablets are ready with quick relief—and always work. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. They are of perfect purity, absolute uniformity, and have the same action every time. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

Sunday School Lesson

January 31. Lesson V—Jesus Feeds The Multitude—John 6: 1-13, 48-51. Golden Text: Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall not hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.—John 6: 35.

ANALYSIS.

I. SYMPATHY WITH HUMAN NEED, 6: 1-6.

II. GOD AND MAN WORKING TOGETHER, 6: 7-13.

III. THE SOUL'S "BILL OF FARE," 6: 22-71.

INTRODUCTION—John introduces the story of the Feeding of the Five Thousand in order to illustrate the discourse on "Christ, the Bread of Life." With the accounts in the other Gospels before him, he selects and modifies to suit his purpose. His Gospel is concerned, not so much with facts, as with the interpretation of the facts. Like the other miracles in this Gospel, the one recorded here is largely symbolical. But whether one takes it as the account of a miracle which actually took place, or explains it naturalistically, the spiritual meaning is the same. The naturalistic explanation is that Jesus brought order out of confusion by arranging the people in groups, by suggesting to them, by his own example and that of his disciples to share such supplies as they might have in their lunch baskets (Jews always carried lunch baskets with them, in order to avoid the necessity of using "unclean" food on their journey). The generosity of Jesus and his disciples so stimulated the generosity of those who had more food than they needed that the needs of all were more than met. Whether we take it as fact or as symbol—and John evidently takes it as fact—the spiritual meaning is the same.

I. SYMPATHY WITH HUMAN NEED, 6: 1-6.

Jesus and his company had gone away for a few hours rest. The rest was denied him. The crowds came with their vulgar curiosity—it was nothing better, v. 2. There was no trace of impatience as he saw the prospects of his quiet afternoon disappear. It was with love and understanding that he turned to them. They would soon be hungry, he thought, and he began at once to prepare for their needs.

So Christ, says John, anticipates human need. He thinks of everything. "Had I thought of it, I should have been glad to do it for him," said some one who did not think of doing that kind deed until he saw another doing it. Christ-like people "think" in time.

II. GOD AND MAN WORKING TOGETHER, 6: 7-13.

There may have been a touch of humor behind Jesus' question to Philip, v. 5. Philip lived by figures rather than by faith. He believed what he could see. If he could work it out on paper, he would believe it possible. His calculations (v. 7) left out the chief factor,—Jesus himself. The small boy with the big lunch (v. 9) is the only possibility that comes to Andrew's mind. "But what are these among so many?" Many a worthwhile achievement has been frustrated by the "but" of timidity. Christ can produce mighty results from the slenderest possible means.

So it happened here. Undreamed-of resources became immediately available. Twelve baskets of food were left over, v. 13. The baskets would be the "traveling wallets" already referred to. If we give our best in Christ's service, be that best what it may, we shall discover that we have gifts and powers and strength which grow as we use them.

III. THE SOUL'S "BILL OF FARE," 6: 22-71.

The day following (v. 22) the people—who found him in Capernaum (v. 24) and who understood "the meat which abideth unto eternal life" (v. 27) to mean some details of external conduct which would win merit for them, asked Jesus, "What must we do that we may work the works of God?" In reply he called upon them for faith in himself as God's ambassador, v. 29. They then asked for a "sign." There was a prevailing belief that the Messiah would feed God's people with bread from heaven, as Moses had done, Exod. 16: 4, 15. The bread which Jesus had given them yesterday was only earthly food. Jesus replied, "I am the bread of life," v. 35. He had been leading up to this declaration. He reasserted it in vs. 48, 51, 58.

In spite of their unbelief (v. 36) Jesus was confident that God's purpose in sending him into the world would be accomplished. "All those (and only those) will come to me who are the Father's gift to me," v. 37. That is, it is only a divinely inspired impulse which can turn to Christ those "who come to him." The one who has the responsive will (the individual will plays its essential part in "election") and acts upon the divine impulse, and comes to him will be sure of a welcome, v. 37.

In v. 51 the thought passes from what Christ is to what he gives. In his incarnation and in his sacrifice on the cross he is bringing life to all men. The reference to his death is clear in vs. 53-56 where "blood" implies a violent death. This whole incident is best understood as we remember that at this time Jesus knew himself to be a marked man. Herod Antipas, who had put John the Baptist to death, was probably preparing the same fate for him. We have here, probably, the reflections of John, written after the event. Such advanced teaching as we have here would be beyond the understanding of uncultured Galileans. It is a discourse based probably upon scattered utterances of Jesus preserved by his disciples and understood long after.

The central teaching is that Christ provides real nourisment (symbolized by the common barley bread) for the human soul—as contrasted with the unreal food for which men so often strive. As bread never palls upon the appetite, so the one who lives the simple, wholesome, serviceable life of Christ never becomes sated, bored. Life is too interesting, and too useful.

The Weed-Killer "Special"

Weeds are the railwayman's enemy as well as the gardener's. If left alone they would choke the permanent way as effectively as, in the circumstances, they would do to our flower-beds and gravel paths.

But, of course, they aren't left left alone, though weeding by hand is apt to prove both laborious and costly.

Now, however, a new way of doing this job has been discovered. The Southern Railway in England has made a special weed-killing train by coupling two old tenders together and fitting them with spray pipes and tanks.

A special form of liquid weed-killer is used, and the spray pipes have an effective range of about ten feet.—London "Answers".

Children's Books In Soviet Russia

By Ernestine Evans, Associate Editor for J. B. Lippincott Co., and frequent visitor to Russia, in Asia (Nov., '21).

Whoever saw the international exhibition of fine books in Paris last summer must have remarked how the visitors swarmed about the Russian exhibit. Here was a whole regiment of paper-bound picture tales and printers with one aim only, to educate a vast public—young people reading for the first time and old people also learning to read for the first time—in a completely new system of life. Into the books had gone drawings, in black and white and in color, by many distinguished artists; the type was sometimes beautiful and was always used with a freedom and a dash, a knowledge of, without servile respect for, all that bookmen and advertisers now know about the display of letters on a page. No wonder the visitors swarmed.

And no wonder the news stands in Russia look like book fairs. Books are everywhere in Russia. Children's books, in bright red and blue inks and in subtler mauves and purples that show the effect of Chinese painting on the artists of the Soviet Union, are important. They smile beside the samovar in railway stations; they garnish the windows of new bookshops in villages where half the population has learned to read at all only within the past ten years.

What you do not see in Russia are any expensive books. Not one. The Soviet Union is designing libraries for masses, and masses are poor. The Russians think of books as carriers, educators, things of use and illumination, but hardly as property. They are content to make paper books that are read and read and thrown away. Whereas in America two dollars is an average price and 2500 the average edition, more and more the Russians try out all their children's books in editions of 32,000; and miracles of color printing can be worked for ten cents when the big edition distributes the load of initial cost. Even ten cents is considered too high to make books available to everybody, and the news stands of the Ukraine in particular carry hundreds of little five-cent books, tales, expositions of fact and news stories simply and graphically told of life in the new Russia of to-day.

The Soviet Union is a world in itself, a league of many tribes and nations that are being linked by Soviet structure—and books are often translated into 20 or more languages (pictures, happily, need not be translated; they are understood in Babel). It is politically significant for the rest of the world that the Russian government is now welding a national sense throughout the land by such simple means as tales of the life of children in all the far corners of the Union. Books are also being used to develop a sense of responsibility for and common cause with the millions of China, India and Africa. There are many series of books on what we in the West would call the brotherhood of man, lively and loving accounts of black and yellow of earth, with short captions and an and brown people, all the "exploited" occasional jibe at the white overlords, but, on the whole lovely pictures of little children and their mothers, of the day's work, of grain-sowing and harvesting, bread-making, ships and carriages and houses. So the average Russian child grows up knowing a great deal about his own country and about Africa and Asia as well.

The present Soviet idea is to initiate the child, almost from the kindergarten, into a sense of social organization and to make all literate in commercial geography at a very early age. Actually, to a Russian child the chances are that a tiger hunt in India exciting to read about, will be no more exciting than the story which tells him every step in the history of the manufacture of cotton cloth.

There is a constant stream of such stories—books that answer questions, books about clocks and time, the story of printing presses, how glass is made, the history of pottery and the story of what makes dynamos go. A whole nation, old and young, is asking how to do things for itself and why this and that are so.

One of my own favorites among Russian children's books deals with the making of newspapers. It is a lively book printed in red and black, full of pictures of how a reporter gets news, sends it by wire or wireless to the editor who edits and the printers who set and the machines which print. That book has come out in several editions.

So much has been written by 100 per cent. Communists about the danger of letting the old tales and the old ideology survive that one expects to find the folk stories withering away. But if one year there is a marked bias in favor of stories of the Turksib Railway and the Dnieprostroy Dam, you may be sure that the next year will see the publication of some modern hero tale, of the aviator who rescued Nobile, for example, and a new edition of some old Persian folk tale with its salty moral and its swinging cadences. One policy contradicts another and over and over again fact stories of the mountain tribes in the Caucasus become enriched with the time-honored legends told around camp fires on the wild Kazbek trails. Now and again some old story is so pat with Communist moral that it will come out once more. For example, there is the story of the peasant who went to pull a turnip, but the turnip was so stubborn that it refused to come out of the ground until the peasant had summoned, in turn, his wife, son, daughter dog, cat, and finally the household mouse to his aid.

Thus, not only the inexpensiveness of Russian books, their color and variety of design, but their special emphases are unique. Elves have given place to cranes, and fairies to electric light bulbs; and in the picture books the astonishment is all for man and his power to remake his environment rather than suffer and bear it. Is it any wonder that travelers to Russia prefer to mail home children's books instead of letters, confident that these are indeed samples of the U. S. S. R.?

Explorer Visualizes Antarctic As Fashionable Resort

Brisbane, Queensl.—The antarctic ablaze with light from many hotels, a fashionable resort and the playground of Australia, was the picture drawn by Capt. Frank Hurley, photographer of the Douglas Mawson antarctic expedition.

Capt. Hurley described this futuristic vision in answer to an interviewer who asked of what value would be the large area of land that had been formally taken possession of by the expedition.

With the improved methods of transport, he believed, the antarctic would be within 20 years at the very doors of Australia—the object of week-end tours. The methods of fast upper air travel foreshadowed by the Junkers stratoplane would presumably bring this territory within six or seven hours' flight of Hobart. No longer would people regard the antarctic as a mysterious desolation to be traversed only by supermen under conditions of extreme vigor and hardship, but rather as an alluring playground. The weather there was easier to forecast than in the more tropical regions, and summer in the Ross Sea was similar to the winter at Mt. Kosciusko, one of the best known tourists' resorts in Australia.

Beneath the winter snow and ice, suggested Captain Hurley, there probably existed untapped mineral resources the exploitation of which would enrich the manufacturing world.

Captain Hurley who was the official photographer to the Australian Imperial Forces, considered Antarctica one of the most beautiful parts of the world.

Relief

Now the dim relief has come:
Out of the dark we crawl,
Haggard and still, and some
Are motionless along the wall.

We do not speak a word until
We form on a firmer road and dawn
Reveals a length of quiet hill
And a house farther on.

Some one is crying, but there is laughter:
Some one whistles something old,
And some one staggers drunken after
So much death and cold.

Mercury Discovery Added to Diamonds

Murfreesboro, Ark.—Pike County, southwest Arkansas, claimed to be the home of the only diamond mine in North America, has a new claim to distinction. Cinnabara (sulphide of mercury), a valuable ore, which is reduced to mercury or quick-silver at a comparatively small expense, has been discovered here.

Oddly, it was a farmer who found the new ore in Pike County, just as John Huddleston, a dirt farmer, found the first diamonds in this section.

Hints to Motorists

Evidence of Leaks Traced

Many a motorist who professes complete surprise when he discovers that leakage is responsible for the loss of lubricant from the transmission or differential has just been ignoring the evidence. The evidence may be scattered all over the floor of the family garage without the car owner having paid any attention to it.

Short Memory Imperils Motor

"Apply a few drops of light oil to the front end of the starting motor every 5,000 miles." That sentence is in many of the instruction books of many cars. But the 5,000-mile intervals being so far apart, the job is more often forgotten than remembered.

Ammeter Becomes a Guide

In adjusting the idling speed of the engine of a free-wheeling car the ammeter may be used as a guide. The carburetor should be so set that the ammeter will register two amperes charge when the engine is runing slowly.

Importance of Reflector

The importance of a clean and unmarred headlight reflector will be clear to the average motorist when he realizes that the reflector's job is to increase the natural illumination of the bulb several hundred times.

Knack in Release of Tires

A great many car owners, tire men find, still do not know all the tricks of getting a flat off the wheel. One generally missed really is quite important if it happens to be a heavy tire. That is the trick of pulling the tire free at the bottom—while the valve is at the top—and then rolling the wheel around to allow the valve stem to drop free naturally.

Horn Silence Is Explained

The first place to check when the horn refuses to blow is the connections at the horn itself. If they are tight the next point of inspection should be the connections at the ammeter.

Remedy for Roughness

Any noticeable difference in the comfortable riding of the car should remind the motorist that the shock absorbers may be low on oil. Refilling every 5,000 miles is advocated as a minimum of attention even for the best of them. The warmer the weather the more likely the oil is to evaporate. Just like that of the engine.

When Throttle Is at Fault

Maybe the throttle is at fault, not the carbureter idling adjustment, when the engine shows an inclination to stall. The throttle adjustment is easy to increase, easier than to reset the carbureter.

Return to Fruit Culture Urged on Peru's Farmers

Lima, peru.—A campaign to encourage Peruvian farmers to grow fruits once more and end this country's large annual importation of oranges, apples, bananas and pears from the United States, Ecuador and Chile has been started by the government.

Before the World War, large orchards in the fertile valleys of the Andes kept the country supplied with practically all its needed fruit, at prices affording reasonable profits to the growers. However, when the price of cotton sky-rocketed during the war thousands of fruit trees were torn up to make room for the more profitable crop.

Now that cotton has declined in value from more than 20 cents a pound to around 6 cents, Peruvian farmers again are giving their attention to the planting of orchards. The climate is suitable for the raising of all tropical and many northern varieties of fruit. Plans under consideration include the establishment of several fruit conserving plants which government officials believe will afford a steady year-around market for the growers.

FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!

D. WILSON, Co, Clerk

Good Year for St. Andrew's

On Wednesday evening, January 20th, St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Streetsville, held their 104th annual congregational meeting. The meeting was presided over by the minister, the Rev. Walter T. McCree, M.A., and John H. Weylie was appointed secretary. After devotional exercises, the following reports were presented from the different organizations, of the work accomplished during the past year. These reports were most encouraging and gave ample evidence of the deep interest taken by the members in the manif ld activities of Church life and work. To quote from the Session report, which reviewed briefly the depression which was world wide, and in which our country was involved, it goes on to say, "Amidst these social and political disturbances our church, in company with many others, has striven to exhibit its faith and confidence in the protective care of God. Nor have we any reason to be ashamed of the results manifested in the spiritual activities of the Church or in the financial results."

During the year death removed from our midst two faithful members in the persons of Mr. Joseph Wolfe and Mr. Wm. McCauley. Mrs. Devins though not a member, took an active interest in some phases of church work. Mr. McCauley will be specially missed on the Board of Management on which he had taken a most active part for a number of years. Not only have those in mature years been called away, but also a dear little girl from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Treanor. The sympathy of the congregation was extended to those immediately concerned.

In February the following were elected and ordained elders of the church: Messrs. Wm. Hardy, W. L. McCracken, Arthur J. Adamson. The Session expressed great satisfaction for the able manner with which the superintendent, Mr. M. A. Steward, conducted the Sunday School. To quote again from the session report, "Your minister would take advantage of this opportunity of expressing his deep felt obligation to the congregation. We have laboured together in sympathy and harmony for over six years and we are humbly confident that during that time both minister and congregation have entered into some richer experiences of God's mercy."

The following is a summary of the receipts during the year: Session Fund, $20.25; Sunday School for Missions, $99.33; Sunday School, Ordinary Fund, $86.32; Sunday School Improvement Fund, $40.94; Bible Class $26.-86; Missions, $238.88; Women's Missionary Society, $231.17; Olive Branch, $53.09; Women's Association, $229.80; Young People's Society, $140.44; Board of Management, Ordinary Fund, $2514.12; Reserve Fund, $468.12; Total receipts, $4148.82; Balance on hand from all sources $724.18. During the year the church roof was re-shingled at a cost of $500.00 and all paid for.

The following were elected members of the Board of Management for three years: Messrs. H. W. Couse, S. J. Wolfe, W. L. McCracken, F. Marlott, D. Moron; Ex-officio members of the board, the President and Secretary of the Women's Association. Auditors, Mrs. Maas and Mrs. H. W. Couse.

Province of Ontario Loan Announced for $25,000,000

Large Group of Security Houses Insures Widest Possible Distribution for the Issue—Fifteen-Year Bonds Obtainable in Denominations as Low as $500.

The Provincial Treasurer of Ontario has made arrangements with a comprehensive group of security dealers and several banks for the raising of $25,000,000. Of this offering $20,000,000 is being issued in the form of 15-year debentures while the balance of the issue will run for a period of 3 years. This choice of maturity will, it is anticipated, meet the varying requirements of investors.

The 15-year bonds are being offered to yield 5.90% while the smaller amount of 3-year debentures is being offered to yield 6%.

This offering has been looked forward to with a considerable degree of interest since the statement made by Premier Henry two or three weeks ago with regard to prospective financing by the Province.

Since the turn of the year two important financial operations have been carried out successfully. During the first week in January the Province of New Brunswick sold $5,062,000 of debentures which were issued to refund certain maturing obligations and to cover the cost of constructing roads and public buildings. The New Brunswick issue was followed by one to raise $15,000,000 for the City of Montreal. The Montreal bonds were issued to yield 6% and met with a satisfactory reception when offered last Tuesday. The City of Montreal needed the money partly to meet maturing obligations and partly for defraying the cost of construction of certain important public works, part of such works being for the relief of unemployment.

This financing by the Province of Ontario represents the third important piece of financing since the turn of the year. These three pieces of financing represent the first issues to be made by important public bodies since the early summer of 1931 with the exception of the National Service Loan which was brought out in the closing months of the year.

The satisfactory reception accorded the issues of New Brunswick and the City of Montreal doubtless influenced the Government's decision to market its bonds at this time.

Security dealers in Ontario anticipate a large volume of enquiries from within the Province for the loan as at the time of the offering of the New Brunswick and Montreal issues it was found that quite a number of investors stated that they were waiting for the issue to be made by their own Province as announced by the Prime Minister several weeks ago.

Prior to the War, the Province was a borrower in the London market, the high general level for securities at that time enabling the Province to borrow at a very low rate of interest. In March, 1906, the Province issued £1,200,000, or approximately $6,000,000, 3½% Registered Stock at a price of $98.50, and subsequently put out 4% Registered Stock at a premium in varying amounts during the years 1909, 1911 1912, and 1913 to a total of approximately $7,000,000. Due to the War and conditions arising therefrom that market has been temporarily closed to the Province for new issues but issues made in London and still outstanding have a wide popularity with British investors.

During the unsettled period, 1920 to 1923, the Province made several internal issues carrying a 6% coupon. With the return of settled conditions the issues made at that time have since sold at a substantial premium and the Province subsequently made several issues with a coupon as low as 4%.

During the period since the War the American market has readily absorbed issues made in that market. The credit of the Province has ranked so favourably in New York that its bonds during the past decade have commanded unusually high prices. The important reason, probably, for the favourable credit position of the Province is the fact that such a large proportion of the wealth and population of the entire Dominion is centred in Ontario. Approximately one-third of the population and substantially more than one-third of the wealth of the Dominion is according to recent estimates, centred in this Province.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Thrift in March Means Camp in July

Have you thought of that, Lonies?

This year we intend to make a big effort to have another Lone Scout Camp, such as we held in 1929 and 1930. Do you remember all the good times we had together? The hikes and games, the swimming pool and the camp fire, the treasure hunts and sports, work and play?

Of course you will want to join in this fun all over again!

Then remember that NOW is the time to commence to save those nickels to pay your camp fee and to make it possible for you to be with us. Start a camp fund right away!

No better illustration of the value of the Scout Movement is needed than the incident which took place recently in a small Ontario town.

An accident occurred when an automobile collided with a railway train and a man was seriously hurt On being summoned to the scene of the accident the doctor decided that the man must be conveyed by ambulance, at once, to the hospital. On enquiring from the onlookers where he might find the nearest 'phone, a little chap spoke up: "I know, sir, I'll go. What message?" He received instructions from the doctor and was off. Shortly he was back, out of breath. "The ambulance will be right over" he said.

The doctor turned to reward him for prompt execution of the errand. "Oh no sir," said the lad, "I'm a Boy Scout and I mustn't take anything!" "But I must pay for the 'phone call, at least," said the doctor. "Well, I guess that will be alright," said the little fellow.

In that incident is illustrated the Boy Scout Spirit.

It is far from the truth for anyone to state that this movement encourages militarism, for Boy Scouts are taught to perform at least one good turn every day and are trained to be amendable to discipline, to fear God, to honor the King and to love their native land.

They are taught the useful art of woodcraft, are given instruction in swimming and, in short, receive a training that fits them to be good men and citizens.

Surely such a movement deserves the unqualified support of every person who realizes that the boys of today are the men of to-morrow and that training such as Boy Scouts receive will make for a finer and higher standard of citizenship.

Birds

In recent articles we have talked about our friends, the birds, and of our duty, as Scouts towards them. Have you ever stopped to think how valuable an ally man has in the birds?

Birds help feed us. Birds help save our money. Birds help make life more beautiful Birds furnish us with splendid examples of faith, charity and forgiveness Birds give us pleasure. Birds are our friends and "though we slay them yet do they treat us."

In our wild scramble to become civilized and less like real men we have too often ruined the world into which we were born. We have polluted the fragrant air, thus robbing our lungs. We have hacked down our forests, slain our wild animals. Vanished are many of our friends through our selfishness or greed or ignorance.

While this has proceeded, slowly and steadily our enemies have crept upon us in constantly augmented numbers. These enemies are tiny pests which man is ill adapted to fight. Insects are the pests which we have unwittingly aided and which now destroy our very livelihood. The city dweller little appreciates the ravages of these destroyers, but if he could realize the loss of fruits, grain, lumber, and the necessary increase in prices and decrease in quality there are few who would not help secure some means of destroying insects.

Spraying and all the artificial means of controlling these destroyers are as expensive as inadequate. Nature's balance has been upset and man must help restore that balance. Birds are the natural enemies of insects. They are the balance weight against the harmful insects. We must help increase bird life by conserving their homes feeding them educating the public and studying their habits to help supply what we have taken away.

One of the best ways of protecting the birds is by building bird houses, for man has taken many of the natural homes of the birds away. Build them, put them up and wait. Unlike human beings, the birds like seasoned homes, they dislike bright paint, etc., so perhaps you'll have to wait some time. Give the bird a chance. While there are Scouts the birds should not want for homes. There should always be some houses for rent.

If you would like to be a Lone Scout, write to The Lone Scout Department, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2., for particulars. This branch of the Boy Scouts Association is open to boys between 12 and 18 years of age who are unable to join a regular Scout Troop. Information will be gladly sent.—Lone E.

Canadian Delegates Leave For Geneva

EXAMPLE TO NATIONS

Sir George Perley in Parting Message Cites Dominion and U. S.

New York.—Citing Canada and the United States as examples of how neighboring nations should get along, the Canadian delegation to the world disarmament conference at Geneva sailed early Saturday aboard the liner Europa.

The delegates were Sir George Perley Minister Without Portfolio, and Hon. Maurice Dupre, Solicitor-General. Lady Perley and Mme. Dupre accompanied them.

Also in the party were Miss M. Winnifrid Kydd, president of the National Council of Women in Canada; Major-General A. G. L. McNaughton, chief of the general staff, Department of National Defence and L. B. Pearson, first secretary in the Department of External Affairs.

Sir George, speaking for the delegation said:

"We in Canada are anxious, indeed, to see serious steps taken toward disarmament. The Canadians are much in earnest on this point. A few days ago a petition favoring disarmament containing 45,000 signatories was presented to the Prime Minister by the Canadian League of Nations Society and the Canadian branch of the International Peace Society.

"This fact demonstrates the feeling of the Canadian men and women on this subject. We of Canada and residents of the United States have had concrete illustration for more than 100 years of how two neighbors can get along without fortifications of any kind. We believe the success of the arrangement should lead other nations to reduce armaments and rely on arbitration and friendly negotiation for the settlement of all disputes.

We go to Geneva with this hope in mind, and will do our best to bring this about."

Glasgow To Maintain Ha'penny Tram Rate

Glasgow.—Less than a cent, ha'penny, fares are to be retained here despite a general rise in tramcar and bus rates, the municipal transport authorities have decided. Twopenny street car fares now become 2½d., and the minimum bus fare is increased to 1½d.

It is stated that the object of increasing the short-distance fares is to divert short-distance travelers from the overcrowded buses to the tramcars. This, it is anticipated, will result in an acceleration of the bus services to the suburbs.

The questions of introducing season tickets and of permitting advertising on street cars are still under consideration.

"Prince of Wales Scholarship" To Help Argentines

London.—A scholarship has been established at Oxford for Argentine students, the Prince of Wales announced at a recent dinner of the Argentine Chamber of Commerce here. The award is to be known as the "Prince of Wales Scholarship."

For the next three years, at any rate, the Prince said, two students selected from the University of Buenos Aires are to come to Oxford for two years, receiving the same welcome as Rhodes scholars. The idea arose during the visit of British students to Argentina following the British expedition there last February. Arrangements for a return visit by students from Buenos Aires are well under way, according to the Prince.

Blizzard Traps Hunting Party

One of Three Survives to Tell the Tale

St. Johns, Nfld. — Snatched from death in an ice-coated boat just as he was lapsing into unconsciousness, Eugene Dalton revived Saturday to tell of the blizzard that swept the coast of Newfoundland and claimed the lives of his two companions on a hunting expedition.

Search parties sent out by the Department of Fisheries found the little craft anchored off Shag Rocks Saturday morning. In it were Eugene Dalton, worn out from exposure and barely alive, and the bodies of Mark Dalton and Levi Eddy.

The blizzard blew up without warning and trapped a number of other hunting parties which escaped to land after terrifying experiences. It was accompanied by severe frost, and thermometers registered 30 below zero.

Taking advantage of fine weather for bird-shooting, the Dalton brothers and Eddy set out in their boat Friday afternoon. Suddenly the wind changed and blew in from the northwest with blinding snow. Not knowing whither they went, the three moved the boat until their strength was spent. Darkness shut down, and the temperature dropped. They saw Shag Rocks but were unable to land. The sea was smoother now, and they anchored under the rocks to await their fate.

There they sat, practicing every possible motion to keep warm then looking at each other as ice formed around their boat. Levi Eddy was the first to succumb to the intense cold. Through the long hours of the night the two brothers staved off death, wondering which would be the next to go. About 4 o'clock Martin Dalton died. Alone now, except for two corpses, Eugene pitted his physique against the steadily falling temperature. He did not remember much after his brother died, and he was in a semi-conscious state when rescued by seamen of the fisheries department.

Canada's Gold Holdings in Excess of Demands

Ottawa.—Canada closed the calendar year with gold to the value of $66,900,148 held by the minister of finance, according to a recent report issued by the department of finance. This was $2,740,209 in excess of statutory requirements to protect the Dominion note circulation and Government savings bank deposits.

British Workers Share in Profits

London — The sum distributed among its workers by the British woolen manufacturing firm of J. T. & J. Taylor, Ltd., which has long gone in for profit-sharing, has now reached a total of more than £1,000,000, despite recent trade conditions.

The system provides for distribution to workers, in the form of shares in the company, an agreed proportion of all profits after the first 5 per cent. The workers' shares aresimilar to those of the proprietors except that they do not possess any voice in the management.

"After 65 years of business, including 18 years in the House of Commons," says Mr. Theodore C. Taylor, founder of the concern, "I believe that general adoption of the plan of sharing profits with employees would do more for British industry and national prosperity than is possible by the actions of all the politicians put together."

May Barter Cotton In Exchange for Pork

London.—There is a probability that Bolton, one of Lancashire's spinning centers, may make a direct barter of yarn for bacon.

This has come about through the Hungarian war debts situation, which made payment in currency impossible. The Hungarian weavers association is idle for lack of Bolton yarn, Bolton weavers on the other hand, are idle for need of markets. But the Hungarian weavers can supply pork which their representative in Lancashire is pressing the Bolton merchants to accept in payment. The matter is now before the Manchester wholesale co-operative society which is trying to put through a $50,000 deal.

Britain Sees it Through

Regina Star: (The number of unemployed in Great Britain has decreased by 400,000 since October.) No wonder there is a returning feeling of confidence and a revival of the hope that conditions are mending in Great Britain. Nor is it surprising that the expectation of still further progress after the Ottawa Economic Conference is growing among the British people. Now that they have their coats off and their shoulders to the wheel, they mean to "see it through," and, after all, work and hope are the two strongest incentives to progress, and the surest factors to promote the return to better things.

British Trade Greatly Improved

Shown by Considerable Decrease in Number of Unemployed

London.—A "real improvement" in the unemployment situation in Great Britain was announced last week by the Ministry of Labor as reflected in 74 out of 101 industry groups analyzed.

During the first three weeks in December, the ministry said, the total number of jobless on the registers of unemployment exchanges decreased 112,000—from 2,622,000 to 2,510,000. Of the total reduction some 35,000 was due to changes in requirements for the dole and the balance represented men restored to jobs.

Employment in the coal mining industry improved in every district between these dates Of the wholly unemployed 10,521 were absorbed into the cotton industry, while there was little change in the number of those temporarily jobless.

Engineering, dock workers, tailoring and hotel trades also showed an improvement.

Britain Reduces Credits to Russia

London—A significant reduction in the period of credit allowed for exports to Soviet Russia under the Trade Facilities Act has come about since the National Government came into power according to the Christian Science Monitor.

For some time it has been customary to allow 24 months' credit from date of order on exports of heavy machinery and equipment. This has now been reduced to 12 months.

Lord Willingdon in India

Bombay Times of India: When expressing his confidence in the future H. E. the Viceroy said with considerable significance that if he could keep his health and his sense of humour he trusted we should all be sailing in smoother waters before long. No one needs to retain a sense of humour at the present time more than the Viceroy and the high officers of Government. Every action of theirs is deliberately misconstrued, every speech misinterpreted, and Lord Willingdon is being made the target for particularly caddish attacks by the Congress papers. Fortunately for India, Lord Willingdon well knows how much, or how little, that childish sort of insolence means. He may not get the full measure of support which he is entitled to expect in leading India to her political goal; but if he refuses to depart from the principles he has laid down—particularly insisting on obedience to the law—his appeal for co-operation cannot fail to find, in some influential quarters at any rate, an enthusiastic response.

Canadian Butter Exports Show Big Increase

Ottawa.—Exports of Canadian butter for the calendar year 1931 jumped to 106,805 hundredweight from the small volume of 11,804, according to a report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Cheese exports for the same period increased to 847,884 hundredweight in 1931 from 801,637 in 1930.

Cream and butter exports were down from the previous year but the export of eggs showed a great increase, the figures being 634,140 dozen in 1931, as compared with 188,905 dozen in 1930.

Scientist Killed By Own Chemicals in Cancer Research

Boston.—Dr. Eugene Chellis Glover, 29, who according to research associates at the city hospital was on the point of making an important discovery in cancer, died there, it became known over the week-end, after being overcome while doing laboratory work.

Dr. Glover, less than four years out of Harvard Medical School, but already considered one of the leading cancer research specialists of the East, died from poison contracted in experiments.

News of his death, which occurred Saturday, was revealed by the report of Timothy P. Leary, medical examiner, who said that the doctor's system had been contaminated by chemicals he was using in his experiments.

Dr. Glover had been working with a solution containng cyanide just prior to his death, and a cyanide reaction was evident in the autopsy, Dr. Leary reported.

Dr. Leary expressed the opinion that Dr. Glover might have dropped a cyanide solution on his hand and, without realizing it, later brushed it across his mouth.

Dr. Glover recently told associates at the laboratory that he believed he had made an important discovery in the treatment of cancer by means of a new serum called lipoids, made from animal fats. His work had been rewarded with a medal from the Belgian Research Fellowship.

Dr. Glover was born in Gorham, Me., 29 years ago.

Injured Man in Arctic Treated By Wireless From Ottawa

Ottawa—The short-wave wireless system connecting the office of Commander C. P. Edwards, director of the radio branch of the Department of Marine with its many stations in the Arctic, recently played a part in carrying succor to an injured seaman on a Grimsby trawler, operating in Davis Strait, between Greenland and Baffin Island.

The master of the trawler St. Keverne sent a wireless to the operator of the Department of Marine station at Resolution, asking for instructions in treating "a man with half his scalp torn and fractured jaw, having been washed through a scupper door." The message was forwarded to the director of the radio branch here, and in an hour a message had been relayed back to the trawler skipper advising him what treatment to apply and referring him to the necessary pages in the medical manual carried by every vessel commander for such emergencies.

A later message from the trawler stated that the St. Keverne heading for Reykjavik, Iceland, intended to land the injured man, whose name was not mentioned.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson
Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 7

Very frequently in Auction and Contract a player has a suit which is strong enough to take all the tricks but one, and the way or the time to lose that trick becomes a puzzling proposition. Whole books might be written on this subject, but there are a certain few situations that come up so frequently that they should be thoroughly analyzed and understood. As a general proposition, the trick to lose is the first one. Suppose the dealer has bid one no trump, you as second hand bid two hearts, third and fourth hands pass and the dealer bids two no trump; what should you lead with the following hand:

Hearts—A, Q, 10, 7, 6
Clubs—8, 5, 4, 3, 2
Diamonds—K, 7
Spades—10

The proper lead with this hand is the seven of hearts. The bidding indicates that the dealer has at least three hearts to the King or King Jack, so that if you lose the first trick and your partner later obtains the lead, a lead through the dealer's hand will enable you to win the balance of the heart tricks. Suppose, however, you decide to open the trey of clubs and your partner later obtains the lead. Even if he now leads the hearts to you, the declarer must still make a heart trick. In other words, one lead through the declarer's hand is not enough and the chances are that your partner will not obtain the lead more than once. If you must lose one trick in your suit, let it be the first and not the second or third.

Almost the same proposition confronts the declarer when he is playing a no trump hand. Suppose his dummy has a suit such as A, K, 7, 6, 2 or A, K, 7, 6, 5, 2, only two in his own hand and no re-entry. If he wants to establish this suit, he must lose the first trick and hope for the drop on the next two rounds. This method of playing such suits is called "ducking." Other suits in the dummy where the first trick should be lost, if no re-entry, are A, Q, 10, 7, 6 or A, Q, 7, 6, 2. In the first case, finesse the ten of the suit on the first round and, if it fails to force the king, finesse the queen on the second round. In the second case, make no effort to win the first trick. Your only hope to establish such a suit is to find three to the king on your left. Lose the first trick and finesse the queen on the second round. The same rule applies to a suit such as A, J, 10, 7, 6. Play the ten on the first round and finesse the jack on the second.

Still another angle comes up frequently. Suppose you are playing a no trump hand and hold only one stopper in your adversary's suit, for example, A, 4, 2 of clubs. With this type of suit, hold up your ace until the third round in the hope that your other adversary hasn't more than three of the suit and cannot lead to his partner. Of course, there are many exceptions to this situation, but, as a general proposition, it's good policy to lose the first and second rounds of an adversary's suit if you have only one stopper.

There's still another angle. Suppose the opponent on your right has bid one no trump and your partner has obtained the lead and has deliberately led up to a K, J, 7 of clubs, for example, in dummy. Such a lead should tell you that after he loses the first trick he has all the tricks in that suit if you can obtain the lead and come through. In other words, by losing the first trick he has placed himself in a position to win the rest of the tricks in that suit when you obtain the lead.

Much more could be written on this particular subject, but the readers of these articles will improve their game considerably by a study of the examples given. Learn to lose the first trick, if your suit is not set up, not the second or third.

Volcanoes and Gold

How study of volcanoes may help the world to find the new gold mines is suggested by remarks of Mr. H. A. Powers of the United States Geological Survey in a recent announcement by the Hawaiian Volcano Research Association of Honolulu. Many of the world's deposits of gold and other precious metals have been found. Mr. Powers states, in connection with the kinds of rock which volcanoes usually eject in the later stages of their lives, quite different from the rocks ejected in volcanic youth. The volcanoes of Hawaii, one of which is erupting, are still youthful and throw out the kinds of lava which harden into the black rock called basalt. If the Hawaiian volcanoes follow the usual rule, this basalt lava gradually will be repaced by kinds of lighter color, differing also in chemical composition, and hardening to rocks called trachytes. This is the usual history of volcanoes everywhere and all of the basalts from youthful volcanoes are of much the same chemical composition all over the earth. For some reason which geologists do not understand, it is the lighter colored lavas from older volcanoes which seem to be associated with valuable deposits of gold and other metals, probably brought up by the lavas from deep in the earth's crust. If geologists knew exactly why the volcanoes emit these different kinds of lava at different ages clues might be obtained about where to search for mineral deposits still unfound or even about how to make volcanoes grow old faster and disgorge their previous metals that much sooner.

Report Shows Increase of Radio Users in Germany

Berlin.—German radio users increased by 500,000 in 1931, bringing the present total to close to 4,000,000, according to the annual report of the Federal Postoffice, which also manages Germany's telegraph, telephone and wireless services. Every radio must be licensed, the subscriber paying 50c a month. About 275,000 subscribers, however, were relieved of even this small fee. They are war cripples, the blind, hospitals and unemployed persons.

The Postal Banking Department also shows an increase in the number of accounts—1,014,000, against 992,356 in 1930—but a decrease of $4,500,000 in the volume of business, which amounted to $30,000,000.

The number of telegrams declined 18½ per cent., air mail 17.4, parcel post 9.8, and money orders 8.1. Air mail was carried approximately 21,000 miles over ninety-four lines. For the Winter season—November through February—only twenty-three lines operated.

Retrenchment Is Necessary Municipally and Governmentally

Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Price, Attorney-General for Ontario, in addressing a meeting of fifteen hundred business men in the city of Toronto, in the Royal York Hotel, enunciated the policy of the Ontario Government with reference to retrenchment in expenditure, and pointed out that retrenchment was necessary in Municipal Expenditures as well as Governmental Expenditures. He also stated that in the retrenchment being enacted by the Government, members of the Cabinet would reduce their salaries, while it was also suggested that the Legislative Members indemnities be also reduced.

Colonel Price's speech came at a most opportune time, and he was warmly complimented, not only on his subject matter, but also on the clear, concise way in which he put his suggestions to his audience.

Here are a few of the high-lights from Colonel Price's speech

"The great prosperity in Canada and in Ontario during the past thirty years has spurred us all to evolve and create, explore and develop. Not only has it been so federally and provincially, it has run through the whole warp of our industrial achievements.

"While federally and provincially finances are in a sound position, where all interest payments and refunding calls have from time to time been met and will be kept on a proper basis, yet in a number of municipalities, especially those which have extended very rapidly, where the population has increased and so many improvements had to be made in a short period, difficulties have arisen often in collecting the taxes and in meeting the obligations.

"We are not asking the municipality to do something that the Province is not willing to try. In other words we will set an example. For some time past there has been a Committee of Council, composed of the Treasurer, Messrs. Finlayson, Macaulay and Price, going into the ordinary expenditure of the Province with the idea, if possible, of cutting $5,000,000 off our ordinary Expenditure for 1932. The aim of this Committee has been to cut down expenditure so as to not throw men out of employment but at the same t. ie retrench.

"The Government has had the approval of the Manufacturers Association and the Boards of Trade generally speaking, the Press of the Province are in favour of active and positive retrenchment, which means the cutting down of expenditure. I believe our Opposition in the House will favor action of this kind. It is not so much a political matter as a national matter which needs assiduous and continuous attention.

"The Government, however, are very much in earnest. If cuts are to be made they must be uniform. Almost every service must be taken into consideration. The salaries of the Government members and the heads of all Commissions will come within this category. There is nothing that the Government will ask any person or service, paid and maintained by the Province, to do that it is not prepared to do itself.

"We have waited to see whether there would be a more precipitate upturn, but we have eventually come to the conclusion that it would be a very helpful thing for the Province as well as the municipalities to cut expenditures as far as they can and reduce taxation. The citizens themselves have for the past two years been retrenching and saving money; they must have saved up a very considerable amount of money, waiting, ready and anxious to go into new ventures and create new business, provided there is the necessary impetus. All Governments and municipalities too have felt that during this time it was impossible for them to make any reduction that might create more unemployment.

"The time, however, has been reached when, without interfering with the employment throughout the Province, without hurting business in any way, the average citizen should be made to feel that his sacrifice during the past two years, enabling him to save, should be rewarded. He must be able to go forward with confidence, feeling that there will be no further exactions on the part of the Governmental or Municipal authority. No new taxes.

"There has been a general call for retrenchment. The Province is retrenching. The Government calls on the public for co-operation, not for further demands for expenditure and criticism where cuts are made. We must have the utmost patriotic co-operation in order to achieve effective results.

Wild Geese at Night

(From Voices)

The night was clouds and winds and rain,
Fingers tried the window pane.
The out-of-doors was wholly evil,
One might believe still in the Devil.
Mschievous and purposeless,
The earth rocked with unholy stress

Suddenly, clear over all,
Came the reassuring call
Of mariners whose only chart
Is an aching, hungry heart,
Whose only sails are grown so near
Their blood beats in them all the year.
The sailors with the necks so made
That they can use them like a blade
Were traveling without a light
Chaos and the lawless night.

And people hearing them returned
To the slumber they had earned.
It could not be there was no goal,
No plan to pattern, not a soul
Sitting calm somewhere above
With palms above some lamp of love
And planning new and keener things
When these exquisite pairs of wings
He had made so long and right
Helped one another in their flight.

With ticking of the twigs beneath my feet.

Sheltered from snow..

CONSTIPATION
Banished for 20 Years
No one could have had more experience of constipation than this man. His method of correcting the trouble would surely put right anybody who suffers in a similar way.
"I am now approaching my 49th birthday and have used Kruschen Salts for many years. As a boy and youth I suffered at frequent times agonies from constipation. This was, after a time, somewhat relieved by a special pill compounded to a prescription, but which, at times, had a weakening effect. On someone's recommendation I tried a bottle of Kruschen Salts, and since then—a matter of at least 20 years ago—have used nothing else. My daily dose I take in hot water at 7.45 a.m." —E. A. D.
The six salts in Kruschen are Nature's own prescription for keeping the organs of elimination working properly—gently but surely expelling all poisonous waste matter every day.
Start on "the little daily dose" of Kruschen to-morrow and so take the first step along the royal road to perfect health.

Gratefully, Mrs. C. writes: "The first dose of your wonderful Carter's Little Liver Pills gave me great relief after every medicine I tried failed."

When PAIN Comes
WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.
One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.
Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store. (Made in Canada.)

Children Left Alone

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have responded greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quiet-ness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved upon his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again tak-ing up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great econ-omic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 229 College St., Toronto.

William George Watson, well-known throughout Ontario, as the grower of fine fruits, died at his home, Silver Birch Fruit Farm, Dixie, at the age of 78 years. For the past 70 years he resided on this rich tract of farming land and it was only last February, when with fifteen grand-children present, he and his wife, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Gutheridge, of Carlton Village, celebrat-ed their 50th wedding anniversary. Death, coming peacefully Sunday, severed the wedlock that held so happ-ily for the past fifty-one years.

Seventy years ago, Mr. Watson came with his parents from Grahams-ville to Dixie, where they took up re-sidence on the third line east, just north of Dundas Street. Two years prior to his marriage, George pur-chased land on the Middle Road, which he cultivated by hand and there to-day stands the fruits of his hard work, one of the finest fruit farms in On-tario.

Of the seven children born to Mr. and Mrs. George Watson, six survive him. They are: William R., Charles E., Fred J., Melville H., and Dr. George H., all of whom live within five miles of their father's homestead.

Mr. Watson was a devoted member of Bethesda United Church, and prior to union, he was recording steward for 29 years. Marking his retirement on that event, the church presented him with an illuminated address.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The Community Club held their last regular meeting at the home of Mrs. W. Sandford. Though the clay roads were impassible most of the mem-bers managed to get there, by a round about way, and every officer was pre-sent.

After the business part of the meet-ing, which was rather lengthy, was over, we sang our closing song and the rest of the afternoon was given over to amusements. Mrs. Hustler gave the Club an old-fashioned gram-mar lesson on prepositions learned many years ago, when she was a little girl in school. This was much ap-plauded and she responded with a solo which was also appreciated.

Mrs. S. Cordingly then conducted a "Swift Dress" contest, which was ex-tremely funny. Miss Irene McCarron and Mrs. W. Workman won the prizes.

The hostess served the dainty club lunch assisted by Miss Irene McCar-ron.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. John Bonham, meeting to start at half past two.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

ISLINGTON

While there are a number out of work and some on short time, there does not appear to be much real dis-tress in this community. During the festive Christmas season when special collections were taken in churches and societies to provide clothing and food, the chief difficulty (and it was a for-tunate difficulty) was in locating needy families. True quite a few were provided for but the number was not at all in proportion to the gen-eral cry of hard times heard in many places. Often the most deserving are the hardest to aid, because, through a foolish pride they would prefer to go hungry, rather than let their neigh-bors know about it. However, the winter is not over yet, and the worst pinch will be between now and the middle of April. Whether it is a good sign or not, the bowling alleys, pic-ture shows, euchres and dances seem to be fairly well patronized. While this is so, cases of distress should not go unprovided for.

At the annual meeting of our volun-teer fire brigade, a good report was given of the work done during the past year. Chief Mitchell and his men are to be commended for their whole-souled generous services. Mr. J. H. Portch was re-elected trustee.

Despite the fact that Islington Pres-byterian Church has been without a settled pastor since last April, en-couraging reports were presented at their annual meeting on Wednesday night. A total of $2116.20 was col-lected from all sources, of which $410 was for missions. Managers elected were W. A. Barber, E. Menzies, A. Pearson, V. Ormiston, J. H. Beam-ish, J. W. Dodds and Wm. Cheyne were elected trustees. Mr. J. H. Beam-ish, who organized the Sunday School nine years ago, and who has been its superintendent since its inception, de-clined re-election, suggesting the hon-our be passed around. Mr. W. Jack was then elected Supt., with Mr. Douglas Hill as Assistant. Rev. Sam-uel Lundie, of Port Credit presided and the ladies served luncheon at the close.

EXTRACTS OF ANNUAL REPORT OF PEEL COUNTY CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

The annual meeting of Peel County Children's Aid Society was held in the Court House, Brampton, on Tuesday, Jan. 19th, at 4 p.m., the President, Mr. T. W. Duggan, in the chair. There were eight women and four men pres-ent. Four of these women were rep-resenting Women's Institutes in dif-ferent parts of the county, and nine Institutes sent in membership fees for 1932. This we hope will mean greater interest throughout the county in our work.

The secretary-treasurer's report was read and adopted. Inspector G. F. Thompson gave a splendid report of the work he has accomplished during the year and explained his manifold duties very clearly for the benefit of our new members.

The institute representatives agreed to donate $15 which together with $10 already donated will pay Peel county's share of the radio for the Gordon Home which we feel sure will be a great source of pleasure to the chil-dren in the home.

The following officers were appoint-ed for 1932:

President, Mr. T. W. Duggan; 1st vice-pres., Mrs. J. W. Hewetson; 2nd vice-pres., Mrs. I. J. Ardagh; 3rd vice-pres., Mrs. S. Deeves; secretary-trea-surer, Mrs. F. Vanderlip.

Representatives to joint board—Mr. Duggan and Mrs. Vanderlip. Execu-tive committee composed of members of organization. Seven fees were paid in.

Inspector's Report

The annual report presented by G. F. Thompson, Inspector for Peel and Halton Counties, was as follows:

Again it is my privilege to render a report of the year's work, although it is quite impossible to give full details or describe the different problems and family difficulties where children are involved. Nevertheless I shall en-deavor to give a brief resume of my year's work.

In mentioning the number of inves-tigations made, complaints received, problems solved, conveys only in a limited way the work and time in-volved, the judgment and patience re-quired and, unfortunately, not always resulting in a satisfactory settlement.

However, in reviewing the year's work I can but feel that my labors have not been in vain. To trace the history of an unwanted or neglected child, rescued from unworthy parents, through the different stages of recon-struction and placed eventually in a foster home, in a great many cases legally adopted, is indeed a great sat-isfaction to one engaged in social ser-vice work. As is well known it is the object of the society to keep families together in their own homes if at all possible, as after all, this is the na-tural environment for any child. Be a home ever so humble, if the parents have the natural love of a parent for their child and the right sense of duty, that is home and the proper place for the child.

As a result of my frequent inves-tigations and visits in various homes throughout the counties of Peel & Halton I have assisted many families in improving their home conditions, frequently all that is necessary is a visit from a neutral party with help-ful advice and a warning.

During the year it has been neces-sary to have four children made per-manent wards of the society, three of whom have since been placed in foster homes. Under the temporary com-mitment clause of the Children's Pro-tection Act which allows children to be made temporary wards for any period up to twelve months, eleven were committeed, three being allowed to remain with their parents under supervision and eight are at present in the shelter.

There are at present twenty-three children in the shelter, thirty-five dif-ferent children have been cared for in the home during the year, making a total of 6087 days shelter provided.

Twelve wards have been placed in foster homes during the year. I find it exceedingly difficult to place chil-dren in free foster homes and the ma-jority of applications are for paying boarders. In cases where shelters be-come overcrowded it is frequently ne-cessary to board children in private homes while awaiting adoption. But in our own case so long as there is ample accommodation this would not be practicable.

Thirteen wards have been released from the care of the society, eight having attained their majority, two married, two legally adopted and one released by request.

During the past fall it was my pleasure to be present at the marriage of one of our former wards. It was gratifying to note the good will this ward held towards the society who had been her guardian for a number of years.

As a variation from this happy event I was summoned to appear at the divorce proceedings of the parents of one child who had previously been made a ward due to the improper be-haviour of the mother.

Through a charge having been laid under Sec. 215 of the Criminal Code (corrupting children) the mother (a widow) of three children was put on suspended sentence and the man in-volved was given a heavy fine or the option of a gaol sentence. In all, fifty-four cases were handled in court.

One of the most interesting phases of the work is visiting wards in foster homes, in most cases well cared for and contented. Only in rare cases is it found necessary to remove a child. One hundred and sixteen visits have been made to wards, this in itself tak-ing considerable time when you con-sider that they are spread over two counties.

Adoption Act

The work under the Legal Adoption Act is a most pleasant feature of the activities of a children's aid officer. To see a homeless child finally establish-ed in the hearts and home of adoptive parents duly approved by the courts is a great joy. Through our present Adoption Act an adopted child enjoys every privilege and right of a natural child. Our services in the counties are not confined to wards alone but are available to any resident of Peel or Halton free of charge. During the year ten adoptions were completed.

Unmarried Parents Act

Although not in the best interest of the work to quote facts relative to local enforcement of this act, never-theless the problem is before us, and it must be met. There have been twenty-eight new cases dealt with in the past year, and seventeen old cases followed up. It is strongly recommend-ed that the mother should have the care of the child in its earliest years. Later, in a great many cases, it is ad-visable to have the child removed and given a new start in life. Where pos-sible the fathers of these children are required by agreement or court order to pay towards its maintenance. This necessarily entails a great deal of work, the recording of monthly pay-ments and reporting of all proceedings to the provincial officer, which is re-quired by law.

Accounts are held in trust for thirteen wards, ranging from $1.59 to $519.71, a total of $1891.41 being on deposit.

Other statistics are as follows:

Applications for children, 56; chil-dren brought to shelter (not wards) 11; children returned to parents (not wards), 7; children involved during the year, 174; made permanent wards, 4; made temporary wards, 11; sent to industrial school, 1; complaints re-ceived, 119; letters received, 666; let-ters written, 807; investigations made, 155; meetings addressed, 16; miles covered, 8560; office interviews, 2... phone interviews, 400; court appear-ances, 54; foster homes heard from, 186; wards placed out, 12; wards re-turned to shelter, 7; visits made to wards, 116; warnings given, 60.

Legal Opinion: E. G. Long, K.C., Toronto.

These Debentures are direct obligations of the Province of Ontario, and are payable, principal and interest, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Province. The proceeds of this issue will be applied in the funding of temporary borrowings for Hydro-Electric Power development and transmission, highways construction and other purposes.

The Province of Ontario is the wealthiest and most populous Province in the Dominion of Canada. Abundance of water powers, excellent railroad and highway transportation facilities and a plentiful supply of raw materials have fostered a steady expansion both industrially and commercially. Ontario leads in mineral production, and in the volume of manufactured products; it ranks first in value of field crops and second in the value of forest products.

We offer these Debentures, if, as and when issued and accepted by us, and subject to approval of Counsel.

It is expected that Debentures in Interim form will be ready for delivery about February 1 1932.

Shot a Pheasant Fined Fifty Dollars

Port Hope, Jan. 22—Pleading guilty to a charge of shooting a pheasant, in county police court before Magistrate W. H. Floyd in Cobourg yesterday, Ernest Fox, Cobourg, was fined $50. and costs. T. F. Hall, K. C., Fox' council, urged that minimum fine in view of the fact that it was the accused's first appearance on any charge.

The magistrate was not inclined to take a lenient view and pointed out that the pheasants had been stocked in this district at considerable expense and effort by both the government and individuals and at first intimated that he might impose the maximum fine of $100. and costs. He stressed the fact that the accused had not broken the law because he was in need of the pheasant for food and warned Fox that any future infractions would be severely penalized.

To Enforce Gun Laws

"It is not the people who co-operated with the government in stocking pheasants in this districts that are killing them," Game Warden R. N. Hills said, "but persons who gave neither effort or shared the expense." Mr. Hills also expressed the opinion that young boys are responsible for killing a number of pheasants and intimated that he intended to strictly inforce the provisions of the criminal code which prevent persons under 16 being the owner of a firearm. Persons supplying amunition to a minor are equally responsible, he pointed out.

The late D. H. McCaugherty

The Passing of a Highly Respected Citizen of Streetsville

The Community was shocked last week when word came that David McCaugherty, a highly respected citizen of this county for 47 years, had suddenly passed away at Wellesley Hospital, Toronto. Mr. McCaugherty went to the hospital for an operation which was not considered serious, reports came that he was making encouraging progress, but unforseen complications arose which made it impossible for his physical frame to overcome. He was in his 68th year.

Mr. McCaugherty came from Kingston almost half a century ago, it was soon recognized that a man of sane judgement and marked ability had come to the district. He was a dairy farmer, and his farm became one of the finest in the County. He entered Municipal Politics about 20 years ago; was Reeve of Toronto Township for 4 years and in 1918 was chose Warden of Peel County. He was an active member of Streetsville High School; President of Toronto Twp. The funeral service was held at his home on Friday last at 2.30 p.m. and was one of the largest seen in this district. His Minister, the Rev. Geo. H. Purchase, of Streetsville United Church was in charge and was kindly assisted by Revs. McCree and Perry of the Presbyterian and Anglican Churches, respectively.

The Pallbearers were Edward Orr, E. E. King, C. H. Falconer, J. K. Featherstone, J. D. Steen and Wm. Couse. Interment was in Streetsville Cemetery.

Since the storm the Hydro current in town has shown many variations. It is pretty hard on radios and the transformers of the machines in a number of cases have blown out. This is an expensive breakage. In one case the current showed 140 volts, a big variation from 110, which is the amount that should be shown.—Banner and Times, Brampton.

LET US SMILE

—It was their first target practice. The officer had worn his army patience thin over these quardsmen. They just would not fire volleys. In digust he finally belowed, "Fire at random." A rookie from Duck Hill yelled. "Which one is he?"

"I tell you I won't have this room," protested the old lady to the bellboy "I ain't going to pay good money for a pig-pen with a measly little folding bed in it. You think just because I'm from the country—"

Disgusted the boy cut her short. "Get in lady. Get in. This ain't your room. This is the elevator."

A few weeks ago I told you about the Scholarship Opportunities which are being offered by the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild sponsored by the Fisher Body Corporation division of General Motors.

This week we publish a picture of two Toronto Scouts of the 38th Toronto Troop, who are out to win one of the prizes, of which there is a total value of $75,000. These two boys are seen at work on their model of the State Coach of the Emperor Napoleon of France, in the showroom window of Messrs. Bray-Nash, Ltd., of Bay Street, Toronto.

I hope that some Lone Scouts are entering this competition and taking advantage of the unique opportunities that it affords. If you have not already done so you can enrol in the competition and obtain full particulars by applying to any General Motors dealer in your neighborhood.

Free Fishing For Scouts

Free fishing privileges in Big Whitefish Lake, surrounding Mystery Island, have been granted by the Hon. Hector Laferte, Minister of Fisheries for Quebec. This makes it unnecessary for Scouts or Lone Scouts of other Provinces to purchase Quebec Fishing Licences when visiting Mystery Island

A Flag From the London Cenotaph

One of the signal honours conferred upon the Canadian Scout contingent at the last world Scout gathering in England was the presentation of a large white ensign that had flown from the Cenotaph in Whitehall. The flag now has an honoured place at Dominion Scout Headquarters, Ottawa

Summer Camp, 1932

One Lone Scout has already sent in his application to attend the Summer Camp which we are planning for this year. Will you be there too? Start that Camp Fund right now!

Scouts Thanked in Parliament

The Boy Scouts of England were thanked in the House of Commons by the Secretary for the Dominions, the Hon. J. H. Thomas, for valuable services rendered in connection with the "Buy British" cam: :n of the Empire Marketing Board.

The Value of Scout Training

It is recorded that the first place among 250 competitors for 20 apprenticeships in the Royal Air Force was won by a 15-year-old Scout who is a Patrol Leader in a Troop at Coventry, England.

We hope that Lone Scouts are taking full advantage of the opportunity which is in their hands of making full use of their Scout Programme which is of such assistance to them in the development of their faculties, both mental and physical.

And now read the following paragraph:

Where Deaf and Blind Pair Off

Blind boys and deaf boys pair off for the test work in the Scout Troop at the Vancouver School for the Blind and Deaf. The blind boys act as "ears for two" and the deaf Scouts are "eyes." Surprisingly good work is done, Scout games are played, and the boys have greatly benefitted in mental outlook.

Even the physically handicapped boys make good use of the Scout Programme you see, and in Toronto, the Robert Louis Stevenson Troop, attached to the Hospital for Sick Children, is flourishing, with the majority of its members in bed. Some of them, however, have been out in the Hospital grounds in wheel chairs to pass their Second Class Cooking Test.

When we read such things as the above, doesn't it make us feel that we, who enjoy good health and the full use of all our senses, should use them to the fullest degree to benefit ourselves whilst we can do so? If a boy can be a keen Scout under such difficulties, how much greater is your obligation to carry out your Scout Promise to the letter?

"Lone E" will be glad to hear from boys between 12 and 18 years of age who cannot join a regular Troop of Scouts and who wish to be enrolled as Lone Scouts. Write to the Lone Scout Department Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, and ask for full particulars, which will be gladly sent to you.—"Lone E."

Zero Weathers Hits Canadian West

Temperatures From 50 Below Zero to 10 Below Reported

Winnipeg.—Prairie Canada shivered over the week-end in the worst cold spell of the present Winter. Clear from the Rocky Mountains to the Great Lakes temperatures registered far below the zero mark.

Blown out of the far northwest on the wings of a high wind the cold spell hit most deeply in Northern Alberta and Saskatchewan. Hudson Hope in the Peace River district of Northern British Columbia reported a temperature of 50 below zero. Points in the Alberta Peace River area registered 48, 45 and 44 below.

Edmonton started Sunday off with 30 below but a brief respite brought the mercury up to 14 below in the early afternoon. From then on, however, the order was more cold.

A brisk wind accompanied the frigid spell in Central and Northern Saskatchewan. The mercury dropped rapidly at Saskatoon and was close to 30 below shortly after sundown Sunday.

The previous low mark for this year was 17 below. No relief is in sight and the forecast is "decidedly cold."

In Southern Alberta the sky was clear and only a light wind blew but temperatures of 22 to 28 below were the order.

Manitoba got the extreme cold a little later than points further west. Winnipeg thermometers were well below zero on Sunday, however, and a strong biting wind added to the severity of the weather. Towards night it became steadily colder and the mercury slid down past the 20-below mark.

Depression Is Un-British Declares Prince of Wales

London.—Depression and apathy are the Devil's own, the Prince of Wales told 10,000 boys and girls in Albert Hall last week at a meeting arranged by the National Council for Social Service.

"They're not English," he cried, "away with them!" and the roof rang with cheers.

"Emerson said a good many years ago that the Englishman is the one who stands firmest in his shoes," said the Prince, "and I know this is true of the rising generation of today.

"So far as I am concerned, many paths in life are closed to me. Much that I would like to do I cannot, but I have tried to bring the people of the Empire closer together. I have had my failures, I know, but in these years with few precedents to guide us, to have had no failures is to have attempted nothing.

"There is a danger that some people are getting too used to the present critical situation," he said. "It's no use waiting for that doubtful thing 'a good time coming.' We have got to fight, and here I pin my faith to the younger generation, to keep England 'a bulwark for the cause of men,' to keep our great heritage in trust for those who come after.

"We have before us to-day a world sick with fearful doubt and weary with repeated disappointment—a world of troubled nations whose vital need is courageous faith in each other. It is an era of potential plenty, when confidence should be supreme, yet we see in every land widespread distress and perplexity. The enemies to-day are depression and apathy. Let us attack them with two of our old-fashioned characteristics, good sense and good humour."

Powers Rush Troops to China

Britain and U.S. Take Sweeping Precautionary Measures Fleet Concentrated

London.—The Government on Sunday ordered additional troops rushed to Shanghai.

A battalion of infantry and a battery of artillery will leave Hong Kong at once on a warship. These troops are being sent in response to a request for reinforcements from Brigadier-General George Fleming, British commander in the international settlement.

Already the British have in Shanghai a battalion of the Scots Fusiliers, a battalion of Lincolns and a battalion of Wiltshires.

The naval forces on duty there consist of the cruiser Cornwall, the sloop Sandwich and two gunboats. The cruiser Kent is expected to arrive from Batavia shortly and the cruiser Suffolk was due from Hong Kong today.

A Foreign Office communique announcing the naval movements said the decision to send reinforcements was made at a meeting at No. 10 Downing Street, participated in by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, Hon. Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary; Sir Bolton Eyres-Monsell, First Lord of the Admiralty; Sir George Milne, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, and Sir Robert Vansittart, permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

During the day Ray Atherton, United States charge d'affaires, conferred with Mr. MacDonald a number of times at the Prime Minister's Downing Street residence. Sir John Simon was called from his sick bed to participate in the principal conference.

URGE A NEUTRAL ZONE.

The foreign office said the Government was urging the Japanese and Chinese governments to accept a scheme for establishing a neutral zone between the two armies at Shanghai which should be occupied by neutral troops. A foreign office communique said:

"At a meeting at Shanghai which was presided over by His Majesty's consul-general, and at which the American consul-general also was present, together with the Japanese and Chinese commanders, it was proposed to establish a neutral zone between the Chinese and Japanese troops to be occupied by the troops of neutral powers which have forces in the international settlement.

"His Majesty's consul-general has now been informed that necessary arrangements should be made for the British troops to co-operate if the neutral zone can be established, and that the United States government is being requested to take similar action.

WASHINGTON SENDS TROOPS.

Washington.—With the co-operation of Great Britain, United States military and naval reinforcements to protect foreign citizens and property in Shanghai were ordered under the personal direction of President Hoover.

The United States transport, Chaumont, will leave Manilla with 1,000 regular United States army troops and marines, to take posts with the 1,300 marines already on guard there.

Even before this decision was reached at a White House conference, the navy ordered its Asiatic fleet to head from Manilla as a move for safety or evacuation of United States citizens.

These drastic moves by the United States had the co-operation of Great Britain. The President acted after London had sent word it would increase its forces at Shanghai by three eight-inch gun cruisers, a battalion of infantry and a battery of artillery. This done, Britain will have 3,000 men ready to act.

Another protest had gone forward during the day to Tokio against its course that had lead to death and destruction in the native city of Shanghai, and martial law in the international quarter.

As the army and navy were sending their orders to the Philippines, another urgent message went forward from the State Department telling foreigners at Shanghai assistance was on the way.

CHINESE WAITING.

Nanking, China.—Informed quarters here expressed a feeling that the impending arrival of British and United States troops at Shanghai might avert a Chines declaration of war on Japan.

The Chinese Government decided to declare war before it left for Honanfu to establish a temporary seat of Government there, these quarters said, but the decision was held in abeyance to see how the situation at Shanghai developed.

Fast Mail Planes Ordered By Britain

London—The Air Ministry have announced plans whereby it hopes to double the speed of air mail delivery on all Empire sky routes.

The Ministry placed an order with Boulton and Paul, Ltd., builders of the famous Royal Air Force high speed bombers, for a new type of all-metal twin-engined plane capable of a cruising speed of 200 miles an hour and a service ceiling of 12,000 feet.

This machine, it was said, would be the forerunner of a fleet of similar craft which would carry two pilots and 1,000 pounds of mail. Each machine would have a cruising radius of 1,000 miles with full load.

Operation of the fleet of new planes would bring a complete and radical change of air mail schedules, halving the times between all points on the Empire routes, the Ministry said. The new planes would not carry passengers, but would be used exclusively for mail.

Province of Ontario Bonds Oversubscribed by $39,000,000

Eager Response of Investing Public Convincing Proof of Confidence in Government

Toronto.—A record for rapidity of public response was established last week when the Province of Ontario $25,000,0000 bond issue was oversubscribed two and a half times in a deluge of buying orders from all parts of the Dominion.

In less than three hours after the bonds went on sale, the investment houses and banks handling the issue reported the entire sale of both the long and short-term debentures.

Issues Snapped Up

Expressing confidence in the province and Government by their eagerness to participate, the investing public reacted to the favorable interest rate of six per cent. by snapping up as much of both issues as they could afford.

The $5,000,000, six per cent. three-year bonds brought subscriptions amounting to $18,750,000, and the $20,000,000 five and one-half per cent. 15-year bonds resulted in subscriptions totalling more than $45,000,000.

Despite the fact that the Government has obtained two and a half times the amount it set out to raise, not a dollar more than $25,000,000 will be accepted, according to Hon. E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer.

Confessing that he had never doubted the success of the loan, the amazing response of the public was something he had not anticipated, Hon. Mr. Dunlop declared that the reception afforded this offering was another convincing proof of the confidence of Canadian investors in their own securities and further emphasized the high credit standing of the province.

"But the Government has no intention of accepting any part of the oversubscription," said the provincial treasurer, when informed that reports in financial circles were to the effect that the Government would increase the loan as a result of the magnificent response. "We went into the market for $25,000,000 and that is all we intend to take."

Allotment Necessary

Mr. Dunlop said that the public response to the offering would necessitate an allotment being made of the bond issue. Investors who purchased large blocks of bonds will thus have their holdings reduced in order that wider distribution may be obtained.

One of the most satisfactory aspects of the bond sale from the Government's point of view was the wide distribution of the issues among the investing public. The small investor participated in the purchase to a greater extent than at any previous time in the history of the province, it was stated.

"Orders were received in substantial volume from dealers large and small throughout the province and from points west as far as Vancouver and east to Halifax," said Mr. Dunlop. "Out of the large list of dealers participating in the issue in Ontario and the other eastern provinces, over 95 per cent. have reported subscriptions for the loan."

In a statement accompanying announcement of the success of the loan, Mr. Dunlop said taking up of the loan would be reflected in a reduction of the temporary borrowing of the province for Hydro-Electric Power development and transmission, assistance to rural Hydro lines, highway construction and other purposes.

Small Amount From U.S.

Only a small percentage of the investing money came from the United States, Mr. Dunlop went on to say. He had made inquiries to ascertain how much of the money came from United States insurance companies—which are the big bond buyers in that country—and was informed that little came from that source. Mr. Dunlop admitted that the prevailing rates of exchange provided an incentive for United States investments in Canadian bonds. But to the best of his knowledge, by far the greater portion of the issue was taken up by Canadian capital.

"The amount of American capital was not very substantial" he declared. "I don't think it was a very big amount."

Cost of Living Drop Slows Up In U.S.

Washington.—The cost of living in the United States fell 9.3 per cent. between December, 1930, and December, 1931, according to the recent semi-annual survey made in 32 cities by the bureau of labor statistics.

The decrease for the second six months of the year, however, did not keep pace with that of the first. The cost of living was just 3 per cent. lower in December, 1931, than in the preceding June.

The index number for the cost of living for December, 1931, was 145.8 based on the cost in 1913 as 100.

Standard of Living In Canada Holds

Lower Retail Prices Help Average Family's Daily Bill of Fare

Ottawa.—The standard of living in Canada continues on a high level, according to a report of the Department of Trade on the annual per capita consumption of food. The retail price of food, however, has greatly decreased in the past year, the report adds. Available reports for 1931 show that the average daily bill of fare for a family of five in Canada was approximately as follows: Two and a half pounds of meat, seven ounces of bakers' bread, five eggs, six and a half ounces of butter, nearly an ounce of cheese, five cents worth of canned goods and nearly three ounces of confectionery.

Total consumption of ales, beer and porter for the year was 58,094,552 gallons, or 5.35 gallons per capita; spirits, 4,376,336 gallons or .45 gallons per capita, and wine, 6,713,006 gallons, or .67 gallons per capita.

More British Steel Imported by Canada

London.—Julian Piggott, manager of the British Steel Export Association, told the Royal Empire Society at a recent luncheon that while United States steel producers had provided Canadian consumers with unrivalled service, it spoke much for Canadian loyalty to the Old Country and to the care paid to execution of orders by British steelmakers that the British share of Canada's imports of heavy steel had risen from three per cent. in 1925 to 25 per cent. last year.

Mr. Piggott, who has just returned from a six months' visit to Canada, expressed the hope that when Empire trade questions were discussed at Ottawa the British and Canadian steelmakers would put forward an agreed tariff policy. British makers were already able to formulate concrete proposals, he said.

"The tide of Imperial sentiment is Canada is running at the full," Mr. Piggott added. "The foundation of Imperial rationalization lies in the economic sphere."

Miami Beach, Fla.—Gar Wood, veteran United States speedboat racer, recently set a mark of 110.785 miles an hour in his Miss America IX, to claim the world's speedboat record.

On the second of his runs Wood pushed his long 24-cylinder boat at a rate of 110.49 miles an hour southward over the measured nautical mile course in Indian Creek, following a northbound run at a speed of 111.08 miles an hour. Elapsed time was 27.52 seconds.

The average of the timed runs in each direction was 110.785 miles an hour and exceeded the record of 110.223 miles an hour set July 9, 1931, by Kaye Don.

If you can smile before breakfast it is very likely that you can smile the rest of the day. Love at first sight has a great precedent; Adam's for Eve. Many a man has lost his fight by stopping to pat himself on the back. Any wife knows that the ideal husband is one who can pay her compliments and her bills. A lot of the talkies are dumb. As soon as a husband is broken of one bad habit he acquires another. With airplanes and radios riding the air all the time it is no wonder the air backs up occasionally. Putting your purse under your pillow does not necessarily mean that you have enough to retire on. Before leaving your present position for a new one, be sure the new one has more advantages than a mere advance in salary. Here's something for the girls to consider: When airplanes become common and take the place of autos, there will be no opportunity to get out and walk back home. He who laughs last laughs best, but he soon gets a reputation for being mighty dumb.

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

French Scene

It is the most delightful of French inns, in the quaintest of French settlements. As you rush by in one of the innumerable trains that pass it daily, you may catch glimpses of tall trees trailing their branches in the still stream—hardly a dozen yards wide—of flocks of white ducks paddling together, and of queer punts drawn up on th shelving shore or tied to soggy, patched-up landingstairs.

If the sun shines, you can see, now and then, between the trees, a figure kneeling at the water's edge, bending ovr a pile of clothes, washing—her head bound with a red handkerchief.

If you are quick, the miniature river will open just before you round the curve, disclosing in the distance groups of willows, and a rickety footbridge perched up on poles to keep it dry. All this you see in a flash.

But you must stop at the old-fashioned station, within ten minutes of the Harlem river, cross the road, skirt an old gardn bound with a fence and bursting with flowers, and so pass on through a bare field to the water's edge, before you catch sight of the cosy little houses lining the banks. . .

I have a love for the out-of-the-way places of the earth when they bristle all over with the quaint and the old and the odd, and are mouldy with the picturesque. But here is an in-the-way place, all sunshine and shimmer, with never a fringe of mould upon it, and yet you lose your heart at a glance. It is as charming in its boat life as an old Holland canal; it is as delightful in its shore life as the Seine; and it is as picturesque and entrancing in its sylvan beauty as the most exquisite of English streams.—From "A Day at Laguerre's and Other Days," by F. Hopkinson Smith.

The Poet's Day

The poet's day is different from another,
Tho' he doth count each man his own heart's brother.
So crystal-clear the air that he looks through,
It gives each color an intenser hue;
Each bush doth burn, and every flower flame;
The stars are shining; silence breathes a name.
The world wherein he wanders, dreams and sings
Thrills with the beating of invisible wings;
And all day long he rears from hidden birds
The low, melodious pour of musicked words.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 8

A discussion of the following question of a correspondent should interest all Auction and Contract players: —"First hand has bid no trump, second has passed, third has over-called his partner with two hearts and fourth has bid two spades. Under what conditions should the original hand (a) bid two no trumps, (b) raise his partner to three hearts."

This particular question opens up a very wide field of discussion and one that can be handled only in a very general way. For the purpose of this discussion it will be assumed that neither side has a score. Also assume that the dealer has bid one no trump with each of the following hands:

A
Hearts—Q, 8
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, 10, 9, 8
Spades—K, J, 7

B
Hearts—Q, 10, 7, 2
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, Q, 9
Spades—10, 4

C
Hearts—7, 2
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, Q, 9, 8
Spades—Q, 7, 2

D
Hearts—7, 4
Clubs—A, K, Q, 7, 6, 2
Diamonds—K, 10, 7
Spades—K, 7

Then assume that his partner has bid two hearts and fourth hand has bid two spades. With Hand A, the dealer should bid no trump. He has a double stopper in the spade suit and only two hearts. For this reason the no trump bid offers the better chance for game. If his partner has a strong heart suit, it is up to him to bid three hearts. The bid of two no trump indicates a strong hand but no particular help for the heart bid. Always hesitate to help your partner's suit bid with only two trumps or less. The only exception to this is when you hold ace or king and one other.

In Hand B, the dealer should undoubtedly bid three hearts. He has no stopper in the spade suit and yet very strong help for his partner's heart bid. This hand is a fine example of the type of hand on which to assist partner's suit bid.

In Hand C, the dealer should pass. He has only one stopper in spades and less than normal help for his partner's heart suit. For that reason, he should neither bid two no trump nor three hearts. It is a fine example of a hand that is just under the requirements for a two no trump bid.

In Hand D, the dealer should bid two no trump. He has only one stopper in the spades but his set-up club suit makes the hand a good chance for game in no trump. The fact that it contains only two small hearts makes a three-heart bid inadvisable. It is a fine example of a hand that is just over the requirements for a two no trump bid.

It is manifestly impossible to include in this discussion all of the various types of hands that might come under the conditions specified in the question, but the foregoing examples are typical and will act as a guide in the great majority of instances. As a general rule, bid two no trump if you have a double stopper in the suit bid or three hearts if you have three or more hearts to an honor and a sound no trump.

Last Instructions

When I am dead, and ashes in your hand,
In a mild Virginia meadow take your stand,
And pause a moment, thinking of the past,
Those rare road-walking days that couldn't last.

Think, "This was her body that swung along with me,
The same road the same violets, the very locust tree."
Think, "God she loved, and the witnesses of God
And in especial the Virginia sod.

Here we walked together, the wind whirled
As on the first bright morning of the world.
Hungry, tired, and tremblingly in love,
And something sang, I think a brown wood-dove."

These thoughts will pass like summer. Pause no more.
I shall be there as happy as before.
I shall be there to watch you turn aside,
Remembering. Then fling the ashes wide.

—Virginia Dare in The Montreal Star.

The Interdependence of Nations

Detroit News: Every great modern industrial country is dependent on world economy. Even we in the United States are finding out that our wealth is not simply the country's resources, means of production and population, but is conditioned by the international exchange of goods, services and capital. National self-containment is a pure political phantasy, as our own rapidly dwindling foreign trade with its terrible concomitants of bankruptcy and unemployment so tragically attests.

Hints to Motorists

Front wheels of all cars toe-in, or are gathered at the front, to compensate for the fact that the wheels taper from top to bottom.

MUCH POWER IN STOP LIGHT.

Stoplight bulbs are more powerful than many car-owners realize. They average around fifteen candlepower in brilliance. Unless the motorist is aware of this, he might, in just dropping around to pick up a bulb, get one of inadequate power. It takes quite a bit of brilliance in the signal to make certain the oncoming driver will catch the "stop."

AIDS TO VISIBILITY.

Two handy aids to visibility are: Keeping the windshield wiper blade back at the top of the arc, and wiping the dust from the glass before driving into the sun. Both are so easy that it is surprising more motorists do not see that they are done.

USE OF BRUSH HELPS.

A brush with bristles that are not overly stiff is really the ideal thing with which to clean the closed car top. It gets down into the material in a fashion that is impossible for a cloth or sponge. A little lukewarm water—and nothing else—is the thing to use on the brush.

CAUSES OF CARBURETOR POPPING

There are quite many causes of popping back into the carburetor, a condition that may cause the engine to catch fire, especially if the outside of it is dirty and covered with oil. The four most common ones are dirt in the carburetor, sticking intake valves, water in the gasoline, and an air leak at the intake manifold connections.

PUT WINDSHIELD DOWN.

Many a car owner is only partially locking his door these days by leaving the windshield open, making it a simple matter to reach through and unlatch a door from the inside.

Astronomers Will View Sun's Eclipse

Toronto—The Royal Astronomical Society of Canada have formed a committee to organize an expedition to Northern Quebec to observe a total eclipse of the sun on August 31.

Professor H. R. Kingston, London, Ont., suggested the possibility of broadcasting the eclipse by television from an airplane. He said the path of totally would be 100 miles wide.

Imports of Canadian tobacco through the Port of London in 1930 amounted to 728,000 lbs. and in 1931 to 2,070,000 lbs., and is still on the increase.

HER HUSBAND TEASED HER

But not for long!

"I started taking Kruschen Salts for biliousness, and for the last two years I have been perfectly free from an attack. Now I continue to take them, as I find they keep me in perfect health. My husband used to joke about me taking Kruschen Salts; now he takes them himself, so do my children. My sincere thanks."
—Mrs. G. P.

When your gastric or digestive juices refuse to flow, your food, instead of becoming absorbed into your system, simply collects and ferments inside you, producing harmful acids and gases which give rise to biliousness, heartburn and flatulence.

Kruschen is a combination of six mineral salts, which goes right to the root of the trouble. It first stimulates the flow of gastric and other juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular and unfailing elimination of waste matter every day. And that means a blessed end to biliousness, and a renewed and whole-hearted enjoyment of your food without the slightest fear of having to pay the old painful penalty.

No more COLIC pains

... give Castoria

A CRY in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. When there's need of gentle regulation. Every child loves the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is usually all that's needed to right the irregularities of older, growing children. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. It's prescribed by doctors!

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

Pleasant Evening With the Y.P.S.

A special feature of the United Church Y.P.S. meeting on Monday night was the address of Mr. Gilbert West, the Peel representative to the Boy's Parliament in Toronto. His talk enlightened the audience greatly as to the value of these parliaments to the boys. Mr. West is from Brampton and was introduced to the meeting by Donald Ewles also of Brampton. An impersonation of Christopher Columbus which was very humorous was also given by Donald Ewles, Albert Bolster from was in charge of that part of the program which was contributed by Brampton boys. Norman Worthy the Trail Rangers Representative to the Boys Parliament, from Brampton delighted the audience with a mouth organ selection.

The first part of the evening was in charge of the local society. Miss Ruth Ross read the scripture. The singing during the evening was ably led by Mr. MacArthur. Two interesting addresses were: "What Does Youth Expect of the Church," and "What Does the Church Expect of her Youth." The former was taken by Mr. Lawrence Dolby, and the latter by Rev. Geo. H. Purchase. A reading was given by Miss Hazel Ross in her usual good style.

After the meeting an enjoyable half hour of sociability was spent during which lunch was served.

Here and There

Figures of United States motor cars entering New Brunswick in 1931, issued by the provincial bureau of information and tourist travel, show an 8 per cent. gain over 1930. The new record for 1931 is 58,583 as compared with the former record of 54,068 for 1930.

Approximately $11,000,000 was saved in Canada last year in the cost of construction dwellings and other buildings in 61 cities owing to reduced cost of building materials. Aggregate value in these cities of building permits was $110,971,410.

The aid of Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner in London and of Lord Beaverbrook will be sought by the Maritime Provinces representatives who left aboard S.S. Montcalm from Halifax recently, in an effort to secure the lifting of the British Government's embargo on Canadian potatoes.

A railroad career that has seen many changes and covered much widely separated territory witnessed another movement when Robert E. Larmour, general freight agent, Canadian Pacific Railway, was transferred recently from Montreal to Toronto. Mr. Larmour, aside from his railway duties, is well known as one of Canada's outstanding yachtsmen.

Carnival Queen nominations from Edmonton, Drumheller and Vancouver testify to the great popularity of the Banff annual winter carnival to be held February 6 to 13. The Alberta branch of the A.A.U. of Canada has agreed to hold figure skating championships at the carnival and may hold their skiing championships there as well. Every kind of winter sport will be represented.

Entries are coming in rapidly for the great winter event of the 1932 sporting season, the 11th annual Eastern International Dog Sled Derby to be run over a course of 123 miles, spread over the three days February 22-24 and concluding with the Dog Derby Costume Ball at the Chateau Frontenac, February 24. St. Godard, Seppala and other names outstanding in Dog Sled racing are already entered.

The largest shipment of Government-approved cockerels for any one breeder or hatcheryman in Canada arrived recently by Canadian Pacific special at Fergus, Ont., from Winnipeg to the order of J. G. Tweddle, of the former city. The birds were selected by government inspectors from the choicest flocks from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. During the last four years Mr. Tweddle has shipped an average of 200,000 chickens to various points between the Atlantic and Pacific.

Competition between truck and railroad service is shown in a new angle by a letter recently to a Reading paper, "Labor." A cattle raiser of Niobrara, Nebraska, tried out both methods, shipping cattle by truck and by railroad. On the railroad there was a shrinkage of 21 pounds for each animal; by truck there was a shrinkage of 98 pounds each. What the raiser saved on freight he much more than lost on the animals shipped by truck, where the value of the shrinkage amounted to $13.14 on each animal. (CIS)

Car Drivers Make Plea for Saint's Protection

The holy Saint Francisca is the patroness of motorists. She was, in the Middle ages, a charitable woman who mitigated many misfortunes. On the Roman forum stands her little church, appearing almost fragile, yet most beautiful, amid the mighty arches and ruins of ancient Rome. Upon her feast day, in March, there come every year hundreds and still more hundreds of automobiles to the square before this little church.

All sorts of cars are there, belonging not only to the wealthy, but to the poor as well. Ambassadors and other government officials are represented. Instead of chauffeurs sitting at the wheel in solemn state, these functionaries and many lovely young ladies, too, drive their own cars to the consecrated spot, where at the altar of Saint Francisca their vehicles may be protected against disaster and misfortune for another year.

Successive services are held in which the guardianship of the saint is invoked, and all the cars driven to the precincts of her altar are blessed and dedicated to her, that she may intercede for their owners and drivers, and guard them from peril and accident during the year to come, and very appropriately at the season of the year when motor traveling is most prevalent. Certainly these ceremonies have a deep and solemn significance, occurring as they do in the very center of what was anciently a pagan Rome!—Berliner Tageblatt.

Life's Prime, the Years Between Youth and Age

At what age is the average man or woman in his or her prime of life? is often asked, and what is the average length of life?

The prime of life, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is the period of full vigor and power, that which succeeds youth and precedes age.

The average length of life in the United States, according to estimates made by the United States public health service, is fifty-six years. Statistics indicating the expectation of life place Australia at the head of the list with an average length of sixty-one years. New Zealand comes second, with an average expectation of sixty years. The average expectation of life at birth in various countries, according to the United States bureau of the census, is as follows: Denmark, Norway and Sweden, fifty-seven years; England, fifty-three years; Holland, fifty-two; Switzerland, fifty-one; France, fifty; Germany, forty-six; Japan, forty-four and India, twenty-three. Statistics also show that females have a greater expectation of life at birth than males.

England's Earthquake Year

About one hundred and seventy years ago England experienced the first of a series of severe earthquakes, which created great alarm. The first shock was very distinct, the second still more severe, and a crazy soldier scared many folk almost out of their wits by predicting that the third, which he timed for April 6, would totally destroy London. On April 5, tens of thousands of all ranks quitted the metropolis, and many who remained were afraid to go to bed, but spent the night in the streets. The prophecy proved false, of course, but further shocks were felt in various parts of the country in the spring and summer of that year, and some held the prophet justified—with some error of date and locality—by the awful earthquake which shortly after destroyed Lisbon.

Should Appeal to Tourists

The Baltic republics of Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia and Finland, formed from territories of the old Russian empire as a result of the World war, offer the tourist a region of great interest and beauty for exploration. Scenes of natural splendor abound along the winding coastlines and amid the dense northern forests of all these countries and about the vast and innumerable lakes of Finland. What is not generally known is that each of these peoples boasts of long centuries of independent civilizations and that in many of the cities relics of unspoiled and charming medieval beauty remain.

Coffee Production

The regions best adapted to the production of coffee are those between the parallels 15 degrees north and 15 degrees south latitude and from 1,000 to 4,000 feet above sea level. It is cultivated from latitude 25 degrees north to 30 degrees south in places where the temperature does not fall below 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Moist and somewhat shady slopes are found most desirable. Little streams of water are conducted to the roots of trees which are kept very wet until the fruit is nearly ripe, then the water is turned off to keep the fruit from becoming too succulent.

Area Taken From Mexico

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, conveyed to the United States the territory which has since become the states of California, Nevada and Utah, part of Colorado, and the largest parts of New Mexico and Arizona. Previous to that time, this territory belonged to Mexico. Five years later, the United States purchased from Mexico about 45,000 square miles of southern Arizona for $10,000,000. Feb. 10, Wednesday, next week at 7.30 p.m. is Scouts Night in our village. But Scouts of themselves will never do well without the support of the community. For this reason we again remind the readers of this column that a hearty welcome awaits them. Come along and see your boy invested.

The Streetsville Troop will be presented with their troop flag, a large sheet of green with the Scout Crest and Troop number and name in large yellow letters. Won't our boys be proud to think that in a few months their number has swelled to about 45 and they are to be fully invested?

The committee of six citizens of Streetsville to decide on Scout matters will also be invested. The personel has not been made known but our next column will, no doubt give out such information.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive. Indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 225 College Street, Toronto.

YOUR COMPLEXION

"Looks healthy" is a descriptive phrase which we frequently use, and it is based on the complexion more than on anything else. There is good reason for saying that the person with a clear skin, which is free from blemish, looks healthy for he likely is. The skin is an organ of the body, and so it reflects the general condition of the body, whether this be favourably or unfavourably.

Blemishes of the skin are not serious, but they are annoying, and they cause discomfort and embarrassment to those who are afflicted with them. Blackheads usually develop on the face, but they are seen sometimes on the back and the chest. It is during adolescence that they generally begin to show themselves, and they tend to disappear as the individual grows older.

The blackheads are due to the blocking of the pores with the secretions of the gland which are excessive. The top of the blackhead is not dirt. The white mass which is expressed when the blackhead is squeezed is the hardened secretions of the gland which have formed a plug.

Blackheads may and generally do cause pimples. The blackhead acts as a foreign body and irritates the pore. Pus-forming germs may get into this plug of blocked-up secretions, and if so, they cause pimples which may extend and cause boils.

The condition is most common among those individuals who have an oily skin. However, as we stated previously, the skin is affected by the condition of other parts of the body. So it is that the occurrence of blackheads and pimples is favoured by digestive disturbances, improper diet, constipation and lack of fresh air, exercise and sleep.

In general we may say that an unhygienic life may be reflected in these skin conditions, and that where attention is given to the simple rules of healthy living, they are far less likely to occur.

When blackheads and pimples do occur, attention is given to the general habits of the patient's life rather than to the skin. The diet must be considered. Any insufficiency of green vegetables and of fruits is corrected, and any excess use of potatoes, pastry and sugar is cut down. The free use of water for drinking is encouraged.

Sufficient sleep, out-door exercise, fresh air and sunshine are all required if the body—and this includes the skin—is to be healthy.

Cleanliness of the skin is necessary if the skin is to be healthy. The face is to be washed regularly with non-irritating soap and water. The idea that soap and water are harmful to the complexion, and that the face should be cleansed with creams only, is all wrong. Greases mechanically plug up the pores, thus helping blackheads to form; what is needed is washing to clean the skin.

A good complexion comes from within and is an expression of personal health. It cannot be bought and applied on the outside.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule mash as hers. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states that Orme is the real husband of Sheila. Orme admits seeing Sheila on the night of her death. Dr. Cavanaugh takes the stand.

"Thank you." Dr. Cavanaugh nodded affably. "I will begin, then, with the early afternoon of a day last month, when I returned to my house from a morning round of golf and found a man whom I now know to be David Orme, sitting on the doorstep of my office, blocking my entrance."

Graham's head jerked back, his startled gaze seeking the doctor's face. The district attorney's chair made a scraping sound as he pushed himself back from the table with both hands. But Dr. Cavanaugh, apparently oblivious to the sensation his statement had caused, was turned toward the jury box, his eyes studiously regarding the toe of his shoe as he crossed one knee over the other and leaned back at ease in the witness chair.

"Behold the Ethiopian emerging from the woodpile!" Harry chortled to his "twin" in gleeful excitement.

"Just cast your eyes on Graham—he's getting something he didn't bargain for," the other twin urged, digging an elbow into his mate's ribs for emphasis.

"No talking in the courtroom, please!"

Abandoning his futile attempt to catch Dr. Cavanaugh's eye, Graham, with an obvious effort, schooled his voice to non-committal formality.

"And on what date, doctor, did this—this meeting occur?"

The district attorney's chair scraped sharply again—forward this time.

"I beg your pardon? I—I think I must have misunderstood." Graham was clutching the edge of the table before him with both hands. "Will you repeat that date please?"

Dr. Cavanaugh turned and surveyed his agitated questioner with mild amusement.

"I said"—he raised his voice as if he had just discovered that Graham was slightly deaf—"March fourth of this year."

"But that—that was before Mrs. Ellsworth disappeared!" Graham seemed hardly able to credit the testimony of his senses.

"The inference," Dr. Cavanaugh assented smoothly, "is quite correct."

CHAPTER XLVI.

"Proceed." In that one word, Graham gave it up, and abandoned himself and David Orme to Dr. Cavanaugh. He was no longer directing the examination—he was merely a part of the audience. He glanced briefly at the district attorney, hoping that the prosecutor was too absorbed in his own astonishment to notice that his surprise was shared by his opponent.

"Mr. Orme was at that time in a state of extreme agitation. He told me that in passing the house he had recognized my name on the door-plate. The maid told him I was out, and saw patients only by appointment. Nevertheless, he had settled himself on the doorstep to wait.

"He told me at once that he was without funds, but begged me to help him in what he described as a 'terrible extremity.' I admitted him to my office, gave him a mild sedative, and, when he was somewhat quieter, asked him the nature of his trouble.

"I will summarize his statement as succinctly as possible in order not to weary you." Dr. Cavanaugh paused and glanced at the jury with his smile of courteous apology. Every face was turned towards him with tense interest. Even the judge leaned forward.

"Mr. Orme told me at that time that he had been, for almost a year, suffering from a complete loss of memory for preceding events. His memory, that is, was clear for the period between last April and the present. For events preceding that time, his mind was a total blank. As perhaps you know, this state of amnesia is technically called a fugue."

The jury didn't know, but they appreciated the implied flattery, and tried to look as if they did.

"I went back rather carefully over the patient's personal history for the last 11 months. If I may be allowed to use an imperfect analogy, it was as if the strip of continuity, of the stream of memories which makes us conscious of ourselves as unbroken personalities, had been cut off at a particular point, with no way of uniting the severed edges.

"He had found himself walking along a country road, hatless and without luggage. If he had had a wallet containing money and a means of identification, he had lost it or it had been stolen from him. The only clue to his identity which he could discover was a fountain pen in his pocket with the initials 'D. O.' engraved on a gold band around the barrel.

"From that time on, for a period of 11 months, he had worked as a casual ranch hand, using the name Daniel Osgood, which was suggested to him by the initials on the pen.

"He had kept moving, in hope that eventually some scene or circumstance would recall his past life to him. On the day when I saw him, he had received his first hint—the first stimulus which seemed to have aroused a response connected with his past life. I hope I am not being too detailed—taking up too much of your time with all this?"

"Gee," he whispered to the "Q" twin. "Spell me on this, will you? It's all answer and no questions. Do you think you're getting paid just to sit and loaf in a ringside seat at this trial?"

"All right, hand it over. But say, do you notice what a sense of the dramatic the old bird has? He always asks if he's boring them at the most crucial moments."

"I haven't had time to notice anything but keeping up with the pothooks."

For once, even the bailiff was too absorbed to chastise the offenders against courtroom etiquette.

"Go on, please, doctor. The court will be glad to listen to all you have to say."

"The circumstances to which I refer was a moving picture. Orme, or Osgood as I called him then, had dropped into a moving picture house, more for a place to sit down and rest than for anything else. But an incident in the picture had aroused in him an intense, though indefinite, emotional disturbance.

"It was a scene in which an angry man knocked a woman down. He was unable to stay for the conclusion of the story, and rushed out into the street, in a state of acute excitement. His first clear recognition out of the past was the sight of my name on the door-plate when he passed my house—he recongized it, that is, as belonging to a more or less well known psychiatrist."

"'More or less'—get that?" nudged Harry.

"It would be—unnecessary to take you step by step through the analysis by which, in the course of the next two weeks, I finally knitted together the severed portions of Orme's consciousness.

"Working backward, I discovered that in his childhood he had received a powerful shock when his father, in a drunken rage had struck his mother and knocked her down. The woman had hit her head in falling and was stunned; and the child, left alone with her when his father had stormed out of the house, had believed her to be dead.

"The incident was buried in his subconscious and apparently forgotten—it was only a short time afterwards that a musician became interested in Orme's remarkable talent and undertook his education, separating him from his family associations. But the horror of scene, intensified by his helplessness, nevertheless made an ineffaceable and powerful impression.

"When, as he has told you, he in a moment of anger struck his wife, Sheila O'Shay, and saw her fall as his mother had fallen, he found himself reproducing the scene which had given him so profound a shock in his childhood. He in his own person was re-enacting the role of his hated father. The reproduction of a similar scene on the screen naturally caused a resurgence of the emotional storm, and gave us a starting point for reconstruction.

"The amnesia from which he was suffering explains the fact that Orme was unaware of his wife's subsequent marriage until so long after it had taken place.

"There are other items, of course, which require explanation. Not every one would have responded to the same set of circumstances as David Orme responded to them. We must remember that he was and always has been an unstable personality—an instability recognized by the laiety in reference to the high-strung sensitiveness, the 'temperament' of certain geniuses.

"In such a personality, a rift in the stream of memory technically called a fugue is invariably a means of escape from an unbearable reality. When Orme found himself performing the same act which had so horrified him in his father, he reacted by a complete denial of the intolerable fact—by, in short, foregtting the painful situation and becoming, in effect, someone else. I have no doubt whatever that the emotional strain of seeing his wife again on the night of March 18 caused a slight recurrence of retroactive amnesia, which explains his confusion as to the details of the interview and his inability to remember his parting from Sheila O'Shay and his return to the automobile camp grounds where he was staying.

"That is all, I think."

Graham looked enquiringly toward Dr. Cavanaugh, but except for an almost imperceptible curve of amusement at the corners of his mouth, the doctor's face was inscrutible.

"FATIGUE? I just postpone it!"

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others.

"Then I learned to rely on Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache is rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable the pain seldom returns!

Keep Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practise.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying Aspirin. Don't take a substitute because it will not act the same. Aspirin is made in Canada.

Unshaken Faith in Future Of Canada Expressed at Royal Bank Annual Meeting

"I have witnessed many depressions during the last fifty years and I can see nothing in this one which weakens my faith in this country."—Sir Herbert Holt, President.

"While I do not wish to voice any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place in 1932."—M. W. Wilson, Vice-President and General Manager.

At the annual meeting of The Royal Bank of Canada held at the Head Office in Montreal, both the President, Sir Herbert Holt, and the Vice-President and General Manager, Mr. M. W. Wilson, were emphatic in their expressions of unqualified confidence in Canada. Sir Herbert Holt's mature and world-wide business experience is reflected in his statement, "I have witnessed many depressions during the course of the last fifty years and I see nothing in this one which weakens my faith in this country." The tone of both addresses was one of quiet optimism, exemplified by Mr. Wilson's remark, "While I do not wish to voice any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place during 1932. The leaders of politics and finance in the principal countries are capable of bringing this about and the indictment against any who block the way will be severe indeed." The President pointed out that with quoted values of most securities well under their intrinsic worth, improvement could be expected as and when measures were taken which would result in a real return of confidence in the United States. Earlier in his remarks he had referred to the splendid record of the Canadian banking system during a time when disorganization in finance was accentuating the depression in many other countries. He expressed the opinion that the relatively satisfactory position of Canada could be attributed in no small degree to the stability of our banking organization and the way in which industry had been supported.

Before moving the adoption of the report Sir Herbert referred with profound regret to the death of Mr. Neill, after a lifetime spent in the service of the bank. "In his passing the bank has lost a wise councillor, his associates a loyal friend, and Canada an er ent banker and distinguished citizen."

After dealing briefly with the situation in agriculture and the principal manufacturing industries, Sir Herbert referred to the plans which are under way for a consolidation of the principal newsprint companies in Eastern Canada, and expressed the opinion that the development though difficult of accomplishment was a constructive one and highly desirable if Canada was to continue to maintain the supremacy to which she is entitled by reason of her natural advantages.

Railways

The appointment of a railway commission was mentioned with approval and the belief expressed that such a commission should be capable of bringing in recommendations which would in large measure solve the present very serious situation caused by uneconomic competition and duplication of services. The President stated "Savings to the country of from $60/75,000,000 a year are possible and this without impairment of service to the public."

Imperial Conference

Pointing out that as long as other nations raise intolerable tariff barriers against British Empire goods it is necessary that the different parts of the Empire should protect themselves by concerted action, he expressed hope in the results of the Imperial Conference to be held in Ottawa, provided careful analysis and close study produced a scientific tariff structure which would stimulate reciprocal Empire trade without handicapping home industry.

Publi Finance

The success of the National Service Loan was referred to as a notable achievement. He stressed the fact that both internal and external revenue had been reduced by the decline in the activity of trade and that excessive expenditures by governments and municipalities had placed a heavy burden of interest payments on the people. "There never was a time in our history when it was so necessary to avoid extravagance of every kind, and governments, Federal, Provincial and Municipal, should follow the splendid example set by the British National Government in reducing the cost of administration and balancing their budget."

Closing his remarks Sir Herbert said in part: "It has been said that it is darkest just before the dawn, and in previous depressions conditions have seemed most discouraging at a time when improvement had already set in. The violence of the depression must of itself tend to produce a strong reaction. It may well be that the gold countries are now on the verge of a rise in the price level. With a sound and strongly integrated banking system, no important investments in depreciated securities of foreign governments, an industrious and virile people who have maintained their morale unimpaired, and with a system of government permitting prompt and decisive action, Canada is in a relatively satisfactory position and we are justified in looking to the future with confidence."

General Manager's Address

Mr. M. W. Wilson, Vice-President and General Manager, stated that maintenance of the Bank's assets at a figure as high as $825,000,000 reflected not only the conservation of existing business but also the acquisition of new and desirable connections. He referred to the substantial over-subscription of the Dominion of Canada National Service Loan as an achievement of which our government and Canadians generally may well be proud.

Strong Liquid Position Maintained

The liquid position of the bank was maintained at substantially the same ratio as a year ago, quickly realizable assets being more than 48% of liabilities to the public. In referring to the enviable record of the Canadian banking system during the period of world depression, Mr. Wilson said: "Once again the ability of the Canadian banking system to take care of the needs of the country has been clearly demonstrated. The type of organization under which they operate enables our banks to take a broad view of the transactions that come before them and I think it will be admitted that the disposition has been to deal with problems in a sympathetic and constructive manner."

Business in Other Countries

"Entirely satisfactory," were the words used in describing the bank's experience during the last year in the foreign countries where it operates.

Mr. Wilson pointed out that the Bank's foreign branches have never been allowed to expose themselves to risk of loss through exchange fluctuations and as a result their experience during the last year had been entirely satisfactory.

Commodity Levels

The General Manager expressed the opinion that the restoration of commodity price levels to the basis of 1924-1928 was essential to a really satisfactory recovery in world business. He made favourable reference to the anti-deflation measures now being considered by the United States Congress and felt that they justified the hope that corrective forces would soon be at work in that country.

Business Psychology

"As the depression continues the factor of business psychology is one of constantly increasing importance," Mr. Wilson declared. Distrust and lack of confidence are largely responsible for the extremes to which world business has gone. He indicated that we in Canada had been particularly fortunate in this respect and said, "Confidence in our country and in our ability to solve the problems that present themselves is above the average and in my opinion is amply justified by our past record and future prospects." Lack of international confidence was the main obstacle in the way to world-wide business recovery. Mr. Wilson went on to express the opinion that confidence could be restored by co-operation between the leaders of politics and finance in the principal countries. Signs are not lacking that progress may be made along these lines and this formed the basis for his statement, "While I do not wish to venture any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place during 1932."

Mr. Wilson pointed out in vigorous terms that we must not get into the frame of mind in which we think of losses as pertaining to all business activities. The majority are holding their own, he declared, and while reduced earnings for the time being may be inevitable, we should be gratified that in this period of transition a great majority of our Canadian concerns are more than covering operating expenses and our agricultural population is staying on the land and maintaining the acreage under cultivation. Closing on a note of optimism, Mr. Wilson said, "There are signs of stabilization in a number of directions, our physical assets are being kept intact and, with reasonable economy and hard work, we shall find that Canada will be one of the first countries to feel the good results of business recovery."

Sun and Snow

Sunlight is curious about snow.
It glares intently,—wants to know
How flakes are made, and why the crust
Of snow can powder into dust.

The sunlight cannot hold aloof
When snow is dazzling on a roof.
It wants to know what makes it gleam,
And why the eaves should run a stream.

Inquisitively, sunlight peers
At beauty melting into tears.
It stares surprised, and does not
That its attentions melt the sn

Spanish Melody

One of the most delightful things in Spain is its strange Eastern music, and of all the music by far the most magical is the "Malaguena." This is a plaintive little song or chant which is hummed under the breath, started by one, taken up and varied a little by another, carried right down the street like a thread of melody, everyone singing a few bars. Sometimes it is the veriest whisper; sometimes it rises to a wailing chant. It is quite wandering, for you cannot place it; often seems to die away altogether and begin again as a sort of echo, but with different harmonies and intervals and always in a minor key. The narrow streets of Malaga are full of this strange ghostly music, and the women washing clothes in the riverbed all hum it, each one improvising as she goes on, but it always stops suddenly if it is noticed that any stranger is listening.—From "Spanish Sunshine," by Eleanor Elsner.

Sunday School Lesson

February 7. Lesson VI—The Slavery of Sin (Temperance Lesson)—Matthew 23: 45-51; John 8: 31-36. Golden Text—Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.—John 8: 34.

ANALYSIS

I. KNOWING THE TRUTH, John 8: 31, 32.
II. DENYING OUR BONDAGE, John 8: 33 34.
III. THE TRUE FREEDOM, John 8: 35, 36.

INTRODUCTION—Jesus had been warning the Jews against the consequences of their unbelief, 8: 21-30. His own life was so of a piece with his spoken "testimony"—"I always do those things that please him" (v. 29) —that many people believed on him, v. 30. Others—"the Jews"—became convinced that he was the Messiah. The faith of some of them, he saw to be unreliable. His message to them is our message today in this lesson.

I. KNOWING THE TRUTH, John 8: 31, 32

The translation in the Authorized Version of vs. 30, 31 is "believed on." In v. 31 a better rendering would be "believed." Verse 30 tells of a real faith, a personal trust and loyalty. Verse 31 tells simply of an intellectual, doctrinal belief. The Jews—those who, in this Gospel, are taken as the party antagonistic to Jesus—became convinced that he was the Messiah. Their conviction, however, made no change in their lives. They said, "We believe that what you say is true," but that did not make them "followers" of Jesus.

To them Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; And ye shall know the truth," vs. 31, 32. That is, Jesus' teaching can be understood only by those who are prepared to practice it—who make their "faith" the principle by which they guide all their activities. Every earnest man asks the question, "Why am I here? What is life's purpose for me?" He wants to know the truth. Only as he makes Jesus' way of living his way will he come to understand the meaning of life and his place in it. He shall know the truth.

Knowing this and seeing therefore the "real" unhidden by "appearances" he will be saved from error sin and folly. His moral vision will set him free from the moral dangers into which, through ignorance of their real character, he might otherwise fall. He sees, for example, his own body as a temple of God in the building. Therefore he can permit nothing that will deface or defile it.

II. DENYING OUR BONDAGE, John 8: 33, 34.

The Jews were insulted at the suggestion that they were not free, v. 33. "We were never in bondage to any man." Then what about Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Syria? Even as they spoke, was the Roman garrison not looking down from the castle into the Temple courts—keeping a watchful eye upon these conquered Jews. Like most of us, they were able to ignore and even deny unpleasant facts.

Hence, of course, they felt no need of freedom. What more discouraging work than offering salvation to people who do not feel their need of it—solving problems which trouble no one —answering questions which no one is asking? How indifferently we listen to the story of God's redeeming love. Nevertheless, when it is forced upon our attention, we are conscious that we are "out" with the moral universe around us. We find a law—an influence working upon us—that when we would do good evil is present with us. We are in bondage.

III. THE TRUE FREEDOM, John 8: 35, 36.

When Jesus then contrasted the family relationship of the slave with that of the son (v. 35) he meant that no matter how long or how hard a man's bondage to sin had been, it was still only an artificial and, if he so desired, a temporary bondage. Whether he be a drunkard, apparently hopelessaly enslaved by the drink babit, or one of those who are even harder to redeem—the respectable complacent folk who are saturated with the form of religion, but uninfluenced by its power—his bondage can be broken.

By whom? "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," v. 36. How does the Son deliver me from the sin that holds me? He wins me by the power of his own pure love to awaken an answering love in me. If the one whom I have greatly wronged is able to convince me that his love for me is strong enough, not only to overcome any resentment toward me, but to forgive me freely and yearn with a passionate longing for my answering love, then I cannot but respond to it. The thing that wounded him will become hateful to me. When I am brought face to face with the abandon with which God in Christ has loved me I become free from the shackles of my old bondage. I enter into a new relationship with my Saviour—brother. "Sin, which was once so alluring now becomes not merely a prohibited thing, but actually distasteful; and goodness, which was once so difficult, becomes not only a thing required of me, but actually a thing I love," Baillie—This is the true freedom from sin.

Lost—a Patient

Mr. Birrell, when Irish Secretary, told this story about the only time he ever wanted to consult a doctor.

"Once only in my life did I feel persuaded that I was smitten with a mortal disease. I started on my way to consult a distinguished doctor.

"It was a hot July day and I thought the time was come for my last walk. I walked from my home to Harley Street. I found the great physician's room crowded with patients, and, while waiting, I saw on the table a book written by the great physician on the subject of this particular disease.

"The first words which caught my eye were these: 'The patient who is suffering from this disease never perspires.' I picked up my hat and walked out."

Caves of Ice

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device,
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!
A damsel with a dulcimer
In a vision once I saw.
It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she played.
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her symphony and song,
To such a deep delight 'twould win me,
That with music loud and long,
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
—Samuel aylor Coleridge, Poems.

They Didn't

A dentist was about to extract the tooth of a girl who declined an anaesthetic but resolutely closed her jaws whenever he approached her with the forceps.

At last he whispered to his assistant: "Quietly stick that needle in her back. That will make her open her mouth!"

The assistant carried out his instructions. The girl opened her mouth and the tooth was removed.

The dentist said: "I hope you didn't experience much pain?"

"No," she answered, "but I never knew the roots went down so far."

The Other Clan

The foreman of a big motor works was interviewing a number of applicants.

Presently a lean, angular man was shown into his office.

"Well," asked the foreman, "are you a mechanic?"

The applicant shook his head.

"No, sorr," he replied gravely, "I'm a McTosh."

Mrs. Flat—"It's so close in here, can't you let in a little fresh air?"

Briefs Abroad

The ordinary type of cold costs Gt. Britain at least £6,000,000 a year in loss of working time.

England's army of Civil Servants shows an increase of more than 5,000 over the figures for a year ago.

The last sailing-ship to be built in Britain was the Archibald Russell; she was built in Glasgow in 1905.

It costs £50,000 for the voyage to Canada and back of the new Canadian Pacific liner, Empress of Britain.

The only private "army" maintained in Britain is that of the Duke of Atholl. It is one thousand strong, and is complete with artillery.

Buses now being built for London traffic will seat sixty-three passengers, room being made for the ten extra fares by extending the top deck over the driver's cabin.

In the Vatican Library, the roof of which suddenly collapsed recently, were 400,000 printed books, 53,000 MSS., and 6,000 works of art. Most of these were, however, undamaged.

Penguins' eggs, which are bigger than those of the turkey, take half an hour to boil. They are already in use in South Africa, and it is planned to put them on sale in Gt. Britain at $1.10 a dozen.

Men are said to be more susceptible to colds than women. Gt. Britain's figures go to prove that seventy-seven per cent. of the male patients suffer from colds, as compared wth sixty per cent. of the women.

England's roadways have become still more dangerous to pedestrians, according to police figures. In the year just ended fifty children under five years of age were killed, as compared with thirty-eight the previous year.

German women and girls spend, on an average, twice as much on cosmetics and perfumes as do the woman of Gt. Britain. According to official figures, this expenditure in Germany works out at one shilling per person every 200 days.

During the last twelve months 27,000 people were reported "missing" in Paris, and more than 25,000 in New York. Britain's annual figure, of women and girls, for the whole country, is about 15,000, of which number less than one-tenth remain undiscovered for more than two weeks.

"Extreme" marriages last year in England included three girls of twenty who wedded men of seventy or over, one girl aged seventeen who married a bridegroom of sixty-seven, a man of twenty-two whose bride was aged sixty, and a twenty-eight-year-old groom who mated a woman of seventy.

Painters of Child-Life

If we could gather into one great gallery all the paintings of child-life which the world has ever produced, there would be scattered here and there some few works of a distinctly unique character, before which we should rest so completely satisfied that we should quite forget to look at any others. These choice gems are the work of those rare men of genius who, looking beyond all trivial circumstances and individual peculiarities, discovered the essential secrets of child-life, and embodied them in ideal types. They are pictures of childhood, rather than of children, representing those phases of thought and emotion which are peculiar to the child as such, and which all children possess in common. In their presence every mother spontaneously exclaims, "How like my own little one!" because the artist has interpreted the real child nature. Such pictures may justly take rank among the highest productions of creative art, having proven their claim to greatness by their unquestioned appeal to universal admiration.

In work of this kind one name alone is prominent, a name which England is proud to claim as hers, but to which all the world pays honor—the name of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Prince of Child-painters. A simple-hearted man, of sweet, kindly disposition, the great portrait-painter, bachelor though he was, possessed in rare measure the mysterious gift of winning the confidence of children. The great octagonal studio in Leicester Square must have often resounded to the laughter of childish voices as he entertained his little patrons with the pet dogs and birds he used in their portraits, and coaxed them into good nature with a thousand merry tricks. Although the greater number of these little people belonged to the most wealthy and aristocratic families in England, their pictures do not in any way indicate their rank. Still less do they show any distinguishing marks of the artificial age in which they lived. Dressed in the simplest of costumes, of the sort which is never out of fashion and always in the best taste, and posed in the natural attitudes of unconscious grace, they are representatives of childhood, pure and simple, rather than of any particular social class or historical period.

A list of Sir Joshua's child pictures may suitably begin with one which, in his own opinion, is among the best and most original of all his works. This is the Strawberry girl, exhibited in 1773, and repeated many times by the painter,—"not so much for the sake of profit," as Northcote explains, "as for improvement." The model was the artist's pretty niece, Miss Theophila ("Offy") Palmer who was named for his mother, and whom he loved as his own daughter.

The little girl stands with head slightly drooping, in the sweet shy way so natural to a timid child. The big eyes are lifted to ours half confidently, half timidly while a smile hovers bewitchingly over the mouth. A long pointed basket hangs on one arm, and the little hands are folded together in front like a little woman's. The child wears a curious round cap on her head, under which, presumably, her hair is gathered up in womanly fashion, for there are no stray locks to be seen except the two soft curves on the forehead.—From "Child-Life in Art," by Estelle M. Hurll.

The Cobbler

A little cloud in a golden veil
At setting of the sun:
And I a cobbled working—working;
Work is never done.

A little cloud in a golden veil;
And I am mending shoes,
Never a feathered sandal thing
Such as a cloud may use.

A little cloud in a golden veil,
Along the bright highway:
And but for her, tomorrow were
Another yesterday.

And this will stay, though she melt away
After the moon sets sail.
For no man's sky is always gray,
—Cloud in a golden veil.

Rubbing It In

An actor consulted his doctor, saying he felt seedy.

"No wonder," said the doctor, who knew his man. "You never leave the theatre till midnight. Then you hang around the club talking and smoking till early in the morning. What you want to do is to go straight home from work rise with the lark, and have an early-morning walk."

The actor determined to do so.

Grain shipments through the port of Halifax were nearly 400,000 bushels greater in 1931 than in 1930. Figures for the two years are: 1930, 731,995 bushels; 1931, 1,126,787 bushels.

Gold production from Northern Ontario mines in 1931 is estimated to have a value of $43,000,000. Since mining began 25 years ago, these mines have produced to a value of $395,000,000 worth of gold.

The Mountain comes to Mahomet these days. University of Alberta gives educational courses by radio four times a week, enabling those unable to attend in person to have the university taken to them.

Total value of all field crops produced in Canada in 1931 is estimated at $431,251,000, of which wheat accounts for $108,786,000. Hay and clover is the next most valuable crop, being put at $113,961,000.

A solid block of blue granite hewn from the side of Mt. Sir Donald, in the Canadian Rockies, has been shipped to New Haven, Connecticut, to be incorporated in the new Strathcona Memorial Building now being built at Yale University.

The five great branches of primary industry in Canada, as measured by the latest available statistics of value of production were agriculture, forestry, mining, electric power and fisheries, with the first having a production greater than all the four others combined.

Out for the E. W. Beatty midwinter golf championship trophy to be fought for over the links of the Royal Colwood Golf Course, February 22-27, leading amateurs from Seattle have notified their intention to compete. Last year's cup winners from Victoria will also tee off and there will be strong contingents from Vancouver and the Prairie Provinces as far east as Winnipeg.

Who is the Canadian Pacific pensioner with the longest service record? A controversy recently raging has been ended by the official statement that John Caesar, of Vancouver, is the "grand old man" of the company, with 48 years of service, closely followed by W. J. Grant, of Hamilton, with 47. They are respectively 81 and 78 years of age.

Highly pleased with their first experience of Canadian ski-ing country, delighted with Canadian hospitality and looking forward to future visits to the Dominion, the Oxford-Cambridge skiers sailed recently from Saint John to Liverpool aboard the Duchess of York. Matches between Canadian and British university ski teams will probably be a result of the visit.

Eyes of winter sport enthusiasts are now being focussed on the big event of the season on this continent, the 11th annual Eastern International Dog Sled Derby to be held February 22-24 at Quebec over a course of 123 miles, terminating with the Dog Derby Ball at the Chateau Frontenac. Outstanding dog mushers are entered for the event. (815)

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Station-to-station ("anyone") calls between 7.00 p.m. and 8.30 p.m. local time are on the low evening rate. Between 8.30 p.m. and 4.30 a.m. they are on the "night rate" basis and still lower.

Better Business Ahead Says Beatty And Canada is Ready to Move Forward

Canadian Pacific President Issues His Annual Review of Economic Conditions and the Outlook for Future Development and Progress in this Country.

BETTER business this year, says E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in his annual review of Canadian business for 1931. A condensed report of the review is as follows:

Mr. E. W. Beatty
Chairman and President Canadian Pacific Ry.

"Seriously affected by world conditions as Canada may appear to be, there is no country of the same or anything like the same comparative importance in world affairs that is less affected basically by the conditions that have brought financial disaster to the great nations of Europe and to the United States.

"Economic depression has reached its most pronounced stages in those countries more highly industrialized. Therein lies one of the reasons why Canada has experienced less dislocation than some others, and is in a better position to register a rapid return to normal conditions. Having its economic basis still very largely in the development of raw materials, Canada has less distance to travel along the road to re-establishment, and there are credible reasons for believing we have gone some distance in that direction. Thus we say that to Canada the year 1931 has been one of re-organization and reconstruction.

"The railway situation has moved into recognition as Canada's most imperative domestic problem. Its causes, complexities and possible solution are now being probed by a most competent tribunal the appointment of which at this time was an act of common sense and courage. The Canadian people will present to an interested world renewed evidence of those qualities if they give their confidence to that tribunal and meet its suggested solutions with considerations of economic value unbiased by political color or preconceived prejudice.

"The nation, its various communities, many of its business institutions and no small number of its individuals have in the past ordered their affairs as though the way to enduring prosperity lay through extravagant expenditure with little or no thought of stability of investment or profitable return thereon. Thus as a nation we are faced with debts that must be paid. I know of no way of meeting them other than by hard work and strict economy. Of wise expenditure leading to the opening up of undeveloped business or lowering of production costs there can be no just criticism at any time, nor should the railways be blamed too carelessly for having looked ahead and prepared their facilites so that future business reasonably assured might be adequately taken care of.

"The Canadian Pacific, for instance, has no apologies to offer for any of the more recent important additions and improvements it has made to its services. The "Empress of Britain", built largely to develop a new class of de luxe American trade for the Canadian route to Europe has justified our best expectations, and up to the end of the world-cruise in April next a reasonably good profit on her operations is assured. The Royal York Hotel at Toronto has also done very well considering existing conditions and the need for such a convenience for the traveling public in that city is just as great now as when the announcement of its building was so enthusiastically hailed. It is upon such forward moves as these that Canadian development must ever be predicated. If the original building of the Canadian Pacific had been held up until existing traffic justified its operation Canadian national development would now be decades behind its present position.

"Over the past year railways have been more adversely affected by the general trade contraction than has any other branch of industry. A 22.1 per cent. decrease in Canadian Pacific gross revenue for the first ten months of the year is symptomatic of these conditions. The fact that we were able to effect a 19.1 per cent. saving in operating costs over the same period is an evidence of the high standard of efficiency at which the property has been maintained. One direction in which we were not able to make reductions was in that of taxes which will run this wear to $7,500,000. Since its incorporation the company has contributed over $121,000,000 to Canada's tax collections. Under adverse conditions of which an unreasonably forced standard of competition was not a small part, the company carried on its services in a manner calculated to retain the confidence of the Canadian people. This is shown by the fact that since September, 1930, the number of its Canadian shareholders has grown from 26,185 to 35,775, an increase of 9,590, bringing the Canadian holdings up to over 46 per cent. of the total number of shareholders.

"It was recently a most encouraging experience to me to go through Western Canada and witness the courageous manner in which westerners are facing the situation. Any idea that the West is giving itself up to self-pity on the score that its future as an agricultural country is doomed should be abandoned forthwith. As a whole that country is not doing too badly, and its people are firm in their well justified knowledge that they are going to do as well as ever in the not too distant future. The most seriously affected area comprises but 20 to 25 per cent. of the West, and over the remainder the conditions are at least fair to good. Great encouragement has resulted from recent advances in wheat prices, and since the statistical position of that grain in world markets is undoubtedly strong, higher prices and a reasonably good demand are not unlikely over the coming year. Intelligent interest in improved methods and lower cost of production as well as in the all-important matter of future diversification of farming is general. This and the fact that Western Canada has again shown that it can produce the world's best in both grain and live-stock is enough guarantee of that country's future. Eastern Canada has no less reason to view its agricultural destiny with confidence. Production and export of live-stock and dairy products have increased and the fruit crops of Ontario and Nova Scotia are meeting with excellent markets abroad.

"An important increase in gold production, some improvement in the demand for lumber, an increase over the year in the volume of tourist traffic, a more satisfactory balance of foreign trade, and latterly a noticeable betterment in many lines of retail business are most encouraging factors in the general situation.

"He would be a bold man who would make any prophesy as to what is going to happen during the coming year, And yet I think it requires neither boldness nor second sight to justify the assumption that 1932 will, as it progresses, show marked improvement upon its predecessor.

"It is an old saying, of recent years brought much into mind, that one thing greatly to be desired is more business in government and less government in business. The period of economic stress has done more to prove the truth of that statement than anything else could have done, and I find that a large and growing number of the Canadian people are accepting that fact as being abundantly established by the course of economic events through which we are passing. Under stress of war necessities it became the government's job to supervise practically everything economic that was carried on. In many cases supervision became actual operation. The natural result was that people and institutions began to look to government for the inspiration and direction which they themselves could have given much better had they carried forward their enterprises on business principles the efficiency of which have been proven through ages of stress and strain.

"The success which attended the flotation of the National Service Loan should be as reassuring to Canadians of the sound basis upon which their economic affairs stand as it has been to the world at large. Readiness with which our people were able to absorb the new bond issue established the fact that a surprisingly large amount of Canada's wealth was in liquid form and that the Canadian people had no hesitation in placing it at the country's service. The Canadian dollar has gone considerably below par in most of the world's money markets, an effect of world conditions which carries its own remedy in that it is calculated to encourage a more favorable balance of foreign trade. It has also contributed as an inducement to manufacturers from other countries to establish factories within our borders. Since August, 1930, approximately 125 new industries from Great Britain and the United States have been organized or are now in the process of organization.

"Ultimate results following upon the recent British elections are likely to be far-reaching in their relation to Canadian economic affairs. Important extension of our trade with Great Britain seems assured, and it may be expected that the holding of the forthcoming Imperial Conference in this country will profoundly influence the course of Canadian economics over the next few years. The Empire will be brought to a new realization of what Canada has to offer in the way of natural resources and opportunity for profitable investment, and the country will step once again into the forefront as a land towards which the most desirable class of immigration and settlement should properly flow."

BRAMPTON

A meeting of hunt clubs from Brampton, Cooksville, Streetsville, Caledon, Mono Road, Norval and Derry West took place in the Brampton municipal office Friday night when it was decided to call the association of hunt clubs the County of Peel Game and Protective Association.

Officers were elected as follows;—President, C. Corkett; vice-president H. Watson; secretary, W. J. Packham; treasurer, F. McClure; executive, H. E. McClintock, Harry Weir, Harry Watson and W. Hall. An address was given by Jas. McClure, of Blind River, Algoma, hunter for 40 years.

Liabilities amount to $62,472. The company carried net risks on December 31, 1931 of $27,134,615. Only $1,136 was spent in adjustment during the past year.

Officers re-elected by the association for 1932 were the following: President, J. H. Rutherford; vice-president, J. A. Fletcher; secretary-treasurer, F. J. Thomson; directors, J. H. Rutherford, Bolton; J. A. Fletcher, Brampton; Geo. Cameron, Alton; Jas. Laidlaw, Brampton; Thomas Bryans, Malton; W. J. Guardhouse, Thistletown; R. H. Lush, Clarkson; J. M. Bert's Desire

From a window in a little back street in an Ontario town, a small boy gazed longingly on the "ball players" in an adjoining lot. A strange weakness kept him resting on a chair or in his cot, unable to join in the fun.

When the doctor was called, a glance told him the story, and it was not long before little Bert was hurried off to the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children. Here the great desire of his life seems likely to be granted. Bert has made wonderful progress, and the nurse says hopefully that in a few months more he will be able to try his prowess in the baseball nine—and what greater happiness could befall a little bed-ridden lad than this?

To save many such as Bert from consumption, this great work must go on, helped by subscriptions upon which the hospital so largely depends. A gift from you will be gratefully appreciated. Please send it to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

Old English "Sport" of Fox Hunting Endangered

Would England still be England, without its hunting rallies? Is this sport of centuries, the merry chase of elusive foxes, fated to die out?

It is unlikely that there is any feature of English country life so typical of the customs and traditions of the nation, as fox hunting. This being so, a recent statement of the earl of Rosebery, on accepting the mastership of the Whadden chase, that this sport is in a very critical condition, came rather as a surprise. He declared that five neighboring packs are having difficulty in finding masters, and that sportsmen must rally around now, or see fox hunting go the way of hawking. His lordship ascribed the decline to hard times and high taxation.

This might be considered bad news, even for the foxes, for from accounts of this sport that I have read, it would seem that the prey gets as much fun out of eluding the huntsmen, as the latter do in the galloping pursuit. After some of these old wily masters of the craft have learned the business, their chances of becoming a mere brush are comfortably few. Why, there are even some of these old fellows who pay visits to the kennels, if the hunt is not up regularly, to see what is keeping their little playmates! At least that's the story told.—Border Cities Star.

How English Merchant of 1480 Sought Custom

One of the earliest posters ever printed in England is to be seen in the Bodleian library, and concerns a Sarum service book, printed in 1480 by Caxton. It reads as follows: "If it pleases any man spirituel or temporel to bye our pyes of two or three commemoracions of Salisburi Use, emprynted after the form of this prese't letre, whiche ben wel and truly correct, late hym come to Westmonester into the almonestrye at the reed pole, and he shall have them good and chepe." The manner of presentation is somewhat unenterprising. The goods advertised belonged to the Middle ages, which were fast dying. But a new force had been let loose, which in the course of the next century was to revolutionize not only the art of advertising, but the whole of European culture.

Famous English Potter

Josiah Wedgewood was born on July 12, 1730. He was the youngest son of a potter and came of a family of which members had been notable potters in Staffordshire, England. Soon after the death of his father in 1739 he became skilled in the art of shaping pottery on the wheel. In 1753 he became manager of a small pottery. In 1759 he began work on his own account in the Ivy house pottery at Burslem. Salt glaze and green and yellow glaze seem to have been his first staples. However, the fine white English earthenware was just reaching perfection and Wedgewood became one of its best known makers. He presented a service of his ware to Queen Charlotte in 1762 and was appointed potter to the queen and later to the king. He next turned his attention to artistic pottery and reproduced designs based on the later phases of Greek art.

Dog's Warning of Death

While there is a very common superstition that dogs by their wailing can prognosticate death, this cannot be given as a fact, any more than other superstitions. A writer in Chambers' Book of Days, mentioning that the howling of a dog at night under the windows of a sick room is looked upon as a warning of death's being near, adds: "Perhaps there may be some truth in this notion. Everybody knows the peculiar odor which frequently precedes death and it is possible that the acute nose of the dog may perceive this and that it may render him uneasy."

Old Dishes Still Popular

Peacock tongues and humming bird wings may have lost their place on the festive English menu, but medieval dishes still play their part in the true English observance of Lent. In hamlets throughout the shires eating fried peas is a time-honored tradition on Carling Sunday, the fifth in Lent.

Semnel cakes are eaten in Shropshire and Herefordshire on Midlent or Mothering Sunday, the fourth Sunday in Lent, and in Westmoreland ayvers or havers are the rule of that day. Pancakes are in order on Shrove Tuesday and on every successive Tuesday during the Lenten season.

What Is Success?

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration and whose memory a benediction.—Exchange.

Golf and Geography

The scholars of a Pacific coast school have built an ingenious miniature golf course which is at the same time an instructor of geography. The various links represent different parts of the country and their products, which is impressed upon the minds of the players as they make the round.

Shot a Pheasant Fined Fifty Dollars

Port Hope, Jan. 22—Pleading guilty to a charge of shooting a pheasant, in county police court before Magistrate W. H. Floyd in Cobourg yesterday, Ernest Fox, Cobourg, was fined $50. and costs. T. F. Hall, K. C., Fox' council, urged that minimum fine in view of the fact that it was the accused's first appearance on any charge.

The magistrate was not inclined to take a lenient view and pointed out that the pheasants had been stocked in this district at considerable expense and effort by both the government and individuals and at first intimated that he might impose the maximum fine of $100. and costs. He stressed the fact that the accused had not broken the law because he was in need of the pheasant for food and warned Fox that any future infractions would be severely penalized.

To Enforce Gun Laws

"It is not the people who co-operated with the government in stocking pheasants in this districts that are killing them," Game Warden R. N. Hills said, "but persons who gave neither effort or shared the expense." Mr. Hills also expressed the opinion that young boys are responsible for killing a number of pheasants and intimated that he intended to strictly inforce the provisions of the criminal code which prevent persons under 16 being the owner of a firearm. Persons supplying amunition to a minor are equally responsible, he pointed out.

LET US SMILE

It was their first target practice. The officer had worn his army patience thin over these guardsmen. They just would not fire volleys. In digust he finally belowed, "Fire at random." A rookie from Duck Hill yelled, "Which one is he?"

"I tell you I won't have this room," protested the old lady to the bellboy "I ain't going to pay good money for a pig-pen with a measly little folding bed in it. You think just because I'm from the country—"

Disgusted the boy cut her short. "Get in lady. Get in. This ain't your room. This is the elevator."

A few weeks ago I told you about the Scholarship Opportunities which are being offered by the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild sponsored by the Fisher Body Corporation division of General Motors.

This week we publish a picture of two Toronto Scouts of the 38th Toronto Troop, who are out to win one of the prizes, of which there is a total value of $75,000. These two boys are seen at work on their model of the State Coach of the Emperor Napoleon of France, in the showroom window of Messrs. Breay-Nash, Ltd., of Bay Street, Toronto.

I hope that some Lone Scouts are entering this competition and taking advantage of the unique opportunities that it affords. If you have not already done so you can enrol in the competition and obtain full particulars by applying to any General Motors dealer in your neighborhood.

Free Fishing For Scouts

Free fishing privileges in Big Whitefish Lake, surrounding Mystery Island, have been granted by the Hon. Hector Laferte, Minister of Fisheries for Quebec. This makes it unnecessary for Scouts or Lone Scouts of other Provinces to purchase Quebec Fishing Licences when visiting Mystery Island

A Flag From the London Cenotaph

One of the signal honours conferred upon the Canadian Scout contingent at the last world Scout gathering in England was the presentation of a large white ensign that had flown from the Cenotaph in Whitehall. The flag now has an honoured place at Dominion Scout Headquarters, Ottawa

Summer Camp, 1932

One Lone Scout has already sent in his application to attend the Summer Camp which we are planning for this year. Will you be there too? Start that Camp Fund right now!

Scouts Thanked in Parliament

The Boy Scouts of England were thanked in the House of Commons by the Secretary for the Dominions, the Hon. J. H. Thomas, for valuable services rendered in connection with the "Buy British" campaign of the Empire Marketing Board.

The Value of Scout Training

It is recorded that the first place among 250 competitors for 20 apprenticeships in the Royal Air Force was won by a 15-year-old Scout who is a Patrol Leader in a Troop at Coventry, England.

We hope that Lone Scouts are taking full advantage of the opportunity which is in their hands of making full use of their Scout Programme which is of such assistance to them in the development of their faculties, both mental and physical.

And now read the following paragraph:

Where Deaf and Blind Pair Off

Blind boys and deaf boys pair off for the test work in the Scout Troop at the Vancouver School for the Blind and Deaf. The blind boys act as "ears for two" and the deaf Scouts are "eyes." Surprisingly good work is done, Scout games are played, and the boys have greatly benefitted in mental outlook.

Even the physically handicapped boys make good use of the Scout Programme you see, and in Toronto, the Robert Louis Stevenson Troop, attached to the Hospital for Sick Children, is flourishing, with the majority of its members in bed. Some of them, however, have been out in the Hospital grounds in wheel chairs to pass their Second Class Cooking Test.

When we read such things as the above, doesn't it make us feel that we, who enjoy good health and the full use of all our senses, should use them to the fullest degree to benefit ourselves whilst we can do so? If a boy can be a keen Scout under such difficulties, how much greater is your obligation to carry out your Scout Promise to the letter?

"Lone E" will be glad to hear from boys between 12 and 18 years of age who cannot join a regular Troop of Scouts and who wish to be enrolled as Lone Scouts. Write to the Lone Scout Department Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, and ask for full particulars, which will be gladly sent to you.—"Lone E."

Powers Rush Troops to China

Britain and U.S. Take Sweeping Precautionary Measures Fleet Concentrated

London.—The Government on Sunday ordered additional troops rushed to Shanghai.

A battalion of infantry and a battery of artillery will leave Hong Kong at once on a warship. These troops are being sent in response to a request for reinforcements from Brigadier-General George Fleming, British commander in the international settlement.

Already the British have in Shanghai a battalion of the Scots Fusiliers, a battalion of Lincolns and a battalion of Wiltshires.

The naval forces on duty there consist of the cruiser Cornwall, the sloop Sandwich and two gunboats. The cruiser Kent is expected to arrive from Batavia shortly and the cruiser Suffolk was due from Hong Kong today.

A Foreign Office communique announcing the naval movements said the decision to send reinforcements was made at a meeting at No. 10 Downing Street, participated in by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, Hon. Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary; Sir Bolton Eyres-Monsell, First Lord of the Admiralty; Sir George Milne, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, and Sir Robert Vansittart, permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

During the day Ray Atherton, United States charge d'affaires, conferred with Mr. MacDonald a number of times at the Prime Minister's Downing Street residence. Sir John Simon was called from his sick bed to participate in the principal conference.

URGE A NEUTRAL ZONE.

The foreign office said the Government was urging the Japanese and Chinese governments to accept a scheme for establishing a neutral zone between the two armies at Shanghai which should be occupied by neutral troops. A foreign office communique said:

"At a meeting at Shanghai which was presided over by His Majesty's consul-general, and at which the American consul-general also was present, together with the Japanese and Chinese commanders, it was proposed to establish a neutral zone between the Chinese and Japanese troops to be occupied by the troops of neutral powers which have forces in the international settlement.

"His Majesty's consul-general has now been informed that necessary arrangements should be made for the British troops to co-operate if the neutral zone can be established, and that the United States government is being requested to take similar action.

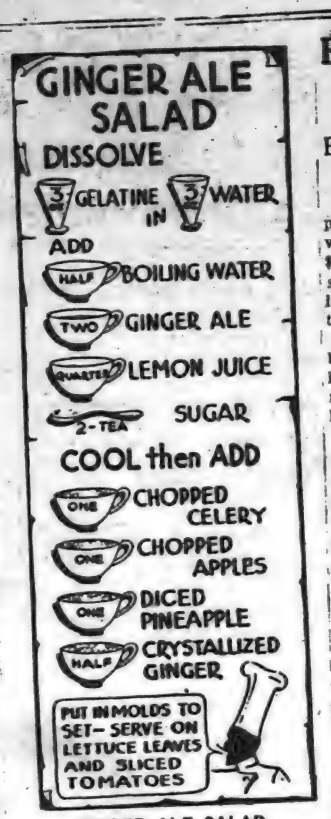
WASHINGTON SENDS TROOPS.

Washington.—With the co-operation of Great Britain, United States military and naval reinforcements to protect foreign citizens and property in Shanghai were ordered under the personal direction of President Hoover.

The United States transport, Chaumont, will leave Manilla with 1,000 regular United States army troops and marines, to take posts with the 1,300 marines already on guard there.

Even before this decision was reached at a White House conference, the navy ordered its Asiatic fleet to head from Manilla as a move for safety or evacuation of United States citizens.

These drastic moves by the United States had the co-operation of Great Britain. The President acted after London had sent word it would increase its forces at Shanghai by three eight-inch gun cruisers, a battalion of infantry and a battery of artillery. This done, Britain will have 3,000 men ready to act.



Another protest had gone forward during the day to Tokio against its course that had lead to death and destruction in the native city of Shanghai, and martial law in the international quarter.

As the army and navy were sending their orders to the Philippines, another urgent message went forward from the State Department telling foreigners at Shanghai assistance was on the way.

CHINESE WAITING.

Nanking, China.—Informed quarters here expressed a feeling that the impending arrival of British and United States troops at Shanghai might avert a Chines declaration of war on Japan.

The Chinese Government decided to declare war before it left for Honanfu to establish a temporary seat of Government there, these quarters said, but the decision was held in abeyance to see how the situation at Shanghai developed.

Province of Ontario Bonds Oversubscribed by $39,000,000

Eager Response of Investing Public Convincing Proof of Confidence in Government

Toronto.—A record for rapidity of public response was established last week when the Province of Ontario $25,000,0000 bond issue was oversubscribed two and a half times in a deluge of buying orders from all parts of the Dominion.

In less than three hours after the bonds went on sale, the investment houses and banks handling the issue reported the entire sale of both the long and short-term debentures.

Issues Snapped Up

Expressing confidence in the province and Government by their eagerness to participate, the investing public reacted to the favorable interest rate of six per cent. by snapping up as much of both issues as they could afford.

The $5,000,000, six per cent. three-year bonds brought subscriptions amounting to $18,750,000, and the $20,000,000 five and one-half per cent. 15-year bonds resulted in subscriptions totalling more than $45,000,000,

Despite the fact that the Government has obtained two and a half times the amount it set out to raise, not a dollar more than $25,000,000 will be accepted, according to Hon. E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer.

Confessing that he had never doubted the success of the loan, the amazing response of the public was something he had not anticipated, Hon. Mr. Dunlop declared that the reception afforded this offering was another convincing proof of the confidence of Canadian investors in their own securities and further emphasized the high credit standing of the province.

"But the Government has no intention of accepting any part of the oversubscription," said the provincial treasurer, when informed that reports in financial circles were to the effect that the Government would increase the loan as a result of the magnificent response. "We went into the market for $25,000,000 and that is all we intend to take."

Allotment Necessary

Mr. Dunlop said that the public response to the offering would necessitate an allotment being made of the bond issue. Investors who purchased large blocks of bonds will thus have their holdings reduced in order that wider distribution may be obtained.

One of the most satisfactory aspects of the bond sale from the Government's point of view was the wide distribution of the issues among the investing public. The small investor participated in the purchase to a greater extent than at any previous time in the history of the province, it was stated.

"Orders were received in substantial volume from dealers large and small throughout the province and from points west as far as Vancouver and east to Halifax," said Mr. Dunlop. "Out of the large list of dealers participating in the issue in Ontario and the other eastern provinces, over 95 per cent. have reported subscriptions for the loan."

In a statement accompanying announcement of the success of the loan, Mr. Dunlop said taking up of the loan would be reflected in a reduction of the temporary borrowing of the province for Hydro-Electric Power development and transmission, assistance to rural Hydro lines, highway construction and other purposes.

Small Amount From U.S.

Only a small percentage of the investing money came from the United States, Mr. Dunlop went on to say. He had made inquiries to ascertain how much of the money came from United States insurance companies—which are the big bond buyers in that country—and was informed that little came from that source. Mr. Dunlop admitted that the prevailing rates of exchange provided an incentive for United States investments in Canadian bonds. But to the best of his knowledge, by far the greater portion of the issue was taken up by Canadian capital.

"The amount of American capital was not very substantial" he declared. "I don't think it was a very big amount."

Zero Weathers Hits Canadian West

Temperatures From 50 Below Zero to 10 Below Reported

Winnipeg.—Prairie Canada shivered over the week-end in the worst cold spell of the present Winter. Clear from the Rocky Mountains to the Great Lakes temperatures registered far below the zero mark.

Blown out of the far northwest on the wings of a high wind the cold spell bit most deeply in Northern Alberta and Saskatchewan. Hudson Hope in the Peace River district of Northern British Columbia reported a temperature of 50 below zero. Points in the Alberta Peace River area registered 48, 45 and 44 below.

Edmonton started Sunday off with 30 below but a brief respite brought the mercury up to 14 below in the early afternoon. From then on, however, the order was more cold.

A brisk wind accompanied the frigid spell in Central and Northern Saskatchewan. The mercury dropped rapidly at Saskatoon and was close to 30 below shortly after sundown Sunday.

In Southern Alberta the sky was clear and only a light wind blew but temperatures of 23 to 28 below were the order.

Manitoba got the extreme cold a little later than points further west. Winnipeg thermometers were well below zero on Sunday, however, and a strong biting wind added to the severity of the weather. Towards night it became steadily colder and the mercury slid down past the 20-below mark.

Depression Is Un-British Declares Prince of Wales

London.—Depression and apathy are the Devil's own, the Prince of Wales told 10,000 boys and girls in Albert Hall last week at a meeting arranged by the National Council for Social Service.

"They're not English," he cried, "away with them!" and the roof rang with cheers.

"Emerson said a good many years ago that the Englisman is the one who stands firmest in his shoes," said the Prince, "and I know this is true of the rising generation of today.

"So far as I am concerned, many paths in life are closed to me. Much that I would like to do I cannot, but I have tried to bring the people of the Empire closer together. I have had my failures, I know, but in these years with few precedents to guide us, to have had no failures is to have attempted nothing.

"There is a danger that some people are getting too used to the present critical situation," he said. "It's no use waiting for that doubtful thing 'a good time coming.' We have got to fight, and here I pin my faith to the younger generation, to keep England 'a bulwark for the cause of men,' to keep our great heritage in trust for those who come after.

"We have before us to-day a world sick with fearful doubt and weary with repeated disappointment—a world of troubled nations whose vital need is courageous faith in each other. It is an era of potential plenty, when confidence should be supreme, yet we see in every land widespread distress and perplexity. The enemies to-day are depression and apathy. Let us attack them with two of our old-fashioned characteristics, good sense and good humour."

Fast Mail Planes Ordered By Britain

London—The Air Ministry have announced plans whereby it hopes to double the speed of air mail delivery on all Empire sky routes.

The Ministry placed an order with Boulton and Paul, Ltd., builders of the famous Royal Air Force high speed bombers, for a new type of all-metal twin-engined plane capable of a cruising speed of 200 miles an hour and a service ceiling of 12,000 feet.

This machine, it was said, would be the forerunner of a fleet of similar craft which would carry two pilots and 1,000 pounds of mail. Each machine would have a cruising radius of 1,000 miles with full load.

Operation of the fleet of new planes would bring a complete and radical change of air mail schedules, halving the times between all points on the Empire routes, the Ministry said. The new planes would not carry passengers, but would be used exclusively for mail.

Cost of Living Drop Slows Up In U.S.

Washington.—The cost of living in the United States fell 9.3 per cent. between December, 1930, and December, 1931, according to the recent semi-annual survey made in 32 cities by the bureau of labor statistics.

The decrease for the second six months of the year, however, did not keep pace with that of the first. The cost of living was just 3 per cent. lower in December, 1931, than in the preceding June.

The index number for the cost of living for December, 1931, was 145.8 based on the cost in 1913 as 100.

Standard of Living In Canada Holds

Lower Retail Prices Help Average Family's Daily Bill of Fare

Ottawa.—The standard of living in Canada continues on a high level, according to a report of the Department of Trade on the annual per capita consumption of food. The retail price of food, however, has greatly decreased in the past year, the report adds. Available reports for 1931 show that the average daily bill of fare for a family of five in Canada was approximately as follows: Two and a half pounds of meat, seven ounces of bakers' bread, five eggs, six and a half ounces of butter, nearly an ounce of cheese, five cents worth of canned goods and nearly three ounces of confectionery.

Total consumption of ales, beer and porter for the year was 58,094,552 gallons, or 5.85 gallons per capita; spirits, 4,376,386 gallons or .45 gallons per capita, and wine, 6,713,006 gallons, or .67 gallons per capita.

More British Steel Imported by Canada

London.—Julian Piggott, manager of the British Steel Export Association, told the Royal Empire Society at a recent luncheon that while United States steel producers had provided Canadian consumers with unrivalled service, it spoke much for Canadian loyalty to the Old Country and to the care paid to execution of orders by British steelmakers that the British share of Canada's imports of heavy steel had risen from three per cent. in 1925 to 25 per cent. last year.

Mr. Piggott, who has just returned from a six months' visit to Canada, expressed the hope that when Empire trade questions were discussed at Ottawa the British and Canadian steelmakers would put forward an agreed tariff policy. British makers were already able to formulate concrete proposals, he said.

"The tide of Imperial sentiment in Canada is running at the full," Mr. Piggott added. "The foundation of Imperial rationalization lies in the economic sphere."

Car Wood Sets New Speed of 110.785 Mi.

Miami Beach, Fla.—Car Wood, veteran United States speedboat racer, recently set a mark of 110.785 miles an hour in his Miss America IX, to claim the world's speedboat record

On the second of his runs Wood pushed his long 24-cylinder boat at a rate of 110.49 miles an hour southward over the measured nautical mile course in Indian Creek, following a northbound run at a speed of 111.08 miles an hour. Elapsed time was 37.53 seconds.

The average of the timed runs in each direction was 110.785 miles an hour and exceeded the record of 110.223 miles an hour set July 9, 1931, by Kaye Don.

When Business Is Slow,

If you can smile before breakfast it is very likely that you can smile the rest of the day. Love at first sight has a great precedent: Adam's for Eve. Many a man has lost his fight by stopping to pat himself on the back. Any wife knows that the ideal husband is one who can pay her compliments and her bills. A lot of the talkies are dumb. As soon as a husband is broken of one bad habit he acquires another. With airplanes and radios riding the air all the time it is no wonder the air backs up occasionally. Putting your purse under your pillow does not necessarily mean that you have enough to retire on. Before leaving your present position for a new one, be sure the new one has more advantages than a mere advance in salary. Here's something for the girls to consider: When airplanes become common and take the place of autos, there will be no opportunity to get out and walk back home. He who laughs last laughs best, but he soon gets a reputation for being mighty dumb.

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

CASTORIA

French Scene

It is the most delightful of French inns, in the quaintest of French settlements. As you rush by in one of the innumerable trains that pass it daily, you may catch glimpses of tall trees trailing their branches in the still stream—hardly a dozen yards wide—of flocks of white ducks paddling together, and of queer punts drawn up on th shelving shore or tied to soggy, patched-up landingstairs.

If the sun shines, you can see, now and then, between the trees, a figure kneeling at the water's edge, bending ovr a pile of clothes, washing—her head bound with a red handkerchief.

If you are quick, the miniature river will open just before you round the curve, disclosing in the distance groups of willows, and a rickety footbridges perched up on poles to keep it dry. All this you see in a flash.

But you must stop at the old-fashioned station, within ten minutes of the Harlem river, cross the road, skirt an old gardn bound with a fence and bursting with flowers, and so pass on through a bare field to the water's edge, before you catch sight of the cosy little houses lining the banks. . .

I have a love for the out-of-the-way places of the earth when they bristle all over with the quaint and the old and the odd, and are mouldy with the picturesque. But here is an in-the-way place, all sunshine and shimmer, with never a fringe of mould upon it, and yet you lose your heart at a glance. It is as charming in its boat life as an old Holland canal; it is as delightful in its shore life as the Seine; and it is as picturesque and entrancing in its sylvan beauty as the most exquisite of English streams.—From "A Day at Laguerre's and Other Days," by F. Hopkinson Smith.

The Poet's Day

The poet's day is different from another,
Tho' he doth count each man his own heart's brother.
So crystal-clear the air that he looks through,
It gives each color an intenser hue;
Each bush doth burn, and every flower flame;
The stars are shining; silence breathes a name.
The world wherein he wanders, dreams and sl..s
Thrills with the beating of invisible wings;
And all day long he rears from hidden birds
The low, melodious pour of musicked words.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson
Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 8

A discussion of the following question of a correspondent should interest all Auction and Contract players:

"First hand has bid no trump, second has passed, third has over-called his partner with two hearts and fourth has bid two spades. Under what conditions should the original hand (a) bid two no trumps, (b) raise his partner to three hearts."

This particular question opens up a very wide field of discussion and one that can be handled only in a very general way. For the purpose of this discussion it will be assumed that neither side has a score. Also assume that the dealer has bid one no trump with each of the following hands:

A
Hearts—Q, 8
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, 10, 9, 8
Spades—K, J, 7

B
Hearts—Q, 10, 7, 2
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, Q. 9
Spades—10, 4

C
Hearts—7, 2
Clubs—A, 10, 4, 2
Diamonds—K, Q, 9, 8
Spades—Q, 7, 2

D
Hearts—7, 4
Clubs—A, K, Q, 7, 6, 2
Diamonds—K, 10, 7
Spades—K, 7

Then assume that his partner has bid two hearts and fourth hand has bid two spades. With Hand A, the dealer should bid no trump. He has a double stopper in the spade suit and only two hearts. For this reason the no trump bid offers the better chance for game. If his partner has a strong heart suit, it is up to him to bid three hearts. The bid of two no trump indicates a strong hand but no particular help for the heart bid. Always hesitate to help your partner's suit bid with only two trumps or less. The only exception to this is when you hold ace or king and one other.

In Hand B, the dealer should undoubtedly bid three hearts. He has no stopper in the spade suit and yet very strong help for his partner's heart bid. This hand is a fine example of the type of hand on which to assist partner's suit bid.

In Hand C, the dealer should pass. He has only one stopper in spades and less than normal help for his partner's heart suit. For that reason, he should neither bid two no trump nor three hearts. It is a fine example of a hand that is just under the requirements for a two no trump bid.

In Hand D, the dealer should bid two no trump. He has only one stopper in the spades but his set-up club suit makes the hand a good chance for game in no trump. The fact that it contains only two small hearts makes a three-heart bid inadvisable. It is a fine example of a hand that is just over the requirements for a two no trump bid.

It is manifestly impossible to include in this discussion all of the various types of hands that might come under the conditions specified in the question, but the foregoing examples are typical and will act as a guide in the great majority of instances. As a general rule, bid two no trump if you have a double stopper in the suit bid or three hearts if you have three or more hearts to an honor and a sound no trump.

Last Instructions

When I am dead, and ashes in your hand,
In a mild Virginia meadow take your stand,
And pause a moment, thinking of the past,
Those rare road-walking days that couldn't last.

Think, "This was her body that swung along with me,
The same road the same violets, the very locust tree."
Think, "God she loved, and the witnesses of God
And in especial the Virginia sod.

Here we walked together, the wind whirled
As on the first bright morning of the world.
Hungry, tired, and tremblingly in love,
And something sang, I think a brown wood-dove."

These thoughts will pass like summer. Pause no more.
I shall be there as happy as before.
I shall be there to watch you turn aside,
Remembering. Then fling the ashes wide.

The Interdependence of Nations

Detroit News: Every great modern industrial country is dependent on world economy. Even we in the United States are finding out that our wealth is not simply the country's resources, means of production and population, but is conditioned by the international exchange of goods, services and capital. National self-containment is a pure political phantasy, as our own rapidly dwindling foreign trade with its terrible concomitants of bankruptcy and unemployment so tragically attests.

MUCH POWER IN STOP LIGHT.

Stoplight bulbs are more powerful than many car-owners realize. They average around fifteen candlepower in brilliance. Unless the motorist is aware of this, he might, in just dropping around to pick up a bulb, get one of inadequate power. It takes quite a bit of brilliance in the signal to make certain the oncoming driver will catch the "stop."

AIDS TO VISIBILITY.

Two handy aids to visibility are: Keeping the windshield wiper blade back at the top of the arc, and wiping the dust from the glass before driving into the sun. Both are so easy that it is surprising more motorists do not see that they are done.

USE OF BRUSH HELPS.

A brush with bristles that are not overly stiff is really the ideal thing with which to clean the closed car top. It gets down into the material in a fashion that is impossible for a cloth or sponge. A little lukewarm water—and nothing else—is the thing to use on the brush.

CAUSES OF CARBURETOR POPPING

There are quite many causes of popping back into the carburetor, a condition that may cause the engine to catch fire, especially if the outside of it is dirty and covered with oil. The four most common ones are dirt in the carburetor, sticking intake valves, water in the gasoline, and an air leak at the intake manifold connections.

PUT WINDSHIELD DOWN.

Many a car owner is only partially locking his door these days by leaving the windshield open, making it a simple matter to reach through and unlatch a door from the inside.

Astronomers Will View Sun's Eclipse

Toronto—The Royal Astronomical Society of Canada have formed a committee to organize an expedition to Northern Quebec to observe a total eclipse of the sun on August 31.

Professor H. R. Kingston, London, Ont., suggested the possibility of broadcasting the eclipse by television from an airplane. He said the path of totally would be 100 miles wide.

Imports of Canadian tobacco through the Port of London in 1930 amounted to 728,000 lbs. and in 1931 to 2,070,000 lbs., and is still on the increase.

HER HUSBAND TEASED HER

"I started taking Kruschen Salts for biliousness, and for the last two years I have been perfectly free from an attack. Now I continue to take them, as I find they keep me in perfect health. My husband used to joke about me taking Kruschen Salts; now he takes them himself, so do my children. My sincere thanks."
—Mrs. G. P.

When your gastric or digestive juices refuse to flow, your food, instead of becoming absorbed into your system, simply collects and ferments inside you, producing harmful acids and gases which give rise to biliousness, heartburn and flatulence.

Kruschen is a combination of six mineral salts, which goes right to the root of the trouble. It first stimulates the flow of gastric and other juices to aid digestion, and then ensures complete, regular and unfailing elimination of waste matter every day. And that means a blessed end to biliousness, and a renewed and whole-hearted enjoyment of your food without the slightest fear of having to pay the old painful penalty.

Reduce the Acid

SICK stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated.

Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour. Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. For 50 years the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Go, prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians in correcting excess acid.

No more COLIC pains ... give Castoria

A CRY in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. When there's need of gentle regulation. Every child loves the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is usually all that's needed to right the irregularities of older, growing children. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. It's prescribed by doctors!

Pleasant Evening With the Y.P.S.

A special feature of the United Church Y.P.S. meeting on Monday night was the address of Mr. Gilbert West, the Peel representative to the Boy's Parliament in Toronto. His talk enlightened the audience greatly as to the value of these parliaments to the boys. Mr. West is from Brampton and was introduced to the meeting by Donald Ewles also of Brampton. An impersonation of Christopher Columbus which was very humorous was also given by Donald Ewles. Albert Bolster from was in charge of that part of the program which was contributed by Brampton boys. Norman Worthy the Trail Rangers Representative to the Boys Parliament, from Brampton delighted the audience with a mouth organ selection.

The first part of the evening was in charge of the local society. Miss Ruth Ross read the scripture. The singing during the evening was ably led by Mr. MacArthur. Two interesting addresses were: "What Does Youth Expect of the Church," and "What Does the Church Expect of her Youth." The former was taken by Mr. Lawrence Dolby, and the latter by Rev. Geo. H. Purchase. A reading was given by Miss Hazel Ross in her usual good style.

After the meeting an enjoyable half hour of sociability was spent during which lunch was served.

Here and There

Figures of United States motor cars entering New Brunswick in 1931, issued by the provincial bureau of information and tourist travel, show an 8 per cent. gain over 1930. The new record for 1931 is 58,583 as compared with the former record of 54,068 for 1930.

Approximately $11,000,000 was saved in Canada last year in the cost of construction dwellings and other buildings in 61 cities owing to reduced cost of building materials. Aggregate value in these cities of building permits was $110,971,410.

The aid of Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, Canadian High Commissioner in London and of Lord Beaverbrook will be sought by the Maritime Provinces representatives who left aboard S.S. Montcalm from Halifax recently, in an effort to secure the lifting of the British Government's embargo on Canadian potatoes.

A railroad career that has seen many changes and covered much widely separated territory witnessed another movement when Robert E. Larmour, general freight agent, Canadian Pacific Railway, was transferred recently from Montreal to Toronto. Mr. Larmour, aside from his railway duties, is well known as one of Canada's outstanding yachtsmen.

Carnival Queen nominations from Edmonton, Drumheller and Vancouver testify to the great popularity of the Banff annual winter carnival to be held February 6 to 13. The Alberta branch of the A.A.U. of Canada has agreed to hold figure skating championships at the carnival and may hold their ski-ing championships there as well. Every kind of winter sport will be represented.

Entries are coming in rapidly for the great winter event of the 1932 sporting season, the 11th annual Eastern International Dog Sled Derby to be run over a course of 123 miles, spread over the three days February 22-24 and concluding with the Dog Derby Costume Ball at the Chateau Frontenac, February 24. St. Godard, Seppala and other names outstanding in Dog Sled racing are already entered.

The largest shipment of Government-approved cockerels for any one breeder or hatcheryman in Canada arrived recently by Canadian Pacific special at Fergus, Ont., from Winnipeg to the order of J. G. Tweddle, of the former city. The birds were selected by government inspectors from the choicest flocks from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. During the last four years Mr. Tweddle has shipped an average of 200,000 chickens to various points between the Atlantic and Pacific.

Competition between truck and railroad service is shown in a new angle by a letter recently to a Reading paper, "Labor." A cattle raiser of Niobrara, Nebraska, tried out both methods, shipping cattle by truck and by railroad. On the railroad there was a shrinkage of 21 pounds for each animal; by truck there was a shrinkage of 98 pounds each. What the raiser saved on freight he much more than lost on the animals shipped by truck, where the value of the shrinkage amounted to $13.14 on each animal. (618)

Car Drivers Make Plea for Saint's Protection

The holy Saint Francisca is the patroness of motorists. She was, in the Middle ages, a charitable woman who mitigated many misfortunes. On the Roman forum stands her little church, appearing almost fragile, yet most beautiful, amid the mighty arches and ruins of ancient Rome. Upon her feast day, in March, there come every year hundreds and still more hundreds of automobiles to the square before this little church.

All sorts of cars are there, belonging not only to the wealthy, but to the poor as well. Ambassadors and other government officials are represented. Instead of chauffeurs sitting at the wheel in solemn state, these functionaries and many lovely young ladies, too, drive their own cars to the consecrated spot, where at the altar of Saint Francisca their vehicles may be protected against disaster and misfortune for another year.

Successive services are held in which the guardianship of the saint is invoked, and all the cars driven to the precincts of her altar are blessed and dedicated to her, that she may intercede for their owners and drivers, and guard them from peril and accident during the year to come, and very appropriately at the season of the year when motor traveling is most prevalent. Certainly these ceremonies have a deep and solemn significance, occurring as they do in the very center of what was anciently a pagan Rome!—Berliner Tageblatt.

Life's Prime, the Years Between Youth and Age

At what age is the average man or woman in his or her prime of life? is often asked, and what is the average length of life?

The prime of life, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is the period of full vigor and power, that which succeeds youth and precedes age.

The average length of life in the United States, according to estimates made by the United States public health service, is fifty-six years. Statistics indicating the expectation of life place Australia at the head of the list with an average length of sixty-one years. New Zealand comes second, with an average expectation of sixty years. The average expectation of life at birth in various countries, according to the United States bureau of the census, is as follows: Denmark, Norway and Sweden, fifty-seven years; England, fifty-three years; Holland, fifty-two; Switzerland, fifty-one; France, fifty; Germany, forty-six; Japan, forty-four and India, twenty-three. Statistics also show that females have a greater expectation of life at birth than males.

England's Earthquake Year

About one hundred and seventy years ago England experienced the first of a series of severe earthquakes, which created great alarm. The first shock was very distinct, the second still more severe, and a crazy soldier scared many folk almost out of their wits by predicting that the third, which he timed for April 6, would totally destroy London. On April 5, tens of thousands of all ranks quitted the metropolis, and many who remained were afraid to go to bed, but spent the night in the streets. The prophecy proved false, of course, but further shocks were felt in various parts of the country in the spring and summer of that year, and some held the prophet justified—with some error of date and locality—by the awful earthquake which shortly after destroyed Lisbon.

Should Appeal to Tourists

The Baltic republics of Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia and Finland, formed from territories of the old Russian empire as a result of the World war, offer the tourist a region of great interest and beauty for exploration. Scenes of natural splendor abound along the winding coastlines and amid the dense northern forests of all these countries and about the vast and innumerable lakes of Finland. What is not generally known is that each of these peoples boasts of long centuries of independent civilizations and that in many of the cities relics of unspoiled and charming medieval beauty remain.

Coffee Production

The regions best adapted to the production of coffee are those between the parallels 15 degrees north and 15 degrees south latitude and from 1,000 to 4,000 feet above sea level. It is cultivated from latitude 25 degrees north to 30 degrees south in places where the temperature does not fall below 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Moist and somewhat shady slopes are found most desirable. Little streams of water are conducted to the roots of trees which are kept very wet until the fruit is nearly ripe, then the water is turned off to keep the fruit from becoming too succulent.

Area Taken From Mexico

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, conveyed to the United States the territory which has since become the states of California, Nevada and Utah, part of Colorado, and the largest parts of New Mexico and Arizona. Previous to that time, this territory belonged to Mexico. Five years later, the United States purchased from Mexico about 45,000 square miles of southern Arizona for $20,000,000. Feb. 10, Wednesday, next week at 7.30 p.m. is Scouts Night in our village. But Scouts of themselves will never do well without the support of the community. For this reason we again remind the readers of this column that a hearty welcome awaits them. Come along and see your boy invested.

The Streetsville Troop will be presented with their troop flag, a large sheet of green with the Scout Crest and Troop number and name in large yellow letters. Won't our boys be proud to think that in a few months their number has swelled to about 45 and they are to be fully invested?

The committee of six citizens of Streetsville to decide on Scout matters will also be invested. The personel has not been made known but our next column will, no doubt give out such information.

All Scouts are solicited to turn out that evening. We urge you to make a special effort to be on hand. Fifteen Scout badges, six supporters badges and Scout Master and Assoc. Scoutmaster badges will be presented. Fireside talk by visitors, four visiting patrols in full colors. Come and join the fun. Bring your parents along.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive. Indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. E. Ames, 225 College Street, Toronto.

YOUR COMPLEXION

"Looks healthy" is a descriptive phrase which we frequently use, and it is based on the complexion more than on anything else. There is good reason for saying that the person with a clear skin, which is free from blemish, looks healthy for he likely is. The skin is an organ of the body, and so it reflects the general condition of the body, whether this be favourably or unfavourably.

Blemishes of the skin are not serious, but they are annoying, and they cause discomfort and embarrassment to those who are afflicted with them. Blackheads usually develop on the face, but they are seen sometimes on the back and the chest. It is during adolescence that they generally begin to show themselves, and they tend to disappear as the individual grows older.

The blackheads are due to the blocking of the pores with the secretions of the gland which are excessive. The top of the blackhead is not dirt. The white mass which is expressed when the blackhead is squeezed is the hardened secretions of the gland which have formed a plug.

Blackheads may and generally do cause pimples. The blackhead acts as a foreign body and irritates the pore. Pus-forming germs may get into this plug of blocked-up secretions, and if so, they cause pimples which may extend and cause boils.

The condition is most common among those individuals who have an oily skin. However, as we stated previously, the skin is affected by the condition of other parts of the body. So it is that the occurrence of blackheads and pimples is favoured by digestive disturbances, improper diet, constipation and lack of fresh air, exercise and sleep.

In general we may say that an unhygienic life may be reflected in these skin conditions, and that where attention is given to the simple rules of healthy living, they are far less likely to occur.

When blackheads and pimples do occur, attention is given to the general habits of the patient's life rather than to the skin. The diet must be considered. Any insufficiency of green vegetables and of fruits is corrected, and any excess use of potatoes, pastry and sugar is cut down. The free use of water for drinking is encouraged.

Sufficient sleep, out-door exercise, fresh air and sunshine are all required if the body—and this includes the skin—is to be healthy.

Cleanliness of the skin is necessary if the skin is to be healthy. The face is to be washed regularly with non-irritating soap and water. The idea that soap and water are harmful to the complexion, and that the face should be cleansed with creams only, is all wrong. Greases mechanically plug up the pores, thus helping blackheads to form; what is needed is washing to clean the skin.

A good complexion comes from within and is an expression of personal health. It cannot be bought and applied on the outside.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly the actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as hers. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested, she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states that Orme is the real husband of Sheila. Orme admits seeing Sheila on the night of her death. Dr. Cavanaugh takes the stand.

"Thank you." Dr. Cavanaugh nodded affably. "I will begin, then, with the early afternoon of a day last month, when I returned to my house from a morning round of golf and found a man whom I now know to be David Orme, sitting on the doorstep of my office, blocking my entrance."

Graham's head jerked back, his startled gaze seeking the doctor's face. The district attorney's chair made a scraping sound as he pushed himself back from the table with both hands. But Dr. Cavanaugh, apparently oblivious to the sensation his statement had caused, was turned toward the jury box, his eyes studiously regarding the toe of his shoe as he crossed one knee over the other and leaned back at ease in the witness chair.

"Behold the Ethiopian emerging from the woodpile!" Harry chortled to his "twin" in gleeful excitement.

"Just cast your eyes on Graham—he's getting something he didn't bargain for," the other twin urged, digging an elbow into his mate's ribs for emphasis.

"No talking in the courtroom, please!"

Abandoning his futile attempt to catch Dr. Cavanaugh's eye, Graham, with an obvious effort, schooled his voice to non-committal formality.

"And on what date, doctor, did this—this meeting occur?"

The district attorney's chair scraped sharply again—forward this time.

"I beg your pardon? I—I think I must have misunderstood." Graham was clutching the edge of the table before him with both hands. "Will you repeat that date please?"

Dr. Cavanaugh turned and surveyed his agitated questioner with mild amusement.

"I said"—he raised his voice as if he had just discovered that Graham was slightly deaf—"March fourth of this year."

"But that—that was before Mrs. Ellsworth disappeared!" Graham seemed hardly able to credit the testimony of his senses.

"The inference," Dr. Cavanaugh assented smoothly, "is quite correct."

CHAPTER XLVI.

"Proceed." In that one word, Graham gave it up, and abandoned himself and David Orme to Dr. Cavanaugh. He was no longer directing the examination—he was merely a part of the audience. He glanced briefly at the district attorney, hoping that the prosecutor was too absorbed in his own astonishment to notice that his surprise was shared by his opponent.

"Mr. Orme was at that time in a state of extreme agitation. He told me that in passing the house he had recognized my name on the door-plate. The maid told him I was out, and saw patients only by appointment. Nevertheless, he had settled himself on the doorstep to wait.

"He told me at once that he was without funds, but begged me to help him in what he described as a 'terrible extremity.' I admitted him to my office, gave him a mild sedative, and, when he was somewhat quieter, asked him the nature of his trouble.

"I will summarize his statement as succinctly as possible in order not to weary you." Dr. Cavanaugh paused and glanced at the jury with his smile of courteous apology. Every face was turned towards him with tense interest. Even the judge leaned forward.

"Mr. Orme told me at that time that he had been, for almost a year, suffering from a complete loss of memory for preceding events. His memory, that is, was clear for the period between last April and the present. For events preceding that time, his mind was a total blank. As perhaps you know, this state of amnesia is technically called a fugue."

The jury didn't know, but they appreciated the implied flattery, and tried to look as if they did.

"I went back rather carefully over the patient's personal history for the last 11 months. If I may be allowed to use an imperfect analogy, it was as if the strip of continuity, of the stream of memories which makes us conscious of ourselves as unbroken personalities, had been cut off at a particular point, with no way of uniting the severed edges.

"He had found himself walking along a country road, hatless and without luggage. If he had had a wallet containing money and a means of identification, he had lost it or it had been stolen from him. The only clue to his identity which he could discover was a fountain pen in his pocket with the initials 'D. O.' engraved on a gold band around the barrel.

"From that time on, for a period of 11 months, he had worked as a casual ranch hand, using the name Daniel Osgood, which was suggested to him by the initials on the pen.

"He had kept moving, in hope that eventually some scene or circumstance would recall his past life to him. On the day when I saw him, he had received his first hint—the first stimulus which seemed to have aroused a response connected with his past life. I hope I am not being too detailed—taking up too much of your time with all this?"

"Gee," he whispered to the "Q" twin. "Spell me on this, will you? It's all answer and no questions. Do you think you're getting paid just to sit and loaf in a ringside seat at this trial?"

"All right, hand it over. But say, do you notice what a sense of the dramatic the old bird has? He always asks if he's boring them at the most crucial moments."

"I haven't had time to notice anything but keeping up with the pothooks."

For once, even the bailiff was too absorbed to chastise the offenders against courtroom etiquette.

"Go on, please, doctor. The court will be glad to listen to all you have to say."

"The circumstances to which I refer was a moving picture. Orme, or Osgood as I called him then, had dropped into a moving picture house, more for a place to sit down and rest than for anything else. But an incident in the picture had aroused in him an intense, though indefinite, emotional disturbance.

"It was a scene in which an angry man knocked a woman down. He was unable to stay for the conclusion of the story, and rushed out into the street, in a state of acute excitement. His first clear recognition out of the past was the sight of my name on the door-plate when he passed my house—he recongized it, that is, as belonging to a more or less well known psychiatrist."

"'More or less'—get that?" nudged Harry.

"It would be—unnecessary to take you step by step through the analysis by which, in the course of the next two weeks, I finally knitted together the severed portions of Orme's consciousness.

"Working backward, I discovered that in his childhood he had received a powerful shock when his father, in a drunken rage had struck his mother and knocked her down. The woman had hit her head in falling and was stunned; and the child, left alone with her when his father had stormed out of the house, had believed her to be dead.

"The incident was buried in his subconscious and apparently forgotten—it was only a short time afterwards that a musician became interested in Orme's remarkable talent and undertook his education, separating him from his family associations. But the horror of scene, intensified by his helplessness, nevertheless made an ineffaceable and powerful impression.

"When, as he has told you, he in a moment of anger struck his wife, Sheila O'Shay, and saw her fall as his mother had fallen, he found himself reproducing the scene which had given him so profound a shock in his childhood. He in his own person was re-enacting the role of his hated father. The reproduction of a similar scene on the screen naturally caused a resurgence of the emotional storm, and gave us a starting point for reconstruction.

"The amnesia from which he was suffering explains the fact that Orme was unaware of his wife's subsequent marriage until so long after it had taken place.

"There are other items, of course, which require explanation. Not every one would have responded to the same set of circumstances as David Orme responded to them. We must remember that he was and always has been an unstable personality—an instability recognized by the laiety in reference to the high-strung sensitiveness, the 'temperament' of certain geniuses.

"In such a personality, a rift in the stream of memory technically called a fugue is invariably a means of escape from an unbearable reality. When Orme found himself performing the same act which had so horrified him in his father, he reacted by a complete denial of the intolerable fact—by, in short, foregtting the painful situation and becoming, in effect, someone else. I have no doubt whatever that the emotional strain of seeing his wife again on the night of March 18 caused a slight recurrence of retroactive amnesia, which explains his confusion as to the details of the interview and his inability to remember his parting from Sheila O'Shay and his return to the automobile camp grounds where he was staying.

"That is all, I think."

Graham looked enquiringly toward Dr. Cavanaugh, but except for an almost imperceptible curve of amusement at the corners of his mouth, the doctor's face was inscrutible.

"FATIGUE? I just postpone it!"

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others.

"Then I learned to rely on Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache is rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable the pain seldom returns!

Keep Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practise.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying Aspirin. Don't take a substitute because it will not act the same. Aspirin is made in Canada.

Sun and Snow

Sunlight is curious about snow.
It glares intently,—wants to know
How flakes are made, and why the crust
Of snow can powder into dust.

The sunlight cannot hold aloof
When snow is dazzling on a roof.
It wants to know what makes it gleam,
And why the eaves should run a stream.

Inquisitively, sunlight peers
At beauty melting into tears.
It stares surprised, and does not know
That its attentions melt the snow.

Unshaken Faith in Future Of Canada Expressed at Royal Bank Annual Meeting

"I have witnessed many depressions during the last fifty years and I can see nothing in this one which weakens my faith in this country."—Sir Herbert Holt, President.

"While I do not wish to voice any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place in 1932."—M. W. Wilson, Vice-President and General Manager.

At the annual meeting of The Royal Bank of Canada held at the Head Office in Montreal, both the President, Sir Herbert Holt, and the Vice-President and General Manager, Mr. M. W. Wilson, were emphatic in their expressions of unqualified confidence in Canada. Sir Herbert Holt's mature and world-wide business experience is reflected in his statement, "I have witnessed many depressions during the course of the last fifty years and I see nothing in this one which weakens my faith in this country." The tone of both addresses was one of quiet optimism, exemplified by Mr. Wilson's remark, "While I do not wish to voice any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place during 1932. The leaders of politics and finance in the principal countries are capable of bringing this about and the indictment against any who block the way will be severe indeed." The President pointed out that with quoted values of most securities well under their intrinsic worth, improvement could be expected as and when measures were taken which would result in a real return of confidence in the United States. Earlier in his remarks he had referred to the splendid record of the Canadian banking system during a time when disorganization in finance was accentuating the depression in many other countries. He expressed the opinion that the relatively satisfactory position of Canada could be attributed in no small degree to the stability of our banking organization and the way in which industry had been supported.

Before moving the adoption of the report Sir Herbert referred with profound regret to the death of Mr. Neill, after a lifetime spent in the service of the bank. "In his passing the bank has lost a wise councillor, his associates a loyal friend, and Canada an eminent banker and distinguished citizen."

After dealing briefly with the situation in agriculture and the principal manufacturing industries, Sir Herbert referred to the plans which are under way for a consolidation of the principal newsprint companies in Eastern Canada, and expressed the opinion that the development though difficult of accomplishment was a constructive one and highly desirable if Canada was to continue to maintain the supremacy to which she is entitled by reason of her natural advantages.

Railways

The appointment of a railway commission was mentioned with approval and the belief expressed that such a commission should be capable of bringing in recommendations which would in large measure solve the present very serious situation caused by uneconomic competition and duplication of services. The President stated "Savings to the country of from $60/75,000,000 a year are possible and this without impairment of service to the public."

Imperial Conference

Pointing out that as long as other nations raise intolerable tariff barriers against British Empire goods it is necessary that the different parts of the Empire should protect themselves by concerted action, he expressed hope in the results of the Imperial Conference to be held in Ottawa, provided careful analysis and close study produced a scientific tariff structure which would stimulate reciprocal Empire trade without handicapping home industry.

Publi Finance

The success of the National Service Loan was referred to as a notable achievement. He stressed the fact that both internal and external revenue had been reduced by the decline in the activity of trade and that excessive expenditures by governments and municipalities had placed a heavy burden of interest payments on the people. "There never was a time in our history when it was so necessary to avoid extravagance of every kind, and governments, Federal, Provincial and Municipal, should follow the splendid example set by the British National Government in reducing the cost of administration and balancing their budget."

Closing his remarks Sir Herbert said in part: "It has been said that it is darkest just before the dawn, and in previous depressions conditions have seemed most discouraging at a time when improvement had already set in. The violence of the depression must of itself tend to produce a strong reaction. It may well be that the gold countries are now on the verge of a rise in the price level. With a sound and strongly integrated banking system, no important investments in depreciated securities of foreign governments, an industrious and virile people who have maintained their morale unimpaired, and with a system of government permitting prompt and decisive action, Canada is in a relatively satisfactory position and we are justified in looking to the future with confidence."

General Manager's Address

Mr. M. W. Wilson, Vice-President and General Manager, stated that maintenance of the Bank's assets at a figure as high as $325,000,000 reflected not only the conservation of existing business but also the acquisition of new and desirable connections. He referred to the substantial over-subscription of the Dominion of Canada National Service Loan as an achievement of which our government and Canadians generally may well be proud.

Strong Liquid Position Maintained

The liquid position of the bank was maintained at substantially the same ratio as a year ago, quickly realizable assets being more than 43% of liabilities to the public. In referring to the enviable record of the Canadian banking system during the period of world depression, Mr. Wilson said: "Once again the ability of the Canadian banking system to take care of the needs of the country has been clearly demonstrated. The type of organization under which they operate enables our banks to take a broad view of the transactions that come before them and I think it will be admitted that the disposition has been to deal with problems in a sympathetic and constructive manner."

Business in Other Countries

"Entirely satisfactory," were the words used in describing the bank's experience during the last year in the foreign countries where it operates.

Mr. Wilson pointed out that the Bank's foreign branches have never been allowed to expose themselves to risk of loss through exchange fluctuations and as a result their experience during the last year had been entirely satisfactory.

Commodity Levels

The General Manager expressed the opinion that the restoration of commodity price levels to the basis of 1924-1928 was essential to a really satisfactory recovery in world business. He made favourable reference to the anti-deflation measures now being considered by the United States Congress and felt that they justified the hope that corrective forces would soon be at work in that country.

Business Psychology

"As the depression continues the factor of business psychology is one of constantly increasing importance," Mr. Wilson declared. Distrust and lack of confidence are largely responsible for the extremes to which world business has gone. He indicated that we in Canada had been particularly fortunate in this respect and said, "Confidence in our country and in our ability to solve the problems that present themselves is above the average and in my opinion is amply justified by our past record and future prospects." Lack of international confidence was the main obstacle in the way to world-wide business recovery. Mr. Wilson went on to express the opinion that confidence could be restored by co-operation between the leaders of politics and finance in the principal countries. Signs are not lacking that progress may be made along these lines and this formed the basis for his statement, "While I do not wish to venture any prediction as to the date of business recovery, it will be very disappointing if an improvement does not take place during 1932."

Mr. Wilson pointed out in vigorous terms that we must not get into the frame of mind in which we think of losses as pertaining to all business activities. The majority are holding their own, he declared, and while reduced earnings for the time being may be inevitable, we should be gratified that in this period of transition a great majority of our Canadian concerns are more than covering operating expenses and our agricultural population is staying on the land and maintaining the acreage under cultivation. Closing on a note of optimism, Mr. Wilson said, "There are signs of stabilization in a number of directions, our physical assets are being kept intact and, with reasonable economy and hard work, we shall find that Canada will be one of the first countries to feel the good results of business recovery."

Spanish Melody

One of the most delightful things in Spain is its strange Eastern music, and of all the music by far the most magical is the "Malaguena." This is a plaintive little song or chant which is hummed under the breath, started by one, taken up and varied a little by another, carried right down the street like a thread of melody, everyone singing a few bars. Sometimes it is the veriest whisper; sometimes it rises to a wailing chant. It is quite bewildering, for you cannot place it; it often seems to die away altogether and begin again as a sort of echo, but with different harmonies and intervals and always in a minor key. The narrow streets of Malaga are full of this strange ghostly music, and the women washing clothes in the riverbed all hum it, each one improvising as she goes on, but it always stops suddenly if it is noticed that any stranger is listening.—From "Spanish Sunshine," by Eleanor Elsner.

"Carelessness and inconsiderateness in dress, in speech and in personal habits have become all to common"—Nicholas Murray Butler.

Sunday School Lesson

February 7. Lesson VI—The Slavery of Sin (Temperance Lesson)—Matthew 23: 45-51; John 8: 31-36. Golden Text—Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.—John 8: 34.

ANALYSIS

I. KNOWING THE TRUTH, John 8: 31, 32

II. DENYING OUR BONDAGE, John 8: 33, 34.

III. THE TRUE FREEDOM, John 8: 35, 36.

INTRODUCTION—Jesus had been warning the Jews against the consequences of their unbelief, 8: 21-30. His own life was so of a piece with his spoken "testimony"—"I always do those things that please him" (v. 29) —that many people believed on him, v. 30. Others—"the Jews"—became convinced that he was the Messiah. The faith of some of them, he saw to be unreliable. His message to them is our message today in this lesson.

I. KNOWING THE TRUTH, John 8: 31, 32

The translation in the Authorized Version of vs. 30, 31 is "believed on." In v. 31 a better rendering would be "believed." Verse 30 tells of a real faith, a personal trust and loyalty. Verse 31 tells simply of an intellectual, doctrinal belief. The Jews—those who, in this Gospel, are taken as the party antagonistic to Jesus—became convinced that he was the Messiah. Their conviction, however, made no change in their lives. They said, "We believe that what you say is true," but they did not make them "followers" of Jesus.

To them Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; And ye shall know the truth," vs. 31, 32. That is, Jesus' teaching can be understood only by those who are prepared to practice it—who make their "faith" the principle by which they guide all their activities. Every earnest man asks the question, "Why am I here? What is life's purpose for me?" He wants to know the truth. Only as he makes Jesus' way of living his way will he come to understand the meaning of life and his place in it. He shall know the truth.

Knowing this and seeing therefore the "real" unhidden by "appearances" he will be saved from error sin and folly. His moral vision will set him free from the moral dangers into which, through ignorance of their real character, he might otherwise fall. He sees, for example, his own body as a temple of God in the building. Therefore he can permit nothing that will deface or defile it.

II. DENYING OUR BONDAGE, John 8: 33, 34.

The Jews were insulted at the suggestion that they were not free, v. 33. "We were never in bondage to any man." Then what about Egypt, Babylon, Persia, Syria? Even as they spoke, was the Roman garrison not looking down from the castle into the Temple courts—keeping a watchful eye upon these conquered Jews. Like most of us, they were able to ignore and even deny unpleasant facts.

Hence, of course, they felt no need of freedom. What more discouraging work than offering salvation to people who do not feel their need of it—solving problems which trouble no one—answering questions which no one is asking? How indifferently we listen to the story of God's redeeming love. Nevertheless, when it is forced upon our attention, we are conscious that we are "out" with the moral universe around us. We find a law—an influence working upon us—that when we would do good evil is present with us. We are in bondage.

III. THE TRUE FREEDOM, John 8: 35, 36.

When Jesus then contrasted the family relationship of the slave with that of the son (v. 35) he meant that no matter how long or how hard a man's bondage to sin had been, it was still only an artificial and, if he so desired, a temporary bondage. Whether he be a drunkard, apparently hopelessly enslaved by the drink habit, or one of those who are even harder to redeem—the respectable complacent folk who are saturated with the form of religion, but uninfluenced by its power—his bondage can be broken.

By whom? "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed," v. 36. How does the Son deliver me from the sin that holds me? He wins me by the power of his own pure love to awaken an answering love in me. If the one whom I have greatly wronged is able to convince me that his love for me is strong enough, not only to overcome any resentment toward me, but to forgive me freely and yearn with a passionate longing for my answering love, then I cannot but respond to it. The thing that wounded him will become hateful to me. When I am brought face to face with the abandon with which God in Christ has loved me I become free from the shackles of my old bondage. I enter into a new relationship with my Saviour—brother. "Sin, which was once so alluring now becomes not merely a prohibited thing, but actually distasteful; and goodness, which was once so difficult, becomes not only a thing required of me, but actually a thing I love," Baillie—This is the true freedom from sin.

Lost—a Patient

Mr. Birrell, when Irish Secretary, told this story about the only time he ever wanted to consult a doctor.

"Once only in my life did I feel persuaded that I was smitten with a mortal disease. I started on my way to consult a distinguished doctor.

"It was a hot July day and I thought the time was come for my last walk. I walked from my home to Harley Street. I found the great physician's room crowded with patients, and, while waiting, I saw on the table a book written by the great physician on the subject of this particular disease.

"The first words which caught my eye were these: 'The patient who is suffering from this disease never perspires.' I picked up my hat and walked out."

Caves of Ice

The shadow of the dome of pleasure
Floated midway on the waves;
Where was heard the mingled measure
From the fountain and the caves.
It was a miracle of rare device,
A sunny pleasure-dome with caves of ice!
A damsel with a dulcimer
In a vision once I saw.
It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she played.
Singing of Mount Abora.
Could I revive within me
Her symphony and song,
To such a deep delight 'twould win me,
That with music loud and long,
I would build that dome in air,
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
—Samuel aylor Coleridge, Poems.

They Didn't

A dentist was about to extract the tooth of a girl who declined an anaesthetic but resolutely closed her jaws whenever he approached her with the forceps.

At last he whispered to his assistant: "Quietly stick that needle in her back. That will make her open her mouth!"

The assistant carried out his instructions. The girl opened her mouth and the tooth was removed.

The dentist said: "I hope you didn't experience much pain?"

"No," she answered, "but I never knew the roots went down so far."

The Other Clan

The foreman of a big motor works was interviewing a number of applicants.

Presently a lean, angular man was shown into his office.

"Well," asked the foreman, "are you a mechanic?"

The applicant shook his head.

"No, sorr," he replied gravely, "I'm a McTosh."

Mrs. Flat—"It's so close in here, can't you let in a little fresh air?"

Briefs Abroad

The ordinary type of cold costs Gt. Britain at least £6,000,000 a year in loss of working time.

England's army of Civil Servants shows an increase of more than 5,000 over the figures for a year ago.

The last sailing-ship to be built in Britain was the Archibald Russell; she was built in Glasgow in 1905.

It costs £50,000 for the voyage to Canada and back of the new Canadian Pacific liner, Empress of Britain.

The only private "army" maintained in Britain is that of the Duke of Atholl. It is one thousand strong, and is complete with artillery.

Buses now being built for London traffic will seat sixty-three passengers, room being made for the ten extra fares by extending the top deck over the driver's cabin.

In the Vatican Library, the roof of which suddenly collapsed recently, were 400,000 printed books, 53,000 MSS., and 6,000 works of art. Most of these were, however, undamaged.

Penguins' eggs, which are bigger than those of the turkey, take half an hour to boil. They are already in use in South Africa, and it is planned to put them on sale in Gt. Britain at $1.10 a dozen.

Men are said to be more susceptible to colds than women. Gt. Britain's figures go to prove that seventy-seven per cent. of the male patients suffer from colds, as compared with sixty per cent. of the women.

England's roadways have become still more dangerous to pedestrians, according to police figures. In the year just ended fifty children under five years of age were killed, as compared with thirty-eight the previous year.

German women and girls spend, on an average, twice as much on cosmetics and perfumes as do the women of Gt. Britain. According to official figures, this expenditure in Germany works out at one shilling per person every 200 days.

During the last twelve months 27,000 people were reported "missing" in Paris, and more than 25,000 in New York. Britain's annual figure, of women and girls, for the whole country, is about 15,000, of which number less than one-tenth remain undiscovered for more than two weeks.

"Extreme" marriages last year in England included three girls of twenty who wedded men of seventy or over, one girl aged seventeen who married a bridegroom of sixty-seven, a man of twenty-two whose bride was aged sixty, and a twenty-eight-year-old groom who mated a woman of seventy.

Painters of Child-Life

If we could gather into one great gallery all the paintings of child-life which the world has ever produced, there would be scattered here and there some few works of a distinctly unique character, before which we should rest so completely satisfied that we should quite forget to look at any others. These choice gems are the work of those rare men of genius who, looking beyond all trivial circumstances and individual peculiarities, discovered the essential secrets of child-life, and embodied them in ideal types. They are pictures of childhood, rather than of children, representing those phases of thought and emotion which are peculiar to the child as such, and which all children possess in common. In their presence every mother spontaneously exclaims, "How like my own little one!" because the artist has interpreted the real child nature. Such pictures may justly take rank among the highest productions of creative art, having proven their claim to greatness by their unquestioned appeal to universal admiration.

In work of this kind one name alone is prominent, a name which England is proud to claim as hers, but to which all the world pays honor—the name of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Prince of Child-painters. A simple-hearted man, of sweet, kindly disposition, the great portrait-painter, bachelor though he was, possessed in rare measure the mysterious gift of winning the confidence of children. The great octagonal studio in Leicester Square must have often resounded to the laughter of childish voices as he entertained his little patrons with the pet dogs and birds he used in their portraits, and coaxed them into good nature with a thousand merry tricks. Although the greater number of these little people belonged to the most wealthy and aristocratic families in England, their pictures do not in any way indicate their rank. Still less do they show any distinguishing marks of the artificial age in which they lived. Dressed in the simplest of costumes, of the sort which is never out of fashion and always in the best taste, and posed in the natural attitudes of unconscious grace, they are representatives of childhood, pure and simple, rather than of any particular social class or historical period.

A list of Sir Joshua's child pictures may suitably begin with one which, in his own opinion, is among the best and most original of all his works. This is the Strawberry girl, exhibited in 1773, and repeated many times by the painter,—"not so much for the sake of profit," as Northcote explains, "as for improvement." The model was the artist's pretty niece, Miss Theophila ("Offy") Palmer who was named for his mother, and whom he loved as his own daughter.

The little girl stands with head slightly drooping, in the sweet shy way so natural to a timid child. The big eyes are lifted to ours half confidently, half timidly while a smile hovers bewitchingly over the mouth. A long pointed basket hangs on one arm, and the little hands are folded together in front like a little woman's. The child wears a curious round cap on her head, under which, presumably, her hair is gathered up in womanly fashion, for there are no stray locks to be seen except the two soft curves on the forehead.—From "Child-Life in Art," by Estelle M. Hurll.

The Cobbler

A little cloud in a golden veil
At setting of the sun:
And I a cobbled working—working;
Work is never done.

A little cloud in a golden veil;
And I am mending shoes,
Never a feathered sandal thing
Such as a cloud may use.

A little cloud in a golden veil,
Along the bright highway:
And but for her, tomorrow were
Another yesterday.

And this will stay, though she melt away
After the moon sets sail.
For no man's sky is always gray,

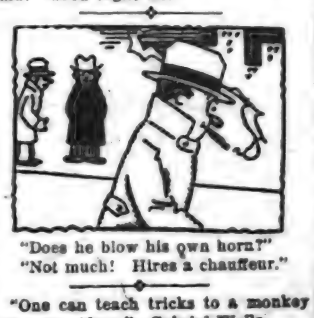
Rubbing It In



An actor consulted his doctor, saying he felt seedy.

"No wonder," said the doctor, who knew his man. "You never leave the theatre till midnight. Then you hang around the club talking and smoking till early in the morning. What you want to do is to go straight home from work rise with the lark, and have an early-morning walk."

The actor determined to do so.

Next morning he was up at six, had a walk round the park, and reached home just as the milkman was leaving.

The milkman touched his cap and said: "Good night sir."

"Does he blow his own horn?"

Grain shipments through the port of Halifax were nearly 400,000 bushels greater in 1931 than in 1930. Figures for the two years are: 1930, 731,995 bushels; 1931, 1,126,787 bushels.

Gold production from Northern Ontario mines in 1931 is estimated to have a value of $42,000,000. Since mining began 25 years ago, these mines have produced to a value of $396,000,000 worth of gold.

The Mountain comes to Mahomet these days. University of Alberta gives educational courses by radio four times a week, enabling those unable to attend in person to have the university taken to them.

Total value of all field crops produced in Canada in 1931 is estimated at $431,251,000, of which wheat accounts for $108,786,000. Hay and clover is the next most valuable crop, being put at $113,961,000.

A solid block of blue granite hewn from the side of Mt. Sir Donald, in the Canadian Rockies, has been shipped to New Haven, Connecticut, to be incorporated in the new Strathcona Memorial Building now being built at Yale University.

The five great branches of primary industry in Canada, as measured by the latest available statistics of value of production were agriculture, forestry, mining, electric power and fisheries, with the first having a production greater than all the four others combined.

Out for the E. W. Beatty mid-winter golf championship trophy to be fought for over the links of the Royal Colwood Golf Course, February 22-27, leading amateurs from Seattle have notified their intention to compete. Last year's cup winners from Victoria will also tee off and there will be strong contingents from Vancouver and the Prairie Provinces as far east as Winnipeg.

Who is the Canadian Pacific pensioner with the longest service record? A controversy recently raging has been ended by the official statement that John Caesar, of Vancouver, is the "grand old man" of the company, with 48 years of service, closely followed by W. J. Grant, of Hamilton, with 47. They are respectively 81 and 78 years of age.

Highly pleased with their first experience of Canadian ski-ing country, delighted with Canadian hospitality and looking forward to future visits to the Dominion, the Oxford-Cambridge skiers sailed recently from Saint John to Liverpool aboard the Duchess of York. Matches between Canadian and British university ski teams will probably be a result of the visit.

Eyes of winter sport enthusiasts are now being focussed on the big event of the season on this continent, the 11th annual Eastern International Dog Sled Derby to be held February 22-24 at Quebec over a course of 123 miles, terminating with the Dog Derby Ball at the Chateau Frontenac. Outstanding dog mushers are entered for the event. (815)

In a little house in a back street two children are awaiting Mother's and Dad's return. They are being helped by a friendly organization but there can be no home for them until their parents come back.

Where are the parents? For many months they have been struggling for lost health and strength in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives. They have benefited greatly, as so many hundreds do, from the quietness, fresh air, kindly nursing and medical attention.

"Able to walk to the dining-room for two meals a day now" is the proud boast of the husband and father. But a short time ago he could not be moved from his bed. A few months from now, who knows, he may be back again taking up the burden of the home.

Such work as this has great economic value to the community as well as opening the only way from misery and despair to hundreds of the consumptive poor. The hospital greatly needs your help. Will you please send a gift to Mr. A. E. Ames, 228 College St., Toronto.

Nita was worried . . . she could not imagine where she had lost her bracelet—in the hotel or on the journey home.

"I can't think what I could have done with it," she kept telling her mother.

"Why not telephone to the hotel," mother suggested. "It's after eight-thirty now and a call will only cost a few cents."

Imagine Nita's joy when the hotel clerk told her that the bracelet had been found in her room and would be mailed to her right away.

Thanks to her mother's suggestion, Nita's anxiety was relieved at once . . . and the cost of the call was considerably less than her taxi fare from the station.

Bert's Desire

From a window in a little back street in an Ontario town, a small boy gazed longingly on the "ball players" in an adjoining lot. A strange weakness kept him resting on a chair or in his cot, unable to join in the fun.

When the doctor was called, a glance told him the story, and it was not long before little Bert was hurried off to the Queen Mary Hospital for Consumptive Children. Here the great desire of his life seems likely to be granted. Bert has made wonderful progress, and the nurse says hopefully that in a few months more he will be able to try his prowess in the baseball nine—and what greater happiness could befall a little bed-ridden lad than this?

To save many such as Bert from consumption, this great work must go on, helped by subscriptions upon which the hospital so largely depends. A gift from you will be gratefully appreciated. Please send it to Mr. A. E. Ames, 223 College St., Toronto.

Better Business Ahead Says Beatty And Canada is Ready to Move Forward

Canadian Pacific President Issues His Annual Review of Economic Conditions and the Outlook for Future Development and Progress in this Country.

BETTER business this year, says E. W. Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in his annual review of Canadian business for 1931. A condensed report of the review is as follows:

Mr. E. W. Beatty
Chairman and President Canadian Pacific Ry.

"Seriously affected by world conditions as Canada may appear to be, there is no country of the same or anything like the same comparative importance in world affairs that is less affected basically by the conditions that have brought financial disaster to the great nations of Europe and to the United States.

"Economic depression has reached its most pronounced stages in those countries more highly industrialized. Therein lies one of the reasons why Canada has experienced less dislocation than some others, and is in a better position to register a rapid return to normal conditions. Having its economic basis still very largely in the development of raw materials, Canada has less distance to travel along the road to re-establishment, and there are credible reasons for believing we have gone some distance in that direction. Thus we say that to Canada the year 1931 has been one of re-organization and reconstruction.

"The railway situation has moved into recognition as Canada's most imperative domestic problem. Its causes, complexities and possible solution are now being probed by a most competent tribunal the appointment of which at this time was an act of common sense and courage. The Canadian people will present to an interested world renewed evidence of those qualities if they give their confidence to that tribunal and meet its suggested solutions with considerations of economic value unbiased by political color or preconceived prejudice.

"The nation, its various communities, many of its business institutions and no small number of its individuals have in the past ordered their affairs as though the way to enduring prosperity lay through extravagant expenditure with little or no thought of stability of investment or profitable return thereon. Thus as a nation we are faced with debts that must be paid. I know of no way of meeting them other than by hard work and strict economy. Of wise expenditure leading to the opening up of undeveloped business or lowering of production costs there can be no just criticism at any time, nor should the railways be blamed too carelessly for having looked ahead and prepared their facilites so that future business reasonably assured might be adequately taken care of.

"The Canadian Pacific, for instance, has no apologies to offer for any of the more recent important additions and improvements it has made to its services. The "Empress of Britain", built largely to develop a new class of de luxe American trade for the Canadian route to Europe has justified our best expectations, and up to the end of the world-cruise in April next a reasonably good profit on her operations is assured. The Royal York Hotel at Toronto has also done very well considering existing conditions and the need for such a convenience for the traveling public in that city is just as great now as when the announcement of its building was so enthusiastically hailed. It is upon such forward moves as these that Canadian development must ever be predicated. If the original building of the Canadian Pacific had been held up until existing traffic justified its operation Canadian national development would now be decades behind its present position.

"Over the past year railways have been more adversely affected by the general trade contraction than has any other branch of industry. A 22.1 per cent. decrease in Canadian Pacific gross revenue for the first ten months of the year is symptomatic of these conditions. The fact that we were able to effect a 19.1 per cent. saving in operating costs over the same period is an evidence of the high standard of efficiency at which the property has been maintained. One direction in which we were not able to make reductions was in that of taxes which will run this wear to $7,500,000. Since its incorporation the company has contributed over $121,000,000 to Canada's tax collections. Under adverse conditions of which an unreasonably forced standard of competition was not a small part, the company carried on its services in a manner calculated to retain the confidence of the Canadian people. This is shown by the fact that since September, 1930, the number of its Canadian shareholders has grown from 26,185 to 35,775, an increase of 9,590, bringing the Canadian holdings up to over 46 per cent. of the total number of shareholders.

"It was recently a most encouraging experience to me to go through Western Canada and witness the courageous manner in which westerners are facing the situation. Any idea that the West is giving itself up to self-pity on the score that its future as an agricultural country is doomed should be abandoned forthwith. As a whole that country is not doing too badly, and its people are firm in their well justified knowledge that they are going to do as well as ever in the not too distant future. The most seriously affected area comprises but 20 to 25 per cent. of the West, and over the remainder the conditions are at least fair to good. Great encouragement has resulted from recent advances in wheat prices, and since the statistical position of that grain in world markets is undoubtedly strong, higher prices and a reasonably good demand are not unlikely over the coming year. Intelligent interest in improved methods and lower cost of production as well as in the all-important matter of future diversification of farming is general. This and the fact that Western Canada has again shown that it can produce the world's best in both grain and live-stock is enough guarantee of that country's future. Eastern Canada has no less reason to view its agricultural destiny with confidence. Production and export of live-stock and dairy products have increased and the fruit crops of Ontario and Nova Scotia are meeting with excellent markets abroad.

"An important increase in gold production, some improvement in the demand for lumber, an increase over the year in the volume of tourist traffic, a more satisfactory balance of foreign trade, and latterly a noticeable betterment in many lines of retail business are most encouraging factors in the general situation.

"He would be a bold man who would make any prophesy as to what is going to happen during the coming year. And yet I think it requires neither boldness nor second sight to justify the assumption that 1932 will, as it progresses, show marked improvement upon its predecessor.

"It is an old saying, of recent years brought much into mind, that one thing greatly to be desired is more business in government and less government in business. The period of economic stress has done more to prove the truth of that statement than anything else could have done, and I find that a large and growing number of the Canadian people are accepting that fact as being abundantly established by the course of economic events through which we are passing. Under stress of war necessities it became the government's job to supervise practically everything economic that was carried on. In many cases supervision became actual operation. The natural result was that people and institutions began to look to government for the inspiration and direction which they themselves could have given much better had they carried forward their enterprises on business principles the efficiency of which have been proven through ages of stress and strain.

"The success which attended the flotation of the National Service Loan should be as reassuring to Canadians of the sound basis upon which their economic affairs stand as it has been to the world at large. Readiness with which our people were able to absorb the new bond issue established the fact that a surprisingly large amount of Canada's wealth was in liquid form and that the Canadian people had no hesitation in placing it at the country's service. The Canadian dollar has gone considerably below par in most of the world's money markets, an effect of world conditions which carries its own remedy in that it is calculated to encourage a more favorable balance of foreign trade. It has also contributed as an inducement to manufacturers from other countries to establish factories within our borders. Since August, 1930, approximately 125 new industries from Great Britain and the United States have been organized or are now in the process of organization.

"Ultimate results following upon the recent British elections are likely to be far-reaching in their relation to Canadian economic affairs. Important extension of our trade with Great Britain seems assured, and it may be expected that the holding of the forthcoming Imperial Conference in this country will profoundly influence the course of Canadian economics over the next few years. The Empire will be brought to a new realization of what Canada has to offer in the way of natural resources and opportunity for profitable investment, and the country will step once again into the forefront as a land towards which the most desirable class of immigration and settlement should properly flow."

Would England still be England, without its hunting rallies? Is this sport of centuries, the merry chase of elusive foxes, fated to die out?

It is unlikely that there is any feature of English country life so typical of the customs and traditions of the nation, as fox hunting. This being so, a recent statement of the earl of Rosebery, on accepting the mastership of the Whadden chase, that this sport is in a very critical condition, came rather as a surprise. He declared that five neighboring packs are having difficulty in finding masters, and that sportsmen must rally around now, or see fox hunting go the way of hawking. His lordship ascribed the decline to hard times and high taxation.

This might be considered bad news, even for the foxes; for from accounts of this sport that I have read, it would seem that the prey gets as much fun out of eluding the huntsmen, as the latter do in the galloping pursuit. After some of these old wily masters of the craft have learned the business, their chances of becoming a mere brush are comfortably few. Why, there are even some of these old fellows who pay visits to the kennels, if the hunt is not up regularly, to see what is keeping their little playmates! At least that's the story told.—Border Cities Star.

How English Merchant of 1480 Sought Custom

One of the earliest posters ever printed in England is to be seen in the Bodleian library, and concerns a Sarum service book, printed in 1480 by Caxton. It reads as follows: "If it pleases any man spirituel or temporel to bye our pyes of two or three commemoracious of Salisburi Use, emprynted after the form of this prese't letre, whiche ben wel and truly correct, late hym come to Westmonester into the almonestrye at the reed pole, and he shall have them good and chepe." The manner of presentation is somewhat unenterprising. The goods advertised belonged to the Middle ages, which were fast dying. But a new force had been let loose, which in the course of the next century was to revolutionize not only the art of advertising, but the whole of European culture.

Famous English Potter

Josiah Wedgewood was born on July 12, 1730. He was the youngest son of a potter and came of a family of which members had been notable potters in Staffordshire, England. Soon after the death of his father in 1739 he became skilled in the art of shaping pottery on the wheel. In 1753 he became manager of a small pottery. In 1759 he began work on his own account in the Ivy house pottery at Burslem. Salt glaze and green and yellow glaze seem to have been his first staples. However, the fine white English earthenware was just reaching perfection and Wedgewood became one of its best known makers. He presented a service of his ware to Queen Charlotte in 1762 and was appointed potter to the queen and later to the king. He next turned his attention to artistic pottery and reproduced designs based on the later phases of Greek art.

Dog's Warning of Death

While there is a very common superstition that dogs by their wailing can prognosticate death, this cannot be given as a fact, any more than other superstitions. A writer in Chambers' Book of Days, mentioning that the howling of a dog at night under the windows of a sick room is looked upon as a warning of death's being near, adds: "Perhaps there may be some truth in this notion. Everybody knows the peculiar odor which frequently precedes death and it is possible that the acute nose of the dog may perceive this and that it may render him uneasy."

Old Dishes Still Popular

Peacock tongues and humming bird wings may have lost their place on the festive English menu, but medieval dishes still play their part in the true English observance of Lent. In hamlets throughout the shires eating fried peas is a time-honored tradition on Carling Sunday, the fifth in Lent.

Semnel cakes are eaten in Shropshire and Herefordshire on Midlent or Mothering Sunday, the fourth Sunday in Lent, and in Westmoreland ayvers or havers are the rule of that day. Pancakes are in order on Shrove Tuesday and on every successive Tuesday during the Lenten season.

What Is Success?

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration and whose memory a benediction.—Exchange.

TO TORONTO MILK SHIPPERS

As I am the sole representative from Peel County on the "Selling Board" of the Toronto Milk Producers' Association, I want to state my stand, regarding the recent sale of milk at $1.45 per cwt. after three days' conference between "Producers" and "Distributors." The reasons given by the Retailers for their failure to maintain the $1.85 per cwt. price, were as follows: 1st—A very greatly over supplied market owing greatly to increased production from regular shippers. 2nd—A waiting list of several new and some old shippers, who were unable to market their milk, and in many cases were offering it at lower than market price. 3rd—The foolish methods of certain dairies, some of which were defaulters within the Distributors' Association along with a number who refuse to join any organization and who persist in being a law unto themselves. These, through underselling at the 11c price, made it no longer possible to hold the former selling prices. In order to compete it was decided by the dealer to sell milk at Feb. 1st, at 10c per qt., and 6c per pt. My argument in your interests included: 1st—That the consuming public were not paying a cent too much for the high pressure service demanded in Toronto, and that for all the average family would gain by the 1c per qt. saving it was not worth while to place a burden ten times the size on the average family of the producer. 2nd—That in the event of the change, the cut we were asked to take was too drastic and greater than at any time in my six years, for a one cent drop in price per qt. and that at a time when times were at their worst. 3rd—That the Retailers had sales of cream of all grades all in their own control, both as to buying and selling prices. This product which is highest in price is bought at low prices and not from Toronto shippers, and thus must be very profitable to Toronto dealers. (This argument is now shown to be true as under the new selling prices Cream prices are not reduced.)

The best price offered in the three days' conference was (at last) 1.45 per cwt. As your Director, I had then to choose between accepting for you $1.45 per cwt. or that of leaving your milk unpriced on Feb. 1st, and allowing the dealers to buy on an open market, and of also forcing you in order to sell in a full market to bid against your neighbor for a sale. This could only mean "chaos" and would at once destroy "Collective Bargaining". This to me was impossible. We are blamed by some for making a mistake. I claim we saved the shippers from a vastly greater mistake. In my six years, on the Toronto Board I have taken a leading part in many agreements. All the way from nearly $3.00 per cwt. to the ridiculous price of the present time. We sold in the winter of '29-'30 at $2.80 per cwt. or 90c per lb. Butter Fat for 3.4% milk, and we had as much trouble to sell then as now. As late as September, 1930, after bargaining for days, a price of $2.50 per cwt. was reached. This was reduced in two months to $2.20, and before Xmas was again reduced to $1.85, which price was held until now. All these years I have felt the responsibility of selling but never quite so keenly as at present, being the sole County Representative on the Selling Board. Everything was against our making a good sale. The prices for everything else that might ordinarily ease the situation were at the lowest point, with the butter market going down each day, with dry milk factories glutted full of their product, and their patrons receiving 80c per cwt. for their milk, with cheese selling at 10c or less, and netting the shippers round 75c per cwt. and supplies of milk to Toronto becoming greater each week. In my first three or four years we were able to sell for more in Toronto than in any other Ontario City. It is becoming more difficult each year to do this as Toronto is becoming more and more a dumping ground for milk, from more remote points, on account of its size and our former good prices, coupled with the facilities we now have for long distance transportation. This is greatly against the older shippers nearer the city who are paying higher taxes on higher priced land.

We have already consulted the Board of Control, with apparently little result. We have also consulted the Agricultural Department in the hope of securing the help of the new Marketing Board in our problem of Marketing. This may or may not avail us anything. The agreement reached is only a present one, and can be re-opened when one can see the first possible chance to improve our prices. That chance will come sooner if the shippers will be fair to our own market, by absolutely refusing to ship milk under the $1.45 price to the city. This will only ensure us that it does not find its way to a bottle. Honest co-operation from all producers will help wonderfully to maintain the present price, and will hasten the day when the agreement can be re-opened. All transport men who are working for us must also honor this feature of our service or failing to do so, their future does not look very bright.

THE WOMEN'S ADVISORY COMMITTEE SPEAKS

Peel women are fairly familiar with the personnel of this body of representative women of Women's and Junior Institutes: Toronto Township, Mrs. J. H. Harris; Toronto Gore Township, Mrs. N. S. Lindsay; Chinguacousy Township, Miss Florence Elliott; Caledon Township, Mrs. J. G. Sharpe; Albion Township, Miss Lillian Rutherford.

Members at the February meeting voiced surprise at the action of the County Council at its January session in taking steps to discontinue the grant to Home Demonstration work.

If Peel is the only county to have a Home Demonstrator, Peel has profited no little from the stimulus.

May we point out that such economic projects as Garden and Canning and Poultry Clubs initiated here were taken over by the Department of Agriculture of Ontario and made a definite part of a provincial programme and are now reflected back to many a Peel purse.

Home Economics Judging Competitions which have brought about a clear thinking policy with regard to woman's three major problems—good clothing and shelter were instituted here as a Home Demonstration feature and followed up for a number of years before other counties adopted any such programme. One has only to glance over Ontario's leading newspapers to appreciate, through picture and record, the present day development as seen in the show-window of the world, the Canadian National Exhibition, and realize, too the numbers of Peel girls who have taken advantage of this outward influence originating in their own county.

Peel Music Festival is another widening sphere emanating from this office. A fine reflection is found in a thoughtful comparison of "the little first" and "the large last". A need and a fulfilment connected, forms an ever widening channel.

Another pulse is throbbing just now. Last year a Dramatic Series was organized through the Home Demonstrator's contract, with Peel Junior Institute and Junior Farmers' Association. Six groups took part in amateur theatricals last year. Do you remember St. Paul's Auditorium on the night of the finals last year? Bills scattered throughout the county today deepen the impression that another needed channel of expression is being mined and developing under similar wise direction: Else why the enthusiasm enveloping fourteen groups? Last year's winner, Streetsville, at the request of the Provincial Women's Institutes repeated their play at the Ontario Girls' Conference at the Agricultural College at Guelph.

Debating, Public Speaking, Short Courses, many and varied, are features of a period whose record will never be completed. Witness results of the ever widening circle when rural youth speaks.

Has the growth and development of Peel Women's Institutes during the years of Home Demonstration history been phenominal compared with a similar period in any other County? A study of reports brings the answer well over on a decided affirmative.

We should like to see the continuance of an educational measure which produces results in fuller life rather than in the saving of less than the tenth of a mill to our county taxation.

STREETSVILLE JUNIORS

The regular monthly meeting of the Streetsville Juniors was held at the home of Miss Marjorie Morrison on Tuesday evening, Feb. 9th, with Miss Beatrice Quennell presiding.

During business connected with the play, which will be held on March 2nd, committees were appointed to look after hall, advertising and program. A Benevolent Society is being formed in the village for Relief Work, each Society being asked to appoint one of their members to it and subscribe $5.00—Miss Quennell was appointed.

Miss Dorothy Graydon and Mr. Arthur Arch were in charge of the program. A splendid address on "Finance" was given by Mr. J. C. Shearer, Agricultural Representative, Brampton, telling of the Mediums of Exchange, the Issuing of Money and the Gold Standard. Four reels of pictures on the mining of gold and the making of pulpwood into newsprint paper were shown. Miss Pearle Church, Home Demonstrator, gave a short talk on "Canadian Youth" saying, "It is our duty to train ourselves and assist others to become true citizens of Canada. The Junior Institute and Junior Farmers are training grounds for the younger members of a community to prepare for future responsibilities in Women's Institute and other organizations and as factors contributing finer effort toward community development."

Mr. Omar Turney, one of our members, gave an interesting talk on the "Manchurian Question" which threw a clearer light on the differences in the East today.

A contest was won by Miss Ruth Ross. At the close lunch was served by the girls.

DRUMQUIN

Mr. T. G. Ramshaw of Milton made several calls in this district lately.

Miss Peddie of Milton, the popular teacher of S.S. No. 9, Trafalgar, (Drumquin) is giving very good satisfaction at the present time. We wish her continued success in the future.

Bro. T. F. McHugh, of this place, a member of Union Loyal Orange Lodge, No. 263, Streetsville, attended the meeting of the County of Peel Orange Lodge held in the Orange Hall, Brampton, on Tuesday, Feb. 2nd. At this annual meeting it was decided to celebrate the glorious 12th July at Brampton 1932.

The Sixteen Creek (Drumquin Branch) has been very high lately.

Some of our farmers are busy these days cutting their stove wood for summer use.

Sunday, Feb. 7th, was the regular Temperance Sabbath in the Bethel United Church sabbath school. An address on "The Evils of Intemperance" was delivered by our beloved pastor, the Rev. J. A. Neil of Hornby. There was a large attendance at Bethel on this important occasion. Long life and success to our temperance workers.

MALTON

Post Office Robbed

An instinct for caution saved Mrs. N. A. Malcolm, of Malton Post Office, $300. While she and her son were attending church services, burglars ransacked their home, escaping with 600 three-cent stamps; 100 two-cent stamps; box full of coppers and twenty-two money orders, which can be made out for as much as $100 each. Mrs. Malcolm took $300 in cash with her to church.

Provincial Contable Joseph Allen, Cooksville, investigated while Inspector Gibson of Post Office Department sent out two officers to investigate.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states that Orme is Sheila's real husband. Orme admits seeing Sheila on the night of her death. Dr. Cavanaugh takes the stand.

CHAPTER XLVII.

"Now doctor," the district attorney began with heavy reasonableness, "if the defendant's actions are fully explained by all this fugue and retroactive amnesia business, how do you account for his failure to make any mention of these occurrences on the witness stand?"

"I object!" Graham exploded.

"A moment ago my learned friend across the table was very meticulous about statements calling for the conclusion of the witness.

"If your honor, please, I should like to answer the question."

"I withdraw the objection," Graham subsided meekly.

"The most significant factor in Orme's life of recent years," Dr. Cavanaugh turned from the district attorney and addressed the jury conversationally, "has been the loss of two of his fingers. From a squalid childhood he had been lifted by his talent into a world of music—a world where he met some of the greatest names of Europe on a plane of congeniality and equality.

"At one stroke he was hurled out of that environment, hurled back into a poverty and a limitation far worse than that in which he started because it was now complicated by thwarted ambition. The result, in a man of his temperament, was a sense of inferiority—an inferiority actual and yet undeserved—which conditioned his entire life.

"It was for that reason that Mrs. Orme's skepticism regarding his musical ability moved him even more powerfully than the cooling of her love and her attentions to other men.

"He transferred to the loss of his memory the same intense feeling of inferiority which had goaded him ever since the loss of his fingers. It was a further 'lopping off,' you see—another blow of fate stamping him as incomplete, as unable to hold his own with normal men.

"You must remember that we are here dealing all along with exaggerated reactions. In the short time at my disposal for treatment, I was unable to eradicate from David Orme's mind the idea that his 'flight from reality' in the form of a fugue was an act of personal and moral cowardice.

"It was not that, of course—it was absolutely beyond his control. But remember the tortured pride with which he endured the humiliation of rubbing sandpaper in a jazz orchestra when he had expected to take his place among the world's great violinists. He had dragged himself back from the temptation of suicide because he thought it cowardly to run away from life.

"And yet, enduring that depth of bitterness, he found that after all he had run away. Rather than admit that flight, with the moral stigma which he placed upon it, he was willing to let things take their course, even if his silence resulted in his conviction. Life, you see, was already a prison to him, and a sentence of death would offer him honorable escape, his final release."

For a moment, silence hung over the court room. Every mind was contemplating the vision of a tormented soul called up by the doctor's quiet and yet compelling earnest utterance. The district attorney was the first to shake himself free of the spell.

He shuffled his notes, coughed, changed his position.

"May I ask, doctor," he said, concealing his uneasiness under an air of ponderous assurance, "whether it is your custom to take your patients off the streets and give them a course of treatment at their mere request, with no assurance of their ability to pay for your services?"

"Your honor!" Graham sprang to his feet, finding relief in action. "Do I understand that the district attorney is attempting to impeach this witness?"

"What Mr. Graham understands is beyond my power to fathom, as I make no pretense of being a mind reader—or a psychiatrist." The district attorney turned with vicious joy to an antagonist whose weapons he could parry with his own. "I think the question is proper cross-examination, your honor."

"The question is allowed."

Dr. Cavanaugh looked down at the district attorney with an invulnerable placidity, from which his intruded thrust glanced harmlessly aside.

"Of late years it has been my custom to take only such patients as interested me—and to take them wherever I found them. Fortunately I am no longer dependent on an income from my practice, as I believe I stated on direct examination, and am able to devote my time for the most part to special research. For some years I have been working on the problem of the relation of fugue states to genuine dissociation of personality. From that point of view I found Mr. Orme interesting."

"Oh, so you were very much interested in Mr. Orme's case!"

"Very much, yes."

"Well, doctor," the district attorney's bludgeoning voice went on, "isn't it a fact the scientific mind, like the musical mind, is subject to 'temperament'? In the enthusiasm of research, is it not frequently found that facts are interpreted to meet the hypothesis which the investigator is trying to prove?"

"That is sometimes true of some investigators, yes."

"Well, then," the district attorney panted a little in his approach to his goal, "what was to prevent David Orme, knowing the intense interest you took in his case, from making up the whole story which you have told us, and using it as a cloak of defence?"

"The main thing that prevented him was that he couldn't do it." So far as the doctor was concerned, the district attorney had evidently reached his goal, only to find that nothing was there.

"You have heard of malingering, doctor?"

For the first time, Dr. Cavanaugh permitted his smile to broaden.

"Yes, I have heard of malingering."

"How can you be sure that Orme was not malingering — deliberately concocting a story and imitating the symptoms of this fugue you speak of?"

"Again, if I may, I will resort to an analogy. Suppose you were to ask me to imitate the playing of Fritz Kreisler. If I made the attempt, the imitation, I venture to say, would deceive no one. Even if I deliberately prepared for the test and had a certain degree of skill, the result, while it might pass before hearers without musical training, would certainly be detected without difficulty by musicians.

"The imitation of a mental disorder, contrary to popular belief, is infinitely more difficult than the imitation of a master's playing. In fact, not even a student of the subject could possibly maintain the fiction for any length of time without giving himself away. The amateur who thinks that by grimacing and tearing his hair he is giving a convincing clinical picture of insanity is doomed to instant disappointment.

"Functional and organic derangements of the mind are as numerous and as complex in their differences as physical disorders, and their symptoms are as definite. You might as well ask the physician whether a patient down with typhoid fever or tuberculosis was not making a vague general pretense of being ill. I may add that my own experience has been fairly extensive, and that it has not been devoid of the malingerers of whom you speak. Their efforts were quite readily detected."

The district attorney glanced covertly at the jury. They were obviously impressed. He wished he had left that particular line of questioning unopened.

Graham was leaning back taking things as they came. He could set Dr. Cavanaugh up there and turn him loose! The district attorney inquired of the universe, not without silent profanity, why the devil they hadn't been able to hook Dr. Cavanaugh for the prosecution—then he would be sitting back, and Graham would be doing the worrying. He passed his handkerchief across the back of his neck, where the roll of fat stood out in a thick ridge. Then he leaned forward, moving to a new line of attack.

"Granting that all you say is true, doctor—and I am without the advantage of the technical learning necessary to argue the point with you—" (the district attorney hoped that would have its effect on the jury, that they would see themselves and him together as allies, as plain men pitting their robust common sense against the hair-splittings of the academic expert) —"there still remains no reason why Orme should not have had another impulse to knock Sheila O'Shay down. And why, having killed her with the blow, he should not have concealed and destroyed her body, as he thought—and then have conveniently suffered another loss of memory. Or let us say that the emotional crisis put him into that state of fugue again."

"I take it you mean to put that suggestion in the form of a question," Dr. Cavanaugh spoke before Graham could do more than grunt the beginning of a protest. "At any rate, I will answer it.

"It might have been physically possible for Orme to have left the Ellsworth grounds with his wife at half past eight, in accordance with Mrs. Kane's testimony have quarrelled with her and killed her, then have left her body lying casually about somewhere while he wandered about, and finally have returned for it and taken it to the marsh in a very clever and almost successful attempt to conceal his crime. That would be physically possible, but it would not be psychologically possible.

"No one in a state of mind capable of elaborating the plan for concealing the body in the marsh and setting fire to the grass in order to destroy it would have failed to carry through the plan at once."

Too Large

The little ones are not happy always;
Ours is a grown-up world planned for a race
Of tall folk; imagination's small maze
Of melody and colour has no place
To spread its little tent. The lovely eyes
Of children are not happy, are not gay
Always; it is a world too great in size,
Too huge for the gnome's song and the elf's play,
Too coarse for the little ones to nest their dreams
And make believe; too chill, often, for those Who are as fragile as the tulip's seams
Kin to the moonlight and the meadow rose.
I sometimes wish God had desired to make
A little planet — for the children's sake!

Steam Heat Used For Calves In State College Experiment

New York.—When the steam-heated calf barn was built at the New York tate College of Agriculture some considered it an artificial method of raising calves, but C. H. Crawford of the department of animal husbandry says the first year's use of the barn has been satisfactory and that the college has never had calves which grew better or were as free from disease as this year's crop.

"Before the barn was built the dairymen chose the months of May, June, September and October as the time calves grew best and we then planned to keep the temperature of the barn at about average temperature of those four months," says Mr. Crawford. "The barn is kept at about 55 degrees Fahrenheit in Winter by the steam pipes and by forced ventilation, when necessary.

"Few farm-reared calves actually die of cold but many are forced to burn their body reserves to keep warm. When this condition is continued the calf stops gaining and grows but little. The calf's resistance is lowered and it is more susceptible to disease."

Punch and Judy

Round of a London corner,
Down of a London mews,
Back of the shout of the traffic
And the "mid-day special" news,
Out of the old bound numbers
In their much be-fingered row,
Are Judy and Toby and Baby
In Mr. Punch's show

Waterloo Bridge is sentenced,
Devonshire House is down;
The big white shop fronts face us
Like the streets of a foreign town;
Cupid's gone from the Circus,
Taxis rattle the Row,
Still, in a back street corner
There's Mr. Punch's show.

Pick up a crawling hansom,
—You'll find one close to the Park!
Follow the 'busless byways,
When the first lights prick through the dark,
There's gathering crowd of children,
Their heads all turned in a row,
To the lost pre-cinema ages,
And Mr. Punch's show.

Fort Lennox, Ile Aux Noix

Among the historic memorials of Canada that have been from time to time placed under the care of the National Parks of Canada of the Department of the Interior there are few richer in historical interest or more charmingly situated than the massive old fortress that stands in quiet dignity on Ile aux Noix on the Richelieu river in Quebec. Adequate measures for its preservation have been taken and to-day it stands as one of the chief monuments of the military romance of Canada and its island home as one of the interesting Canadian historic parks.

"I'M going, anyway"

THE modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry-on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine Aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Aspirin tablets do not depress the heart. They do not upset the stomach. They do nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore that you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Genuine Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Farm Problems

Conducted by Prof. Henry G. Bell, Dept. of Chemistry, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph

1. What fertilizer would you suggest for mangels? How much per acre, and would the same fertilizer be used for sugar beets?

Answer.—In the demonstration tests conducted on a large number of farms throughout the province by the Department of Chemistry, O.A.C., best returns from fertilizers used with mangels have been obtained where 2-12-6 fertilizer was applied at the rate of 375 lbs. per acre. This gave an average yield on loam soils of 49 tons per acre against 36 tons where no fertilizer was used. On clay soils it gave a yield of 22 tons per acre against 27 tons where no fertilizer was used. 2-12-6 gave very good yields on sugar beets but was slightly surpassed by fertilizers a little higher in potash.

2. Will complete fertilizer build up the soil for future crops or are they only good for one crop?

Answer.—In experimental work and field demonstration tests considerable information is accumulating which points to a decided "after" effect from fertilizers. For instance, where fertilizer was applied to alfalfa in 1930 giving an increase of 9,200 lbs. (green weight) per acre, the same plot in 1931 without further fertilizer gave an increase of 2,240 lbs. (green weight) over land which had been unfertilized. In another instance where fertilizer had been applied to barley on clay soil in eastern Ontario in 1930, there was an increase of 12.6 bushels. On the same plot in 1931 without any further fertilizer there was an increase of 4,320 lbs. of clover hay (green weight) over unfertilized land. In a test conducted by the Department of Chemistry, O.A.C., where complete fertilizers were applied to mangels and no further fertilizer applied for two years, there was a gain of 4.1 tons of mangels the first year; 9.7 bushels barley the second year, and 600 lbs hay the third year. Necessarily, attention must be given to keeping up the organic matter of the soil by turning under green crops or adding all the strawy manure obtainable, if the soil is to be improved in its productive capacity.

3. Should a 4-8-10 fertilizer cause scab on potatoes, used at the rate of 500 lbs. per acre?

Answer.—We know of no reason why fertilizers of any kind should cause scab. Scab is a fungus disease which thrives in an alkaline soil. If potato seed is not treated and is planted in a scab-infected soil that is alkaline in reaction, there is every chance of a scabby crop being harvested. Many potato growers find that by turning under a second crop of clover in preparation of the potato seed bed, the desirable small degree of acidity in the soil which produces clean potato stock results from the decay of the organic matter.

4. How does 6% potash in the fertilizer, say 2-12-6, applied at the rate of 200 lbs. per acre, help the grain to pay extra cash in a spring crop, say oats?

Answer—With oats at the present low prices it is difficult to make a profit from the addition of fertilizers directly to this crop. From results obtained recently in our demonstration work, it would appear that oats can benefit most profitably from the residual effect of fertilizers applied to the crop preceding. If, however, oats are grown as a cash crop, 200 lbs. of fertilizer to the acre may be of advantage. Whether or not it will pay will depend upon the type of soil and state of soil fertility. If grain has been taken from the field frequently within the last few years without the return of much fertility, the available potash of the soil will undoubtedly be considerably lowered, in which case a fertilizer such as 2-12-6 will pay well.

5. In how many ways are plant food elements taken from the soil?

Answer.—Plant food elements are removed in crops which are harvested from the soil both in the straw stalk and in the fruit, grain or seed. They are also removed in the bodies of livestock pastured upon the soil, and nitrogen especially is washed out of the soil through drainage water. Small amounts of potash and phosphate in the order named are also removed by this means.

6. Does the gradual elimination of the bases in the soil occur constantly?

Answer.—Certain of the bases in the soil are removed by cropping and by drainage. For instance, lime is thus removed, and magnesium.

If so, does this action create an unbalanced soil condition in which the acid elements predominate?

Answer.—The natural reaction of the removal of lime and magnesium is to produce a condition where acid predominates.

Would a proper application, after liming, of a well balanced fertilizer increase production to an economical maximum?

Answer.—In the system of farming commonly pursued in Ontario, lime should be applied once in four or five years on the average, in soils that are naturally short of it. Crops are rotated so as to introduce a legume crop once in four or five years. The second growth of this crop is usually turned under as green manure. It also adds considerable nitrogen to the soil if legumes predominate in it. A fair amount of livestock is usually kept and manure is returned as generously as possible. In addition to these practices, suitably balanced fertilizers applied to money crops or to crops of relatively high value has been found to increase yields at considerable profit. Of course, the degree of profit will depend among other things upon the quantity of fertilizer employed. We mean that while three bags of fertilizers per acre may give a highly profitable return on wheat or corn or sugar beets, the addition of eight bags to the acre, which would entail a much greater cost, would in all probability consume the additional profit. The Ontario farmer has to determine this point for himself, in view of the type of his soil, the cropping system which he follows and the amount of fertility that he is able to return in barnyard manure and green manures.

7. What is the maximum phosphoric acid that one can use in a potato fertilizer? For the last two years we have used 4-12-6 for early potatoes and 2-12-6 for late, and the results have been very good. We have a sandy loam soil and usually put on a light coat of manure.

Answer.—Results in our demonstration fertilizer tests throughout the past three years point distinctly to the value of 2-12-6 fertilizer on potatoes under general conditions. In our tests of 1931 where 2-12-6 and 4-8-10 fertilizers were compared, we found the latter gave a little higher yield on light soils and loamy soils, but the difference on loam soils hardly overcame the difference in cost of fertilizer. The reverse order was found to prevail on clay soils. From the rather extensive investigational potato work conducted by this station we are of the opinion that as least 12% phosphoric acid can be used with good results in fertilizers for early potatoes. It would appear that while your choice of fertilizers for the early potatoes, namely 4-12-6, is quite as we would recommend, yet the results of our tests indicate that you could get slightly larger yields by substituting 4-8-10 for the late potatoes on the light soil. This will depend, of course, upon how heavy a coat of manure you apply. In the tests conducted to which we have referred, no manure was applied. In the event that you have a fair coating of manure to apply, 2-12-6 will give you a better balance of plantfood with manure than 4-8-10.

Mahogany Used as Fuel

In the interior of the Republic of Panama one often sees valuable mahogany being used as fuel in the carboneros, or charcoal burners, doing the cooking for the villagers and planters. Mahogany is cheap and makes the best charcoal, but the Canal Zone authorities are planning to introduce other fuel so as to save the valuable timber.

For little daughter of school age, why not this darling coat-like dress? You can carry it out so charmingly in sheer woolen, now so modish. For the darling pleated collar, you could use pique, linen or self-fabric in a contrasting color.

The original dress used brown wool crepe. The collar was almond green wool crepe. The wide brown belt was shiny patent leather.

Spanish tile wool jersey with brown linen collar and brown suede belt is cunning.

A dark green tweed-like woolen with vivid yellow pique collar is another scheme you'll like.

THE LOVE TREE

Love is like a tree—vegetating of itself, striking deep roots through all our being, and often continuing to grow greenly over a heart in ruins. And, inexplicable as it is, the blinder is this passion the more it is tenacious. It is never more firmly seated than when it is without a shadow of reason.—Victor Hugo.

February 14. Lesson BII—Jesus and the Man Born Blind—John 9. 1-11; 30-38. Golden Text—I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life.—John 8: 12.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE BLIND MAN CURED, John 9: 1-7.

II. "I WON'T BELIEVE, John 9: 8-34.

III. WITH CHRIST, OR AGAINST HIM, John 9: 35-41.

INTRODUCTION—Chapters 7 and 8 show the gradual hardening of the Jewish hearts against Jesus. Many of his own disciples no longer walked with him. The shadow of the approaching crisis was already darkening his way. He knew that the end could not be far off. The "man born blind" is a type of the Jews who received Jesus. The Pharisees in the story represent the prejudiced stubbornness of those whose hearts were hardened by Jesus' life and teaching.

I. THE BLIND MAN CURED, John 9: 1-7.

It is probable that the blind man was at the entrance to the Temple. On the Sabbath, however, he would neither be begging nor receiving alms. The rapidity with which the news of his cure spread suggests some religious festival—perhaps the Feast of Dedication, 10: 22. The "disciples" (9:2) may have been the Judean group, and not the Galilean. Would fishermen be interested in the theological question?

The question which they are made to ask in the story indicates the two main views which the people of John's time in Ephesus held regarding trouble. The Jewish view—as old as Job's comforters—was that trouble is the punishment for the sin a man commits—or the sin which his parents commit.

The Greek view was that in some previous state of existence a man did something wrong for which he is made t pay in his next incarnation. "Who sinned, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind? v. 2. So strong were the old legalistic tendencies of the disciples, that the sight of suffering aroused, not the impulse to help, but the desire to discuss.

Jesus' answer (v. 3) did not mean that sin does not bring suffering—for it does. He did mean, however, to discourage the tendency—still among us—to think uncharitably of suffering as punishment. Let a non-churchgoer, say, be killed in a motor accident on a Sunday and some one will be sure to say, "God's judgment!" We are not in a position to say. Our duty in such a situation is made clear by Jesus' reply to his speculating disciples, v. 3. We are to ask, not—"Why do such things happen?" but "What can I do to help?" So will the works of God be made manifest.

The elaborate process of wetting the clay—sealing the man's eyes, sending him to the Pool of Siloam, is symbolism. The clay symbolizes the act of creation, Gen. 2: 7. The Christian, the man whose eyes Christ has opened, is a new creation. Sealing the eyes means that our spiritual blindness must be brought home to us. Siloam means "sent." John saw in the name a reference to Jesus Christ, "sent" by God. The command to "wash" is part of the sacramental tendency of this Gospel. Only after the rite of baptism does the believer enter fully into the new life.

II. "I WON'T BELIEVE, John 9: 8-34.

The story begins with the healing of physical blindness, but it soon shifts to the Jews who, in spite of the conclusive evidence, remain stubbornly unbelieving. They fastened upon the work involved in wetting the clay on the Sabbath, and made it the basis of the charge against Jesus, v. 16. "A good man would not break the Sabbath," said some. "A bad man could not work a miracle," retorted another. So the controversy went on.

Failing in their purpose, the Jews degenerated into abuse, v. 34. They hated Jesus. Therefore they would neither see nor admit any good in him. What about our attitude toward the deeds of people whom we dislike?

III. WITH CHRIST, OR AGAINST HIM, John 9: 35-41.

Resourceful and bold as this man proved to be, he could not but have felt keenly his excommunication. His hope of employment would now be gone. He would be shunned as the outcast he was. One could imagine him moodily wishing that he had been left as he was, where he could at least have had society provide him his living. But, meeting Jesus, who, hearing of his punishment was probably looking for him, he found a friendship which more than compensated for any loss which his loyalty may have caused him. To him as to many another, beset by life's misfortunes, Christ became "all and in all."

Jesus, summing up the meaning of the "sign," declares that his coming into the world is like a judgment. It brings out the characters of men, v. 39. No one ever comes in contact with him without being compelled to side with him or against him. The choice he makes determines his destiny.

"Where did you find your wonderful follow-up system? It would get money out of anybody."

"I simply compiled and adapted the letters my son sent me from college."

"No new age ever starts from scratch. Each era makes its particular contribution to the future."—Raymond B. Fosdick.

Sounds of Night in the Jungle

It was early spring in the tropics. The final period of pipe and fiddle had not yet arrived, so that there was no hum from the underworld. The flow of sap and the spread of petals were no less silent than the myriad creatures which, I knew, slumbered or hunted on every side. It was as if I had slipped back one dimension in space and walked in a shadow world. But these shadows were not all colorless. Although the light was strained almost barren by the moon mountains, yet the glow from the distant lava and craters still kept something of color, and the green of the leaves, great and small, showed as a rich dark olive. The afternoon's rain had left each one filmed with clear water, and this struck back the light as polished silver. There was no tempered illumination. The trail ahead was either black or a solid sheet of light. Here and there in the jungle on each side, where a tree had fallen, or a flue of clear space led moonwards, the effect was of cold electric light seen through trees in city parks. When such a shaft struck down upon us it surpassed simile. I have seen old paintings in Belgian cathedrals of celestial light which now seem less imaginary.

At last the silence was broken, and like the first breath of the trade-wind which clouds the Mazaruni surface, the mirror of silence was never quite clean again — or so it seemed. My Northern mind, stored with sounds of memory, never instinctively accepted a new voice of the jungle for what it was. Each had to go through a reference clearing house of sorts. Any strange wail or scream striking suddenly upon my ear instantly crystallized some vision of the past—some circumstance or adventure fraught with similar sound. Then, appreciably as a second thought, came the keen concentration of every sense to identify this new sound, to hear it again, to fix it in mind with its character and meaning. Perhaps at some distant place and time, in utterly incongruous surroundings, it may in turn flash into consciousness — a memory-simile stimulated by some sound of the future.

I stood in a patch of moonlight listening to the baying of a hound, or so I thought; that musical ululation which links man's companion wolfwards. I turned to the Indian at my elbow, full of hopeful expectation. With his quiet smile he whispered, "Kunama," and I knew that I had a frog of size and voice well in keep heard the giant tree frog of Guiana—ing with these mighty jungles. I could imagine the great goggle-eyed fellow sprawled high near the roof of the jungle, clutching the leaves with its vacuum-cupped toes. The moonlight would make him ghostly—a pastel frog; but in the day he flaunted splashes of azure and green on his scarlet body.

At a turn in the trail we squatted and waited for what the jungle might send of sight or sound. And in whispers Nupee told me of the big frog kunama and its ways. It never came to the ground, or even descended part way down the trees; and by some unknown method of distillation it made little pools of its own in deep hollows and there lived.—William Beebe, in "Jungle Peace."

ELOQUENCE OF WORDS

By words we have it in our power to make such combinations as we cannot possibly do otherwise; by this power of combing we are able, by the addition of well-chosen circumstances, to give a new life and force to the simple object; in painting we may represent any fine figure we please; but we can never give it those enlivening touches which it may receive from words. To represent an angel in a picture, you can only draw a beautiful young man winged; but what painting can furnish anything so grand as the addition of one word, "The angel of the Lord?"—Burke.

The above is a true copy of a By-law passed by the municipal council of the village of Streetsville on the 8th day of Feb., 1932.

And all persons are hereby required to take notice that anyone desirous of applying to have such by-law or any part thereof quashed must make his application for that purpose to the Supreme Court of Ontario within three months next, after the first publication of this notice in the newspaper called the Streetsville Review, or he will be too late to be heard in that behalf.

S. H. SMITH, Clerk.

Feb. 10th, 1932.

Mrs. Geo. H. Falconer has been confined to her home for several weeks. She is showing a marked improvement in her health.

Walter Royal, of Erindale, had a narrow escape from being injured one day last week. The gravel pit, where he was working with a team of horses and wagon, caved in. He jumped clear.

Mrs. John A. Cook, whose birthday occured on Monday, was given a surprise when a number of her friends met to extend to her best wishes. Several games were played and before separating a dainty lunch was enjoyed by all.

Mr. and Mrs. Eric Hammond and family, of Cooksville, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hammond and had two of their children baptized in the Anglican Church in the afternoon.

Several of the members of River Park Masonic Lodge attended the regular meeting of St. Andrews' Lodge, Toronto, on Tuesday evening, to hear the address by R. W. Bro. W. Dunlop, chairman of the committee on Masonic Education; his subject was "The value of Masonic Education."

The Young People of the United Church are holding a Valentine Social on Monday evening. A programme of unusual interest will be given, among the varied numbers will be a one-act play "Just like a woman," and a skit of mirth.

The Tennis Club of Trinity Church spent a very pleasant evening in the Parish Hall on Monday. Over two hundred were in attendance. Progressive euchre and dancing were indulged in. The prize winners in euchre were: Ladies' first, Miss Margaret Pickett; second, Mrs. Archie Crozier; Men's first, Mr. Jas. Farrell; second, Mr. Jas. McClure. The lucky number dance was won by Mr. T. A. Leslie and Miss Torrance.

Proceeds were in aid of the Tennis Club. Much work has been done lately to the interior of the basement. The work was done by the men of the congregation and greatly improves the appearance.

DIED

In the death of Wm. Orr, who died on Sunday at his home on the 8th Line, Trafalgar, the district has lost a widely known and highly respected farmer. He was in his 65th year. He was a member of St. Stephen's Anglican church. He is survived by his widow, formerly Cassie Orr, eldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. David Orr. Funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon at 3.30 o'clock. Service in St. Stephen's church, Hornby. Interment in cemetery at the church.

Class 64—SCHOOL CHORUS—12 rooms and under. Maximum 75 voices. "Come Now Sail with me"—Gounod. Murdoch B. Page 82.

Class 66—VOCAL SOLO—Girls under 10. "The Ash Grove." Welsh Melody. Community Song Book—Vogt-Willan.

Class 67—VOCAL SOLO—Girls under 12. "Daddy's Sweetheart"—Liza Lehmann.

Class 71—VOCAL SOLO—Boys under 14. "Boy's Song"—Turnbull. Anglo-Canadian Music Co.

Owing to difficulty in obtaining a full Orchestra Score for Class 21, Part 1, it has been decided to have the same test piece "The Londonderry Air," using the Chas. Roberts Edition (Carl Fischer Edition, No. T.2014).

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Scout Notes

By the time this article goes to press we shall all have been invested, or should we say practically all, as now our numbers are daily increasing. Anyway, it is a great feeling to be a registered scout. We feel we have at least discarded our rompers and are taking our first few steps.

The boys feel that our village is giving them much more support. We feel sure a large troop of scouts in uniform will be a great advertisement and that is our next step.

Some time in March we intend to put on our first entertainment. We do not know yet what it will be; but the following rumours may be interesting, a short, snappy comedy, solos, duets, orchestra and a full scout chorus. The admission is going to be very reasonable. Toronto theatres will be closed that evening, the people are all coming to Streetsville. Our only problem will be, where will we put them?

The personel of the local committee is as follows: Rev. Geo. Purchase, Messrs. Hope, Hardy, Johnston, Switzer and Gerhart. Rev R. J. W. Perry is appointed chaplain.

When you have anything to sell or exchange, or when you find or lose any thing, advertise it in The Review.

The Review office will be closed for business every Saturday afternoon.

Scouts Invested

The Parish Hall was well filled Wednesday evening, in spite of the rain, with Boy scouts, Scout Masters, Scout supporters and visitors.

Dr. Montemurro, Scout Master of the local Troop, was in charge of the meeting. He was assisted by Scout Masters and leaders from Toronto, Lakeview, Port Credit, Lorne Park and Cooksville Troops who brought several Scouts with them. Mr. Hill of Toronto addressed the boys on the organization and would advise every boy to become a Boy Scout. Then the roll was called with nearly 100% of Scouts in attendance. The Scouts were then invested in regular form and with colorful ceremony. Each boy was given a Scout button, hat and scarf after making the following promise—

"On my honor I promise to do my best to do my duty to my God and the King, to help others at all times and to obey the Scout Laws."

The Committee of Six was then addressed by a visiting Scouter and took a pledge to support the Local Troop.

The Scouter told a story about an American boy who was about to give evidence in Court. When asked to take the usual oath, he, instead gave the Boy Scout sign. Lawyers objected, but the Judge said that will be alright, I never heard of a Boy Scout breaking his pledge. And we believe that the Streetsville Boy Scouts will keep their pledge, too.

The Troop Flag, donated by Mr. S.B.MacPherson, Phm.B., was then presented to Leader Jack McClintock for the Troop.

Scout Masters Padden, Harris and Hayes also gave short addresses.

Dr. Montemurro was heartily congratulated on the work he was doing for the boy Scouts of Streetsville.

Then there was a real Camp Fire pow-wow with lots of snappy singing.

Scouter Hill told the story of the Boy Scout movement, and when the name of that great Boy Scout leader, Baden Powell, was mentioned, great cheers were given for him

Dr. Montemurro thanked all for their presence and Mr. MacPherson for the Scout flag.

There were lusty cheers for the Boy Scouts and their Scout Master.

After the benediction by Rev. Mr. Perry and the singing of the National Anthem a very pleasant evening was brought to a close.

The Scouts are certainly lucky to have such a fine place as the commodious new Parish Hall in which to meet, for which they are truly thankful.

GRANT FLEMING, M.D. — ASSOCIATE SECRETARY

RHEUMATISM

Most people are surprised to learn that a young child may have rheumatism. They have thought of rheumatism as a disease from which older people suffer, a disease associated with pains in the joints. This chronic condition in older people is more properly designated arthritis, and the acute condition which occurs in young adults and children, rhuematic fever.

Rheumatic fever is an infectious disease. The responsible germ is unknown. For its most severe attacks, it selects the joints, the heart muscles and heart valves. Quite naturally, the severity of the disease depends upon which parts are attacked and the extent of the attack.

Although the responsible germ is unknown, it is generally agreed that it may enter the body through the diseased tonsils. That is why particular attention is given to the nose and throat when there is any question of rheumatic infection. It does appear that if the nose, mouth and throat are healthy, this is of tremendous value in protecting children against serious and damaging infections, one of which is rheumatic fever.

The striking difference between rheumatic fever in adults and in children is that, in the case of adults, the joints suffer severly, whereas in children, unfortunately, the heart bears the brunt, and the joints suffer not at all, or but mildly.

In young and older adults, the joint pain is particularly distressing. Children frequently have rather vague and transitory pains with occasional dull aches, the so-called "growing-pains." If parents would realize that growing-pains are not normal, and that growing never causes pain, they would understand that it is well worth while finding out whether or not their child's growing pains are due to rheumatic infection.

The number of deaths resulting directly from an attack of rheumatic fever are comparatively few. The serious thing, and the thing against which we want to protect our children, is the damaged heart arising out of attacks of rheumatic fever.

In order that his heart may be protected, the child with rheumatic fever must have proper treatment, and in treatment, rest is the important point. Rest means absolute rest, in bed, until the infection has disappeared, after which exercise is very gradually undertaken. Convalescence must not be hurried. All possible foci of infection, such as diseased tonsils, must be removed. The child's general health is to be built up to its maximum.

The physician cannot give the child the treatment required unless he is consulted, and here a heavy responsibility rests upon parents. The child with "growing-pains," who shows twitching of the face or limbs which may go on to chorea, or St. Vitus' Dance, who has frequent sore throats, or who is pale, thin or irritable, should certainly be examined so that the cause of the condition may be learned. Neglect in bringing such children for treatment, thinking that time will bring improvement, is taking a considerable risk and gambling with the future health of these little ones.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

It is very probable that there are a large number of boys who read this column week after week, and although they are not Scouts, they very much wish that they could be. I would like those boys to realize that the Lone Scouts have been organized especially for them, and all that they have to do is to spare a moment to write a note to Lone Scout Headquarters asking for full particulars, and then they, too, can share in all the fun that Lone Scouting brings to any boy.

It is not very difficult, is it? Why not write that now, at once? The address is given below.

Lone Scouting Grows Apace

During this past week we have received applications for membership from over a dozen boys in various parts of Ontario. Five applications came from Colborne, four from Lucan and the others from Merrickville, Parry Sound and South River. We welcome all these recruits to our ranks, and we know that a good time is in store for them.

News From Overseas—More Scouts Down Under

Sir Kelso King, Chairman of the New South Wales branch of the Boy Scouts Association, attributes a very substantial increase in the number of Australian Scouts during 1931 to the visit of Lord and Lady Baden-Powell.

A Major First Aid Test

A motorcycle accident at a country crossroads in which two girls suffered broken legs brought an unidentified English Boy Scout a major test of his training. He acted immediately, and gave effective first aid with improvised splints and bandages.

Famous Admiral in Boys' Work

Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Roger Keyes, famous for his services during the Great War, especially in connection with the operations against Zeebrugge, on St. George's Day, 1918, has become Assistant County Commissioner for Sea Scouts in Buckinghamshire.

Scouting Influence

An interesting incident demonstrating the results of Scouting as a character building and citizenship training organization is revealed in a report to the National Office of the Boy Scouts of America from the Scout Executive in the Phillipine Islands, Mr. Ernest Voss. He stated as follows:

Yesterday, in Judge Vicker's court, here in Manilla, Attorney Charles McDonough, while questioning a diminutive brown-eyed boy, asked: "And why are you here as a voluntary witness in this criminal case?" The boy proudly drew himself erect. "Because, Sir," said he, "I am a Boy Scout and I promised on my honor to do my duty to God and my Country, and to be trustworthy."

News From the Provinces

"Lone E" has received a letter from Mr. Robert F. Middlecoat of Hemmingford, Quebec, who was formerly a Troop Leader in a Troop in London, England. Mr. Middlecoat read about the Lone Scouts in a local newspaper and did not know that the Lones were flourishing so wonderfully in this country, and we can assure him that Scouting is very much alive in Canada and especially in our Province.

Perhaps some Lone Scout would like to write to Mr. Middlecoat, who has some interesting experiences to tell, and who would probably be able to give some very useful hints from his Scouting experience.

Lonies Please Note:

On February 22nd, Scouts all over the world will celebrate the 75th birthday of the Chief Scout of all the world, Lord Baden-Powell.

A Thought For This Week

"The player who smiles most enjoys the game most."

How to Become a Lone Scout

Drop a line to The Lone Scout Department Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, and ask for particulars, which will be gladly sent. Lone Scouting is open to boys between 12 and 18 years of age who are not able to join a regularly organized Troop, and is especially meant for boys living on rural routes and small villages. Write to-day.—"Lone E."

Silver Lining

BY HECK.

Everybodys goal in life is "Happiness."

"Anybody is happy
"who is able to play the role
"which best satisfies him
"in his own eyes."
—Van Loon in The N. Y. Tribune.

* * * *

To "play the role," means W-O-R-K. Rich or poor, he must work by brain or brawn, or there is no satisfaction, no happiness.

* * * *

Work, then, symbolizes Happiness. It brings wages or profit, which in turn bring food, fuel, clothing, amusements.

* * * *

Some would have us believe that in most countries, work, wages or profit are very, very scarce—if so, happiness must be on the decrease.

* * * *

NEWS, the kind that informs us why, where, when work can be had, will help to keep mankind working and happy.

A broadcast, a print, a speech, a wire or wireless to the effect that there is a scarcity of any one thing or commodity, helps, because capitalists will hire workers, start machinery to fill the scarcity, supply the demand; wages will flow again, and happiness be restored. If word is passed around that there is an overabundance of a product, means are, or should be, at hand to remedy the condition. That is the purpose of this Silver Lining. Through the medium of news, good news will keep a proper, sane balance of supply and demand—informing those who want profit, work, service, where they can get it and find the Happiness they want.

* * * *

Even news of this kind helps the shut-in, the cripple, the old, whose active minds derive satisfaction in the knowledge that those who care for them are in a position to get work.

Radio Broadcasting—A. R. Leary, Assistant to the General Manager of broadcasting station CKCL, stated that their sales during the last two weeks were greatly on the increase. In fact, the sales for December were the highest in the history of the company, and already show a great increase over January of last year.

Veterans Petition Against War

3,500,000 Ex-Service Men of Eleven Nations Signed the Resolution

FOES JOIN ALLIES

Geneva.—Blind and mutilated men who crept back from the battle grounds of the World War appealed to the Disarmament Conference on Sunday to guarantee that "our sacrifices shall not have been in vain."

Germans who once wore the grey-green uniform of the Imperial army walked arm in arm with men who had fought under the Tri-color of France, when the war veterans appeared before Arthur Henderson, president of the conference, and presented a resolution signed by 3,500,000 veterans of 11 nations, asking for disarmament.

Some of them were blind. Others had lost an arm or a leg. Still others were hopelessly crippled or bore the scars of shrapnel and bayonet.

They were men who had given the best years of their lives in the mud of front-line trenches, or in the smoke and grime of artillery fire. They had been deadly foes 12 years ago, yet they stood shoulder to shoulder as they called upon history's greatest peace conference to guard against future wars.

The resolution they presented was prepared by the International Conference of Associations of Disabled and Ex-Service Men of both victorious and vanquished nations. Eleven delegates —from Germany, France, Austria, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, Poland, Roumania, Jugoslavia and Danzig—from Scandinavia to the Balkans—were represented in the group.

Must Give Mankind Relief

They asked the conference to "undertake its work with a firm resolve to give mankind relief, which we have a right to expect. We would regard a conference failure as a world catastrophe. Therefore we refuse to admit the possibility of such an event."

In replying, Henderson said:

"I agree with everything contained in this resolution. I shall see that it is carried before the conference. There is a situation in the Far East which brings us all pain, but such a situation might even be favorable to the Disarmament conference.

"I want you to remain hopeful. It will take a great deal aside from my health to keep me from being hopeful, is not optimistic, that some practical and tangible results will be obtained."

When the ceremony was concluded, Henderson took the arms of two blind veterans and assisted them to their automobiles.

League of Nations Receives Report from Shanghai

Geneva.—The League of Nations Commission of Inquiry at Shanghai has made a report to Secretary-General Sir Eric Drummond, it became known, but its contents were closely guarded.

It was authoritatively believed, however, that the report was of minor importance as compared to the negotiations now progressing between the great powers for settlement of the Sino-Japanese dispute.

It was thought probable that the League Council would not even be convened to hear the report.

The Japanese held the attitude that the Council should await the great powers' mediatory efforts, and the councillors appeared to agree with this view. The council might be summoned, however, to hear other matters.

The Japanese delegation presented to the secretariat Tokio's new declaration of policy in the Pacific and the Shanghai area particularly. The Japanese apparently were sticking to their demands that the Manchurian question be kept separate from the Shanghai incident, and that they shall not be treated under Article XV. of the League covenant.

The Disarmament Conference

London Daily Herald (Lab.): On the success of the conference depends the whole future of civilization. For the "next war," if it comes, will mean the destruction of life and property on an unimaginable scale. It is the great centres of industry which will be the target of attack by aeroplanes, the destructive capacity of which has been multiplied enormously since the end of 1918. Self-preservation alone dictates that those who live in such centres should use every means in their power to stave off the disaster.

Dangerous Curve Causes Dissent

Visiting bob-sled men were incensed when Lake Placid officials temporarily closed the dangerous Olympic course. A German bob was wrecked at this bend and two other accidents occurred. "Anything American bobbers can do, we can do," they chorused.

Canadian Trade Benefitted By British Tariff Preference

Dairying Will Profit Most Among Dominion Industries—Flour Exemption Will Offer Definite Impetus to Milling—Other Dominion Products Affected

Ottawa. — The general opinion in Government circles here following the tariff speech of Rt. Hon. Neville Chamberlain in the British House of Commons last week is that Canada will be materially benefitted.

Mr. Chamberlain's enunciation of the Government's tariff policy contained six main points. They were:

1. A general ad valorem duty of 10 per cent. should be levied on all imports to Great Britain except on such articles as are subject to duty already.

2. A free list should be established which would include wheat in grain, meat, including bacon, and fish which may be caught in British waters, raw cotton and wool, tea and coffee.

3. A superstructure of additional duties, above the general tariff, should be levied on non-essential articles which might be classed as luxuries and on such articles as can be produced in Great Britain.

4. Duties would be imposed by order of the treasury after consultation with the Board of Trade, but the selection of dutiable articles would be made by an independent advisory committee of a chairman and from two to five members, who would be paid salaries proportionate to their standing and to the judicial attitude which would be expected of them.

5. The duties recommended by the advisory committee would be ad valorem or specific, seasonal or permanent.

6. The committee would also have the power of advising establishment of drawbacks to the tariff schedule.

While comment was restrained until the full significance of the tariff change is comprehended, nevertheless the value of such a change in the light of the forthcoming Imperial Conference was appreciated.

"If a 10 per cent. duty is levied by Great Britain on the wide range of articles indicated, with the dominions exempt," declared Hon. H. H. Stevens, Minister of Trade and Commerce, "it should be of great assistance to Canada. It will form an excellent basis for the consultations at the approaching Imperial Economic Conference."

Dominions To Be Exempt

Mr. Chamberlain made it clear that measures contained in the bill which the Government hopes to put through all stages of parliamentary procedure by Easter, and into operation by March 1, would not apply to Canada or to any other of the Dominions at least until after the Ottawa Imperial Economic Conference, which will be held starting July 18 next.

He also made it clear that existing duties such as the present levy of 33 1-3 per cent. on automobiles, known as the McKenna duties, the safeguarding duties and duties imposed under the Abnormal Importations Act and the Horticultural Produce Act would remain unchanged by passage of the bill and that no additional duties would be levied against foods listed under the provisions of those measures.

Fear 70 Frozen on Train Snowbound in Roumania

London—The Daily Express correspondent at Vienna reported that 70 persons were feared frozen to death on a snowbound train near Bodok, Roumania.

Terrible storms caused unprecedented havoc in many districts of Ronmania, Czechoslovakia and Hungary, the dispatch said. Snow was so heavy that ploughs were unable to force a way through to reach the train near Bodok.

Many towns and villages were isolated, and several trains were snow-bound. the correspondent reported, adding that wolves were invading Hungarian villages in search of food.

French Artists Trade Art for Potatoes

Paris—Art for art's sake is all right—but a bushel of potatoes for a work of genius is better. At least that is the decision of a group of French artists who have arranged for a salon at which their works will be exchanged for such useful products as potatoes, cabbages, jewelry or something else useful.

The originator of the salon wants to spread the appreciation of beauty, but desires to find nourishment in the task.

Ill-Fated Submarine Is Found Flooded

Officials Assume 61 Officers and Crew Died Quickly by Drowning

Portland, Eng.—Divers working on the sunken British submarine M-2 at the bottom of the English Channel found on Sunday that the vessel is flooded from stem to stern.

It was persistently rumored here that two bodies had been found jammed in the submarine's conning tower. Dockyard authorities, however, said they had no knowledge of such a discovery.

Naval officials assumed that the 61 officers and men of the crew had a swift and merciful death, drowning when the submersible dived and was lost ten days ago in the manoeuvres off the promontory of Portland Bill in Dead Man's Bay.

Salvage operations will begin under the direction of E. M. Cox, head of the first which raised sunken German warships at Scapa Flow after the Great War.

The first task to be attempted will be the removal of a small seaplane from the hangar on the M-2's deck.

Soviet Fears White Coup As Japs Advance in Manchuria

Japanese Consul Reports Increase in Troops at Siberian Port —Army for Shanghai—Nippon Government to Send One to Protect Interests of Foreigners

Tokio.—The Japanese consul-general at Vladivostok, Siberia, reported to his Government over the week-end that the Siberian seaport had taken on "an atmosphere which may be described like that of wartime" and that movement of Soviet troops and horses there had greatly increased.

While the consul-general was inclined to discredit reports that the Soviets were massing troops at Vladivostok, he said the Russians were carrying out wholesale arrests of "White" Russians, who were being deported in large numbers because the prisons were filled to overflowing.

The preparations were regarded in authoritative quarters as not aimed directly against Japan, but due to Soviet fears that the Japanese northward advance to Harbin might encourage White Russians in Manchuri to attempt some form of military coup in Eastern Siberia. His attention here was also directed to a reported switch in allegiance by General Mah Chan-Shan, the Chinese commander who was driven out of Tsitsihar by the Japanese in their Manchurian drive.

Mah Changes Allegiance

The Rengo (Japanese) News Agency in despatches from Harbin, said the erstwhile Chinese hero of Nonni River bridge and Tsitsihar had gone to Harbin from his base at Hulun on Saturday night, seeking an interview with Tamon.

The Japanese agreed and the pair met in the Japanese headquarters for a long conference. It was understood that General Mah had pledged loyal co-operation with the Japanese in Northern Manchuria.

Shortly after the revelation of the entente cordiale, General Mah was expected to proceed to Tsitsihar to assume governorship of Heilungkiang Province.

Meanwhile Japanese planes continued their destructive bombing and machine gun sniping at the retreating forces of General Ting Chao, who was driven out of Harbin last week.

Will Send Limited Force

The Government formally announced Saturday that it has decided to send a military force to Shanghai to "put an end to the menace of the Chinese armies and to relieve inhabitants of all nationalities from the strain of fear."

The new expeditionary force "has been limited to the strength required" for its mission, the statement said, "and its action will be guided solely by the policy of protecting the common interests of all the powers."

The mission of this new force was defined thus:

"The Japanese Government is prompted by no other motive than that of discharging its international duty of safeguarding the large number of Japanese nationals and property worth hundreds of millions. Unless the Chinese, by continuing hostilities or by obstructing our army in attaining these ends, compel it to take necessary action, there is no intention whatever that it should enter upon an aggressive campaign.

Want to Co-operate With Powers

The Japanese, said the statement, "already have declared that they have no political ambition in the region of Shanghai nor any thought of encroaching upon the rights and interests of other powers.

"What they do desire is to promote the safety and prosperity of that region by co-operation with the other powers and by mutual assistance, so contributing to peace and well-being in the Far East."

The statement said nothing about the size of the expedition beyond the assertion that its strength will be limited to what is "absolutely required."

How to play Bridge

AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 9

The normal hand at Auction and Contract is one that contains a suit of not more than five cards in length. Such hands occur about four-fifths of the time and are called normal hands because they are the usual hands, the ones that occur four times as often as the other types. Hands that contain suits of more than five cards in length are the unusual hands, the ones that occur only one-fifth of the time. Hands that contain a suit of six cards are not particularly unusual but those that contain a suit of seven or more cards are the real freaks. Such hands occur very seldom but their proper bidding is both interesting and difficult. The following problem hands are "freaks" but interesting, because all contain most unusual features.

Hand No. 1

Hearts—K, Q, J, 7, 6
Clubs—None
Diamonds—A, J, 10, 9, 7, 6, 2
Spades—none

	Y
A		B
	Z

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one club. What should A now bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

A should bid one diamond. If overbid, he should continue bidding diamonds and not show the heart suit at all. There is no advantage in a shut-out bid of five diamonds. Z has already shown his club suit and if Y has a spade bid, he is more apt to bid five spades over a five-diamond bid than if A bids one diamond and then bids up the hand gradually. It is not advisable to show the heart suit because A's partner is more apt to assist hearts than diamonds and A's heart suit is not strong enough to trump clubs and spades. One diamond, therefore, is A's proper bid.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

A should bid two diamonds, a forcing bid over the dealer's club bid. His partner is thus forced to bid and, unless he bids hearts, A's next bid should be five diamonds. If the partner bids heads or assists diamonds, A should bid a little slam in hearts or diamonds accordingly.

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—A, Q, J, 9, 7, 4
Clubs—A, Q, J, 10, 7, 6, 2
Diamonds—none
Spades—none

No score, rubber game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

Z should bid one heart and, if overbid, should show the club suit. This hand is different from the preceding one in that the heart suit is longer and stronger and the club suit is not so strong as the minor suit in hand No. 2. It is a hand, therefore, in which both suits should be shown if possible and for that reason does not justify a shutout bid of either hearts or clubs.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

Z should bid two clubs and on the next bid show the heart suit. The "two-bid" at Contract is a forcing bid, so Z is sure of another chance to bid. The hand is sure small slam if partner can assist either clubs or hearts, and this seems the best way to find out. If partner fails to assist either suit, Z should bid five clubs.

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—none
Clubs—none
Diamonds—A, K, Q, J, 8, 4, 3, 2
Spades—A, K, Q, 9, 7

No score and A B a game in. Z dealt and passed. A bid one club and Y bid one heart. What should B bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

B should bid two diamonds. In this hand, also, B has nothing to gain by a shut-out bid. Both of the other suits have been shown and the purpose of a shut-out bid is to shut out information. So, if the information has already been given, what would B accomplish by a shut-out bid? Such bid would only inform the opponents that B had a game hand in diamonds and incite them to overbid to save game. Bid such a hand by easy stages and the results will be much more satisfactory.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

B should bid three diamonds, which is a forcing bid and requires A to keep the bidding open. If by any chance A should bid spades, B should bid for a grand slam. With any other bid by A, B should bid a small slam in diamonds. If A assists the diamonds, B should bid a grand slam in diamonds.

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—A
Clubs—none
Diamonds—A, K, J, 10, 7, 4, 3, 2
Spades—A, 7, 6, 3

No score, rubber game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

Z should bid five diamonds. This is a perfect example of the shut-out bid. The purpose of such a bid is to shut out opponents from showing the heart suit. If Z's partner should hold the spade suit nothing will be lost by Z's shut-out bid for the spades will score as side tricks.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

Z should bid two diamonds. This bid is a forcing bid and requires a bid by Y. If the latter bids two no trump, the minimum response, Z should bid five diamonds. If Y bids two spades, Z should bid a small slam in spades. If Y assists diamonds, Z should bid a small slam in diamonds.

Business

Business is business, but men are men,
Working and loving and dreaming;
Toiling with hammer, or brush, or pen,
Roistering, planning and scheming

Business is business, but he's a fool
Whose business has grown to smother
His faith in men and the golden rule,
His love for a friend and brother.

Business is business, but life is life,
Though we're all in the game to win it.
Lets rest sometimes from the heat and strife
And try to be friends a minute.

Let's seek to be comrades now and then
And slip from our golden tether;
Business is business but men are men,
And we're all good pals together.

Co-operation

The fastest horse in the world never wins a race without a jockey to guide him. The world's ring champion wins his belt by respectin- the rules of his trainer. Every successful football team submits to the greater knowledge and experience of its coach. An candidate for president considers it wise to have a campaign manager. An army in action at the front must have a commander-in-chief. Yet quite frequently we see a worker who dislikes to co-operate with his boss.

Professor—"I am about to perform a very interesting chemical experiment. Should I do anything wrong, the whole class, including myself, might be blown through the roof. Kindly step nearer, so that you can follow me better."

An angler asked a fellow sportsman if he could tell him of a really good fishing ground.

"Yes," he replied, pointing to a path marked "Private." "Go along there until you come to a field marked 'No Road.' Cross it, and on the other side you will find a fence where there is a board which says 'Trespassers Will Be Prosecuted.' In the middle of that you will find a pond marked 'No Fishing Allowed.' That's the spot."

Son (just graduated from College)—"Dad, I want you to give me some advice on running a newspaper."

Experienced Editor—"You've come to the wrong person, my boy. Ask any of my subscribers."

This Is O.K. With Us

This "papa" has a sissy sound,
'Course, "father" ain't so bad;
But there is something that's pal-like
About the use of DAD.

A girl's ambition was to be the kind of a person that people looked up to. Now she prefers to be the kind they look around at. An apple a day keeps the doctor away—unless you get the seeds in your appendix. If some people lived up to their ideals they would be stooping. Sailors have a girl in every port but the modern lass seems to have a boy friend in every sport. There is no objection to love at first sight, providing the victims remain single. It's a safe bet that a girl who takes a flier in marriage is likely to make a forced landing. Be master over yourself. Do not say all you know. Do not believe all you hear. Do not do all you can. Calm and quiet are the signs of strength; hurry and haste betoken weakness. It is too much to expect that a man will register enthusiasm after having had experience with a dull thud. There are two sides to every question — the wrong side and your side. A man will in the end get more tired of his favorite vacation stunts and much sooner than he will his regular work.

Uncle—"And what's your ambition, Bobby?"

Bobby—"I ain't got any. I just want to be a vice-president."

New Facts on Goethe's Ancestry

Sangerhausen, Germany.—The coming of the "Goethe year" of 1932, which brings on March 22 the 100th anniversary of the German poet's death, has given new impetus to research concerning his life and family history.

Up to a few years ago the oldest known ancestor of Goethe's was his great-grandfather, the blacksmith Hans Christian Goethe, who lived in Artern, in the Province of Saxony. Then the great-great-grandfather was discovered in the person of Hans Goethe, of Sangerhausen, in the Harz, but he could be traced back only to 1671. Friedrich Schmidt, author of a history of Sangerhausen, has now succeeded in establishing that Hans Goethe was born in Berka, near Sondershausen, also in the Harz, and that he was registered as a citizen of Sangerhausen in 1657.

Wood Fire

There is a sound outside the door
Of firewood dropped to the floor,
Of heavy wood and heavy feet,
And on the window driving sleet;
Inside we fumble for a match,
"Surely this one will make it catch!
It ought to catch! Yes, now it will!"
And, breathlessly, the house is still—
Then all the brasses in the room
Come out like fireflies from the gloom.

The big logs settle into place,
And vivid shreds of golden lace
Hang trembling on the blackened brick;
The eager flame, springing to lick
The shadows from the dusky wall,
Consumes them, too, and embers fall
And smolder in a molten heap—
Another log will make them leap
Into new strength and throw once more
A magic carpet on the floor.

By John Masefield.

All things longed for in youth,
Beautiful things of truth,
Are found before we die,
If we but try.

This building that we see
So fair, once seemed to be Beyond all hoping for Here, on Thames shore.

How many millions tried,
How many millions died,
To bring this change of heart
To England's art?

O happy you who are young,
Speaking the English tongue,
Whose art shall light and aid
England remade.

England our holy land
Made beautiful, made grand,
O you young souls, what joy
For girl and boy.

May this new home of yours
Give England what endures,
Beauty, wisdom and truth,
Forever youth.

O strivers here beginning,
What glory for your winning
The England none now knows,
Who wore the rose.

COULDN'T COMB HAIR

Crippled by Rheumatism

"I had been suffering with rheumatism for about 2 years, and about this time last year was laid up for 10 weeks. My hands and arms and knees were the worst affected. I could not get about at all. I could not wash my face or comb my hair. All this had to be done for me. At the beginning of this year I started taking Kruschen Salts every morning and I am pleased to say I am quite well now and able to see to my home and can go out in all kinds of weather without it affecting me."—Mrs. P. K.

Rheumatism is associated with an excess of Uric Acid in the system. Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts have the power of dissolving uric acid so as to render it capable of being easily washed out of the system. Other ingredients of Kruschen assist Nature to flush out this dissolved uric acid through the bowels and the kidneys. Other ingredients still, prevent food fermentation taking place in the intestine, and thereby check the formation not only of uric acid but of other impurities which poison the blood and pave the way to ill-health.

LIGHT HORSE BREEDERS TO CONVENE

A meeting of farmers interested in the breeding of light horses, especially hunters and saddle horses, is being arranged for Saturday night, Feb. 20th, in the Agricultural office, Brampton, at 8:30 p.m.

Mr. F. Moss, Secretary of the Canadian Hunter, Saddle and Light Horse Society will be present to discuss the demand, breeding and management of Hunters and Saddle horses, and also to show moving pictures of the types of horses the Society is encouraging.

The interest in the light horse industry has been increasing during the past few years. The famous horse Show at the Royal Winter Fair has gone a long way towards proving the monetary value of such horses. The demand is largely for big animals and the Canadian Hunter, Saddle and Light Horse Society is encouraging the raising of middle and heavy weight hunters and saddle horses. Horses that will stand from 16 hands to 16 hands 2" and weigh anywhere from 1200 to 1400 lbs. are preferred although there are no objections to their being even larger than that if they retain the necessary activeness and refinement to make them valuable as hunters.

There are many mares in Peel County which would raise such horses when bred to a good Thoroughbred Stallion and any farmer who is interested in this particular branch of horse raising, and who has the required type of mare, would find that the raising of hunters or saddle horses a most profitable and interesting sideline.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The Club held its regular meeting at the home of Mrs. John Bonham, Feb. 3rd. There was only a fair number present. Making plans for the euchre and dance was the main business feature, after which we sang our closing song. The remainder of the afternoon was given over to having a good time.

Mrs. May Workman gave a reading "Job's Comforter," which was much enjoyed by all. Mrs. C. May then put on a contest. A peanut hunt, which caused a great deal of laughter.

Mrs. Bonham then served a dainty lunch, assisted by her daughter, Mrs. G. Price. The next meeting will be at Mrs. W. Cook's February 17th, at two thirty.

The euchre and dance held last Friday night was a decided success. The lucky number dance was won by Miss Agnes McGregor, Toronto, and Mr. John Ross, Streetsville. The lucky chair number to Mr. T. Farrell. The ladies' euchre prize, 1st, Miss A. O'Connor; 2nd, Miss M. Pickett. The gents' 1st, Mr. T. A. Leslie Sr.; 2nd, Mr. Edgar Lyons.

The officers of the club wish to thank all who helped make it a success.

NEW BENEVOLENT SOCIETY ORGANIZED

For a long time it was felt that some kind of an organization should be started to take care of relief in the village and nearby districts. Much overlapping was very evident especially during this Christmas season. About three weeks ago a meeting was called, made up of a representative from each of the several organizations (lodges, institute, churches, etc) in the village to consider the advisability of organizing a Benevolent Society. After a full discussion of the whole situation it was agreed to recommend to each organization that an official representative be appointed and a meeting be held on Thursday, Feb. 4th, further that each organization donate $5 to create a Benevolent Fund. On the above night a meeting was held to organize; almost every organization had its representative and the recommended amount of money gladly donated. The following officers were appointed to continue in office for a year:

Pres., Rev. Geo. H. Purchase.
Vice-Pres., Mrs. I. Ardagh.
Sec'ty.-Treas., Jack Drennan.

To complete the society's work the village was divided into 3 sections each to have two visitors, whose work it is to investigate any case in need in her division and report to the executive for action.

Division 1: Tannery St. North, Miss Mabel Graydon, Miss Peck.

Division 2: Tannery St. to Bank corner, Mrs. Hector Graydon, Miss Eva Reid.

Passing of W. Orr Deeply Regretted

We mourn with the friends who mourn, but our sorrow is for the loss of a companion and neighbor, and this pleasant thought will always remain with us, that our community is a better place to live in because Will Orr's life was spent with us in it. Their home was a place of free hearted hospitality—any weary homeless traveller always received a welcome in this house by the side of the road. Will always tried to do what was right, and tried to help others to do what was right. He shunned the very appearance of evil. This was his motto, "Render unto Ceasar the things that are Ceasars, and unto God the things that are God's"

On Sunday, Feb. 7th, 1932 Will Orr drifted out upon the dark and unknown sea, that rolls around all the world.

On Feb. 10th, friends from far and near gathered at their beautiful farm home to pay the last tribute of respect to one who was loved and admired by all who knew him. In the Anglican Church, Hornby, where he was Christened, where he attended Sunday School and through all the changes in his life, as a faithful worshipper he was taken for the last time.

The service was conducted by Rev. Mr. Perry, Streetsville and Rev. Mr. Boyd, Norval, Mr. Perry took for his text, these words of our Saviour, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and when Mr. Perry pictured to us the scene of our Saviour with Martha and Mary at the grave of their brother, Lazerus, and when saying to his Diciples,

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you .....

"I go to prepare a place for you." We know the same Saviour was present who said, "I am the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever."

One of the hymns selected was "Nearer My God to Thee," this beautiful hymn was composed on a similar occasion by Sarah "Flower" Adams, 91 years ago, and we wonder has any other hymn ever received such pupular recognition. It has been a boon to many a broken heart.

The late King Edward, once wrote there was no hymn more touching nor one that went more truly to the heart than this. Bishop Marvin wandering homeles in Arkansas during the Civil War and driven to despair, was renewed in strength by an old woman singing in an old tumbled down cabin this hymn. Many of us will remember the impression made on the world by the use of this hymn, by President McKinley on his death bed. The last words of the President were "Nearer My God to Thee. E-en though it be a cross, has been my constant prayer." And this hymn was sung by hundreds of Churches on the following Sunday and in memorial gatherings everywhere.

In the little Anglican country church during the singing of this farewell hymn to our loved departed friend. The grieved hearts of this immense assembly was as deeply touched as ever under similar circumstances.

The farewell tokens of love were lovely flowers, and a costly casket, where he was laid to rest, " Like one who folds the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

This thought comes to so many of us as we are gathered together on these solemn occasions. Who will be next to be called from their busy work forever more. No one can tell, it may be the strongest, healthiest one there. These lines that were written by Cowper one hundred and forty-five years ago are just as true to-day as they were then:

Was man (frail always) made more frail
Than in forgoing years?
Did famine or did plague prevail
That so much death appears?

No! these were vigorous as their sires
Nor plague nor famine came,
This annual tribute death requires,
And never waives his claim.

Like crowded forest trees we stand,
And some are marked to fall;
The axe will smite at God's command
And soon will smite us all.

Read ye, who run the awful truth,
With which I charge my page;
A worm is at the bud of youth,
And at the root of age.

No present health can health insure
For yet an hour to come;
No medicine, though it oft can cure,
Can always balk the tomb.

"Pale Death with equal foot strikes wide the door
Of royal halls and hovels of the poor."

COOKSVILLE

On Tuesday evening, Mr. Frank Fenwick, president of Peel County Agricultural Society, and his good wife, entertained the officers and directors of the Society and several other friends to a sumptuous banquet, at their home on the Burnhamthorpe Road.

The tables, which were spread in the spacious dining room, were heavily laden with all the good things of the season, and presented a very appetizing appearance. That everybody enjoyed the eatables goes without saying.

A toast list had been prepared, and Mr. L. J. C. Bull, Police Magistrate, made a capital toast master. There was the usual toast to the King, followed by the singing of the National Anthem.

President of the Society and the Host and Hostess, proposed by Mr. Bull and responded to by Mr. Fenwick, who thanked his friends for their presence. Mr Fenwick has been a member of the Fair Board for twelve years. He has given good service and is now on his second year as President. He was pleased to know that Brampton Fair ranks as one of the best fairs in the province.

Our Past President—Proposed by Mr. H. A. Dolson and responded toby Mr. E. J. Pallett, P. M.

Other speakers were Mr. J. J. Jamieson, Treasurer of Peel County; Mrs. W. E. Duncan, who has been a judge at different fairs for many years; Mrs. E. J. Pallett, who has also done much judging, especially at Cooksville Fair; Mr. Hunter Arnott, Streetsville; O. R. Church; Streetsville; Chas. Fendley, and T. O. Dolson, Brampton.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered to the host and hostess for their kindness in entertaining their friends in such a generous manner.

After supper, dancing, cards and social intercourse was indulged in until a late hour and the large company dispersed, having enjoyed a most enjoyable evening.

The music for the dancing was supplied by Mr. and Mrs. Ellis of Britannia and Mr. James Tilt.

Mr. Ed. Holland and Mr. Tilt entertained with several selections of songs and elocution.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

Water Area Etablished

At a special meeting of Toronto Township Council, the by-law creating a water area and providing for construction in the Lakeview district was given a first and second reading. Roughly, the area will be bounded on the west by Port Credit, on the north by the Middle Road, and on the east by the Etobicoke and on the south by the lake.

The by-law provides for laying some 12,000 feet of main from the eastern boundary of Port Credit village along the Toronto-Hamilton Highway. The estimates call for 10,000 feet of eight inch main, and 2,600 feet of six inch pipe, the total estimated cost being $31,000.

The assessment over the entire area will be $16,045.60, less the Government grant, which was originally stated at $15.000, but which according to doubts expressed by Reeve L. H. Pallett, may be somewhat less, as the township has been providing stone for cracking as a relief measure. This stone may have to be paid for, partially, at least, out of the government grant.

Home Demonstrator Grant Refused

By County Council

The refusal of Peel County Council at its recent session to make the usual grant of five hunderd dollars towards the maintenance of the home demonstrator is proving most unpopular among the women of the county who are interested in the work of that department of home instruction. The Home Demonstrator is appointed by the Department of Agriculture and her work is particularly among the young farm girls who are instructed in many phases of domestic economy. Competitions are held, the demonstrator moves among the young people, encouraging and instructing, and since the inception of the work in the county the inspiring influence of the young ladies who have held the position has had an elevating and inspiring effect. Peel is the only county in the Province which has had the services of a home demonstrator and the cutting off of the grant is likely to result in the cessation of the work here. The action of the county council came like a bolt from the blue and has raised a vigorous protest from all parts of the country. While recognizing the necessity for the strictest economy on the part of the council it is felt that the paring could readily have been done in some other department. Miss Pearle Church is the present holder of the position and it is fairly certain that unless the council reconsiders the matter and makes the grant that this helpful work will cease. The work of the demonstrator is closely associated with that of the District Representative and her enforced withdrawal for want of funds may impair the effectiveness of the work carried on so sucessfully by that official. The Women's Institute of the county sponsored the appointment of the home demonstrator on the start and its members may be expected to voice their protest in no uncertain manner. — Bolton Enterprise, Feb. 11th, 1932.

Changes in School Fair Policy

The Children's Fair held at Caledon, Inglewood, Bolton, Ebenezer, Brampton and Cooksville each year will be run on a different policy in 1932. Owing to the economy program of the Ontario Government no seeds will be distributed as in past years. The prize lists are being changed to include classes for exhibits of products grown from seeds obtained by the pupils themselves. Collections, Drawings, Writings, Essays and Manual Training classes will be featured and the work will be done in school during school hours under the supervision of the teacher. Livestock, poultry, grain, fruit and vegetables, roots and potatoes, and flowers, will all come from the home farm. Judging contests in livestock and cooking will be held as in former years open to teams of boys and girls from each school. No prizes will be offered for physical drill but all schools wil be given standard commands and on the day of the fair will do the Strathcona exercises in unison under the leadership of one person. A special class for boys and girls pets will be continued as in 1931.

All the judges will give their time and labour free gratis and it is expected that the Junior Farmer's and Women's Institutes organizations will cooperate in supplying capable judges for each fair. A provisional prize list showing the new classes and features is going forward to the school teachers in the near future.

The sudden swerve made by the driver in a desperate effort to avoid hitting the obstruction, resulted in a complete somersult of the vehicle into the ditch.

Private A. McCauge, sustained slight bruises, while Corporal F. Tring Private C. Richardson and the driver Sgt. Gundrow, were uninjured. Provincial Officer A. Bosworth investigated.

LET US SMILE

"Doctor, I'm continually thinking of my girl. Can't you advise me how to get her of my mind?"

"Marry her, my boy, marry her."

"What good will that do?"

"Then you'll have her on your hands."

The master, to impress on his pupils the ned of thinking before speaking, told them to count fifty before saying anything important, and one hundred if it is very important.

Next day he was speaking, standing with his back to the fire, when he noticed several lips moving rapidly.

Suddenly the whole class shouted: " 'Ninety-eight, ninety-nine, a hundred. Your coat's on fire, sir!"

Motor Cost Mounts As Speed Increases

Chicago.—Speed comes high.

The Chicago Motor Club has come that conclusion, after an exhaustive investigation, that it may safely be said that a mile-a-minute in your automobile is from three to four times more expensive than when your speedometer says 40 to 45.

The conclusion was arrived at after checks made at various speeds. These results were cited:

Oil consumption at 55 miles an hour is seven times greater than it is at 30. Tire wear at 50 is twice as much as at 40. Gasoline consumption at 55 is one-fourth more than at 30. In addition there's the wear and tear on the car at the higher speeds.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

When Mrs. Kane, Sheila's maid, is arrested she admits that Ellsworth married Sheila under threat of breach of promise. A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial Mrs. Kane states that Orme is Sheila's real husband. Orme admits seeing Sheila on the night of her death. Dr. Cavanaugh takes the stand.

"But there is no evidence that he didn't carry it through at once. No one knows what time he arrived at the auto camp. Why assume an interval of aimless wandering?" The district attorney was startled out of all caution.

"Because," said Dr. Cavanaugh, "he hadn't had time to go to the marsh and get back when I saw him.'

"When you saw him—?" The district attorney clutched at the torn shreds of formality. "I withdraw that. When did you see him, doctor?"

"At half past nine o'clock on the night of March 18 I chanced to look out of my office window and saw David Orme sitting on the curb. I did not know at the time, of course, that he had reverted to his abnormal state—that he was then suffering from a recurrence of amnesia, although on this occasion a slight and temporary recurrence.

"I was busy with a caller at the time, and I intended, as soon as the caller left, to go out and speak to him and ask him what he wanted. He was very shy of interrupting me, and I took it for granted that he had seen the caller enter, and was waiting outside until I should be at liberty. At a quarter past ten I opened the door to let my visitor out—just in time to see Orme rise from the curb and walk away down the street.

"As it was late, I did not bother to call after him, thinking that he had tired of waiting and would come again. Sheila O'Shay's murderer did not leave her body unguarded while he spent three-quarters of an hour sitting on a curbstone before he went back and drove that body to the marsh for concealment.

"His presence outside my house is an alibi for David Orme. Incidentally, I think we may safely say that he is the only man on record who, in defending himself against the accusation of a crime, was all the while in possession of an alibi which he had completely forgotten."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

"Cavanaugh clears Orme! Doctor gives Orme alibi!" Already the cries of the newsboys were wafted faintly upward to the courtroom of department 24.

"Jury out at—make it 11.40, Jimmy," Peter slammed the telephone receiver on the hook and threaded his way through the chattering group of reported in the little witness room. They swung their legs from the table or leaned against the wall, smoking with the furious zest of men who had been deprived of cigarettes during the long hours in the courtroom.

"Two to one they'll be out less than an hour!"

"They might hang—that old bird with the goat's beard in the second row wasn't taking in much of the doctor's fireworks."

"Not a chance. I'll bet a dollar they'll acquit on the first ballot."

"Done! They'll stay out long enough to get one more dinner on the taxpayers, anyway."

"All the same, Orme might have done it."

"Purely circumstantial evidence. Juries don't like that. They can remember too many circumstances of their own that might take a deal of explaining."

"It was the doctor that did it. He handed it out like Jehovah on Sinai. If he told them to render a verdict that the moon was made of green cheese, they'd do it. Clever of Graham, bringing that in about 'The Man Who Makes No Mistakes'—they got it firmly fixed in their minds that the great Cavanaugh just couldn't be wrong."

"He certainly made the D.A. wish he was some place else."

"Hello, Peter! You look as if you needed a drink."

"I do," Peter agreed morosely, and slid through the door.

The rows of chairs in the courtroom were deserted. With stray sheets of copy paper and stubs of pencils strewing the floor, it had the disheveled look of a room after a party—that indefinable atmosphere of a place where things have recently happened and are no longer happening.

Half a dozen correspondents sat on the rail of the jury box, like a line of birds teetering on a fence, chatting with each other, the photographers, and the humanized bailiff. The chairs behind the lawyers' table were pushed back, empty. Above the back of a chair next to the railing which divided the room in half, Peter caught sight of the top of a small black hat.

He swung open the gate and dropped into the chair beside Barbara.

"Well," he said with weary relief, "that's over."

Barbara turned to him a brooding face.

"Oh!" she breathed, "do you really think it is?"

Peter turned sidewise, resting his elbows on the arm of the chair. By leaning forward just three inches, he could kiss the tip of her ear. He glanced over his shoulder at the group on the rail of the jury box. Better not risk it. He relinquished the opportunity with a regretful sigh.

"There's not a doubt in the world!" he said confidently. "I wish you'd take off your glove, Barbara. I think I could grab your hand without anybody noticing."

Obediently, almost absent-mindedly, Barbara took off her glove; but she smiled up at him with tremulous gratitude as her cold fingers relaxed under the reassuring pressure of Peter's clasp.

"But that speech of the district attorney's—it sounded horribly convincing with all that talk of motives and opportunity, and the way he kept emphasizing the threatening letter and the attempt to escape."

"Yes, it was a better argument than Graham's—for people like you and me, but not for the jury. The jury will think the D.A. is a bit of a bully and Graham a nice honest kid, desperately in earnest and at a disadvantage. Which is just about right, both ways. But Graham has brains as well as a pink and white complexion. He knew he didn't have to argue the case. What he had to do was to cut everything else away and hammer that jury with Dr. Cavanaugh's testimony and nothing else. They've got to remember that testimony as the one important issue—and that Dr. Cavanaugh is a man who can't be mistaken.

"Orme is acquitted beyond a shadow of a doubt—and it was your father that did it with his little hatchet."

"Yes," Barbara was staring straight before her at the state seal on the wall behind the judge's bench. "He was—very clever—wasn't he?"

"He was the whole works!" Peter beagn enthusiastically.

Then he saw that her lips were trembling—trembling so that she could hardly control them for speech. He glanced again over his shoulder at the chatting reporters.

"To hell with them!" he grunted with low-voiced violence, and raising his hand to Barbara's chin, turned her head gently towards him. Her eyes shone unnaturally large in her small thin face—pitifully smaller and thinner than when he had first seen it.

"You poor-little-girl," Peter's crooning voice had a tone which no one had ever heard in it before. "I know what you want to do. You want to put your head on my shoulder, and cry and cry and cry. And God knows how much I want you to do just that! Barbara, whenever you want a shoulder to cry on, promise me that you'll cry on mine. That's what I'm for. It's the one best thing on earth I'm good for, Barbara!"

"Yes," Barbara said faintly, "I'd like that." The tears welled slowly in her eyes, slipped down her cheeks. The corner of a pink tongue emerged, like a kitten's, to lick them from the corners of her mouth. Something in that childlike, wholly unconscious movement wrenched at Peter almost unbearably.

"Damn these people," he murmured fervently. "Damn everything!" He squared his shoulders, blocking the view of the man by the jury box. Then he pulled out a crumpled handkerchief and awkwardly but efficiently mopped Barbara's wet face. A shred of tobacco clung to her chin.

"At least I'm sure you—you don't do this very often," Barbara smiled through her tears. "You haven't what I'd call a fatal facility!"

"Listen to me," Peter said urgently. "This can't go on. You can't wear yourself out like this—you'll go all to pieces."

"Oh, no, I won't." Barbara's voice was steady now. "I can't afford to."

"But now that Orme has got off—and your father did get him off, sure as shooting—don't you think you'd feel better if you sometime told me all about it? Wouldn't it be a help to share it with some one—some one who would love you, no matter what happened?"

"No, Peter, I couldn't." Barbara spoke with a desolate, wistful finality. "I can't tell anyone—ever. But I'll say this much, though it's more than I thought I would, more than I ought. Only somehow, I want you to know. You say it wouldn't make any difference, but I do want you to know Peter—even though maybe you won't believe it."

"I'll believe anything on God's earth that you say to me, Barbara."

"It's only this: that I—I didn't kill Sheila O'Shay!"

The shuffling sound of feet from behind the door through which the jury had filed out, the trampling sound of feet as the courtroom doors were thrown open; a voice, the composite of many voices, saying, "Here they come!"—all came to Peter as a rushing confusion in which he was somehow propelled to seat 53 as the judge took his seat on the bench and the bailiff banged for order.

British Television Broadcast Received on Speeding Train

London—A party of radio and television experts received last week a normal television broadcast from the Brookmans Park B. B. C. Station on a moving train. No special apparatus was necessary, a four-valve portable receiver similar to that used by King George being coupled to a Baird televisor.

The train attained a speed of seventy miles an hour, but the dancer in the television studios could still be seen. This is said to be the first time television has been received on board a speeding train.

Wisconsin has had to revise its law paying bounty for rattlesnake rattles. It now requires half of the snake's body to be presented along with the rattles in order to collect. The reason for that is this: Rattlesnakes, given time, grow new rattles. Which accounts for the racket discovered in which some Wisconsonians removed the rattles, collected the bounty, and let the snakes live to grow new rattles!

Sunday School Lesson

February 21. Lesson VIII—Jesus the Good Shepherd—John 10: 1-16. Golden Text—The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.—Psalm 23: 1.

ANALYSIS.

I. FALSE SHEPHERDS AND TRUE, John 10: 1-6.

II. "I AM THE DOOR," John 10: 7-10.

III. "I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD," John 11: 11-18.

INTRODUCTION — John 10: 19-29 should follow 9: 41. The anniversary services commemorating the dedication of the Temple (10: 22) would remind all patriotic Jews of the Maccabean heroes who had purchased so dearly the temporary freedom of their country. During the years of bondage which followed, many false Messiahs won the confidence of the people, incited them to revolt, and left them only in greater disaster and servitude.

The religious leaders were little better. They used their holy offices for their own ends. They were "thieves and robbers" in contrast with the true shepherd who loves his sheep.

I. FALSE SHEPHERDS AND TRUE, John 10: 1-6.

Perhaps no other picture brings home more appealingly to the hearts of men the love of Jesus than this allegory. In the name "good shepherd," "good" means kindness, beauty, genuineness, all in one.

Jesus never forgot his Galilean boyhood and the stories he often heard the shepherds tell how sometimes they had to protect their flocks from prowling beasts of prey. He knew also that Israel's leaders in times past were sometimes called "shepherds," Num. 27: 17; Jer. 23: 1. Wounded in heart at the cruel way in which the "shepherds" of Israel had treated the man whom he had healed, he could not but think of them as false shepherds.

They had not come to their position of leadership and power by the God-appointed way—the door of love, but "by some other way," v. 1. The true shepherd, coming to the fold in the morning, is admitted by the "porter" (v. 3), the night watchman. Several flocks have been in the same fold for the night. The shepherd gives his peculiar whistle or call, and his own sheep follow him out to pasture. Eastern shepherds go before their flocks. They give them pet names as we name horses and dogs. His sheep always know their own master. A Scottish traveler once changed garments with a shepherd in Palestine, and thus disguised, tried to call the sheep to him. They did not move. But when the shepherd, dressed like a Scottish traveler, gave his call, they came to him at once.

II. "I AM THE DOOR," John 10: 7-10.

Said Jesus to the man whom the Pharisees had debarred from the religious community, "I am the way of entrance—not they." No ecclesiastical court on earth has the power to shut a man out from the kingdom which has come through me." They who came before him (v. 8) were the false leaders, political and religious, who had been deceiving the people.

The true pastor of God's flock (this is the meaning of "any man" in v. 9), entering upon his work through love shall have security (read "safe" instead of "saved"); he will have freedom to render his bit of service to his fellows (go in and out), and will be able to provide spiritual nourishment for his flock (find pasture).

The thief (v. 10), those false national and religious leaders—seeks only his own advantage. He bluffs his way along, but those who are in real touch with God are not deceived. Christ, men's true leader and shepherd, makes life a richer, bigger thing for every man, makes the man himself a bigger man, more vital, v. 10.

III. "I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD," John 11: 11-18.

The abundant life that Christ offers is possible only through the sacrifice of his own. Hence the simile changes. The false teachers are no longer "thieves and robbers," but timid men who run away when faced by danger; they have no real interest in their flock.

From the mountain top of his vision the inspired writer sees beyond the confines of the Jewish fold to the Gentiles. They are lost and wandering, but some day Christ will bring them in too. Such was David Livingstone's vision. Engraved on the slab in Westminster Abbey which marks his grave are these words, "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold."

One fold, and one shepherd (v. 16) is better translated "one flock." The Christian Church is not a walled fold, but a flock whose unity consists in each member of it hearing and following the voice of the Good Shepherd. This spiritual unity must ultimately show its existence by a visible outward union. Religious leaders the world over are today recognizing this. Hence the movements everywhere toward church union, that the world may know.

Autumn

Summer storms are hard storms,
  Autumn storms are mild;
Summer is a warrior,
  Autumn is a child.
Drooling through the forests
  Sobbing o'er the plains,
Comes the muted music
  Of the autumn rains.
Summer skies are bright skies,
  Autumn skies are lead;
Summer leaves are live leaves,
  Autumn leaves are dead.
Skipping o'er the meadows,
  Chuckling in the trees;
Flirting with the sunshine,
  Romps the autumn breeze.
Autumn suns are shy suns,
  Summer suns are bold;
Autumn days are bronze days,
  Summer days are gold.
Thrilling with the tonic,
  When the days are fair;
How the nostrils dilate,
  Drinking autumn air!
Vernal rains, the glad rains
  Come when life is new;
Autumn rains, the sad rains,
  Come when life is through.

Garden Chats

Article No. 1

Planning Will Help

But why bother about gardening now, with the echoes of New Year's celebrations just dying away, your average person may ask. True, here in Canada we have a bit of winter still before us and it will be some weeks before we can sally forth, spade in hand. But right at this point we might as well start shattering illusions by explaining that a good deal of success in gardening, and not a little pleasure too, lies in planning. The more we picture what we are going to do, the better the results. It is not necessary to worry over lack of means or experience. Study plants when you are drawing up plans. Put shade plants in shady places, sun plants in sunny places. Try to remember, if you haven't kept a diary, which plants did well and vice versa last year. Do not forget that annuals should not be planted year after year in the same location. Disease carries over in the soil. A good seed catalogue will help us considerably in this planning.

General Vegetable Hints

If we are fortunate in possessing a fair sized piece of ground we can use a horse or tractor to do most of the work. Sometimes this power can be rented from a neighbor if we are unable to supply it ourselves. Where used it is best to space rows of our ordinary vegetables thirty inches or a yard apart, and the bigger or spreading sorts like corn, potatoes, tomatoes or cucumbers three to four feet. This will allow easy and continuous cultivation right through until the work is no longer required, and very little hoeing will be needed. If, on the other hand, space is limited and we want maximum results we can reduce the width between rows to fifteen and twenty inches, respectively, and can further economize by alternating early and late stuff like spinach and carrots, peas and corn, so that the first named in each case will be used and out of the way before the later sorts require the full room. Of course, where one plans an intensive garden of this kind we will have more hand work, though this can be greatly lessened by the use of hand cultivators rather than hoes, and we should also use plenty of fertilizer. This may be either well rotted manure or a good balanced commercial mixture high in nitrogen, or better still, some of both. In all vegetable gardens it is essential to run rows absolutely straight, using a string when sowing. Not only does this improve the appearance but it conserves space and allows easy and thorough cultivation. Another thing to remember is to plow or spade the ground carefully before sowing and before we start, to have a plan on paper plotted roughly to scale. In our plan it is well to remember that such things like lettuce and onions, which are used frequently and which will benefit from a few pails of water during the dry weather, should be placed near the house for convenience sake.

Put Flowers in Clumps

In flowers we must get away from the straight row idea. It is all very well and advisable to grow some such as sweet peas, of which we prize flowers for cutting and for foliage, in the vegetable garden, but in the regular beds we should plant in clumps of one colour and variety and generally arrange to have the small stuff at the front and the taller sorts such as hollyhocks, sunflowers, dahlias and cosmos toward the rear. We should plan to have something blooming all the time and if we make our selection from the seed catalogue with this idea in mind, it will not be difficult to achieve almost continuous bloom from late spring until the first frosts in September.

Salesmen

Bishop Watterson tells the story of how a drummer on a train mistook him (the bishop) for another commercial traveller and asked him if he represented a big house.

"Biggest on earth," said the bishop.

"What's the name of the firm?" queried the drummer.

"Lord and Church," replied the imperturable bishop.

"Hum; Lord and Church; never heard of it. Got any branch houses anywhere?"

"Branch houses all over the world," said the bishop.

"That's queer. Never heard of 'em. Is it boots and shoes?"

"No."

"Hats and caps?"

"Not that either."

"Oh, dry goods, I suppose?"

"Well," said the bishop, "some call it notions."—From Louisville Times.

The Useful Whale

Practically the whole whale is used for commercial purposes. Whale oil, of course is the chief product, and is used principally at the present time in making soap. Occasionally it is used as a lubricant in combination with mineral oil, and recently a new use has been found for it in an animal oil for making margarine. Little whale oil is now used for heating and lighting purposes. Fresh whale flesh is ground into whale-meat meal for cattle feed, and both the flesh and bones are ground into fertilizer.

Other Ivory

Besides the elephant's tusk, commerce recognizes as ivory the teeth of the hippopotamus, walrus, narwhal, cachalot or sperm-whale, and of some animals of the wild boar class such as the wart-hog of South Africa.

One Way Air Mail Service at Altitude Of 10,000 Feet Started in Ecuador

Guayaquil.—Ecuador's recently inaugurated air mail service from Quito to outlying towns is probably the world's highest and only non-stop service, since the take-off is more than 10,000 feet above sea level and the planes return to their point of departure without landing. Latacunga, capital of the province of Leon, near the base of the volcano Cotopaxi and sixty-one miles south of Quito, is the only town on the route that has a landing field.

Tulcan, capital of the province of Carchi on the Colombian border 100 miles northeast of Quito, is the furthest outpost of the route and there and at other towns on the route the mail is dropped from the plane attached to small parachutes. This brings mail to the town from the capital in less than two hours, but the return mail, since the air service is one way only, takes two and sometimes four days.

This will be one of the most difficult routes in the world to fly, both because of the high altitude and the lack of landing fields. On the 10,000-foot Andean plateau the greater part of the country stands practically on edge. Another hazard is added by the snow-capped peaks of the Andes that poke into the clouds for another 12,000 feet.

The trip between the capital and Tulcan by ordinary means of travel takes two days or more while mule-back means about four or five days, and it depends on the state of the roads whether or not motor cars can get beyond Ibarra, the present terminus of the railroad from Quito. A little rain makes the hills so slippery that it is hopeless to try to get through, although the surface of te roads may be hard enough. Te greater part of the soil is a very hard clay called cangagua which is a bit more slippery than wet soap.

Air service between the coast and the capital and the interior would be out of the question without a line of radio beacons as at present it is largely a matter of blind flying, because there is always a good bit of rain around 2,000 to 5,000 feet between the shore and the highlands.

Poet and Peasant

The sunset's golden rods have railed the west,
And steel-blue swallows cut with crescent wings
Across the tawny metal of the sky;
Like chinking of loose change a blackbird sings.

My pathway lies between these hills, all close Together huddled like creatures crouched in sleep,
The curving fang of my scythe swings loose behind
As my grass-wet boots crunch down the open steep.

There at the brown path's end my cottage stands
With new blue paint upon its wooden eaves;
One wall all grey and flat and windowless,
One hung with a rough green rug of ivy leaves.

And when those trees have turned to rich black lace,
And when the stars are fastened on the night,
Quiet within my secret armory I'll sit
And burnish rhymes to beauty while I write.

—M. G. Gower, in Poetry.

Wouldn't Do

"Why are you looking so fed-up?"

"I bought a book called 'How To Make Love,' and now I don't know what to do."

"Why?"

"Well, it says you take the girl's hand, look into her eyes, and say: 'I love you, Beatrice'."

"What's wrong with that?"

"My girl's name is Lizzie."

Dobbs—"Sobbs asked me to forget my troubles this morning."

Hobbs—"What for?"

Dobbs—"In order to give me a chance to listen to his."

Quick COMFORT for fretful
upset children

ALL children are subject to little upsets. They come at unexpected times. They seem twice as serious in the dead of night. But there's one form of comfort on which a mother can always rely; good old Castoria. This pure vegetable preparation can't harm the tiniest infant. Yet mild as it is, it soothes a restless, fretful baby like nothing else. Its quick relief soon sees the youngster comfortable once more, back to sleep. Even an attack of colic, or diarrhea, yields to the soothing influence of Castoria.

Keep Castoria in mind, and keep a bottle in the house—always. Give it to any child whose tongue is coated, or whose breath is bad. Continue with Castoria until the child is grown!

For sale by all druggists. Be sure to get the genuine product with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper, and this familiar nameplate:

PERSONALS

Mrs. Thos. Steen is a Patient in the Western Hospital; she underwent an operation a few days ago. Recent reports of her condition are very encouraging.

David Bayne of Creditvale who was threatened with Pneumonia will soon be out again.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Switzer are both confined to their home through illness; they may have to stay in for several days yet. Their condition is not alarming.

The young people have been enjoying some skating on the Credit River this week.

Dr. S. H. Smith has resigned the office of Clerk and Treasurer of the Village of Streetsville.

The heavy rains of last week did considerable damage to property in the north end of the County, when the Credit river went on the rampage. A bridge at Inglewood nearly taken off the abutments. Although the water was very high no damage was done in Streetsville.

Miss Graydon, daughter of Mrs. H. Cook spent the week-end with her mother. We wish to congratulate her upon her very high standing in her recent examinations as a graduating nurse. Her standing was so satisfactory to the hospital authorities that she has been placed on the hospital staff.

Do not fail to attend the concert held in the United Church on Wednesday evening, Feb. 24th. A first class programme is assured. Admission 25 and 15 cents.

At the annual meeting of the Public Library Board. Rev. R. J. W. Perry, was re-elected chairman and Rev. Geo. H. Purchase, Secretary-Treasurer.

Wedding Anniversary

A number of friends gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Hamilton, tenth line, Trafalgar, on Tuesday evening, Feb, 9, to celebrate the 45th wedding anniversary of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Hamilton, of Streetsville.

After a delicious chicken dinner, served by the hostess, the guests spent a very pleasant evening exchanging reminiscenses of former days.

Among those present was Mrs. T. A. McClure who was married on the same day in the same year, as Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton. For many years, these two couples who were neighbors in the Lisgar District, celebrated their anniversaries together. Although one of their number has passed on, still these friends of many years standing cling together, and many were the happy memories which they enjoyed on this occasion.

A most unique feature of their joint celebrations has been the fact that both Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. McClure wear gold brooches, wedding gifts from their husbands, which though the couples were entire strangers at the time, are identical in design.

Their large circle of friends wish them all, many years of happiness.

UNITED CHURCH NOTES

The Valentine Social held in the United Church on Monday evening by the Y.P. Society was largely attended and much enjoyed. A special feature of the meeting was a one act play, "Just Like a Woman," the characters being Misses Jean Temple and Margaret Cook, Mrs. McArthur, Graydon Clipperton, Bert Cook and Harry Johnson. A skit entitled "The Minister's Mistake" presented by Misses Edna Stephens, Marion Lindsay and Norman Cook was highly humourous. An acrobatic stunt given by a number of girls also caused much amusement. Mrs. McArthur, Mrs. Falconer and Mrs. Reid received much applause when they presented a number "An Old Fashioned Valentine." Mrs. Reid rendered two much appreciated solos.

The Devotional part of the meeting was taken by Miss Mary Temple while Miss Iola Hope read the scripture.

During the evening Miss Hicks led in the singing. Current events, all of which were up-to-the-minute problems of the day were given by Miss Blanche Hisey, Mrs. McArthur and Mr. Purchase.

Miss Margaret Cook was in charge of the social part of evening which was opened with a musical contest.

At the close of the meeting a dainty lunch was served.

Veterans to Hold Euchre and Draw

On Monday evening, Feb. 15th The Streetsville Overseas Veterans Club held a very enthusiastic meeting, at which several new comrades became associated with the Branch. It was decided to hold a Euchre at the Oddfellows Hall on Thursday, March 17th and also a Draw for valuable prizes in order to raise funds for the relief of needy comrades and others in distress in the district. All, whether members or not, are requested to co operate with us to make this a big success. The people of Streetsville are particularly asked to give us their support as they have done in the past, to make our efforts unfailing.

The Streetsville OverseasVeterans Club was primarily organized to supervise and administer the erection of the memorial. With the help of the people of Streetsville and others interested in the project this has now been accomplished and we can safely say, that, for the size of the village our memorial is one of the best in Canada and a credit to Streetsville. We are now arranging to have this memorial turned over to the care of a committee comprised of the Reeve of the village and other municipal officers. Since the completion of the memorial, however, the War Veterans Club has joined the Canadian Legion in a body and have obtained a charter designating this Club as Branch 139 Canadian Legion British Empire Service League and we hope to carry on under the administration of the Provincial and Dominion Command of the organization.

BEAUTY SLEEP

The surface of the body receives a great deal of attention with the rather obvious desire to make its appearance both pleasant and attractive. The woman of today makes no attempt to conceal the attention she gives her skin; men do not make quite so public what they do in this regard.

Beauty, however, is not superficial; it is deep, as it reflects the health of the interior of the body. The only lasting beauty is that which is based upon the health of the body, which is the reward of a hygenic life.

Fatigue is an enemy of health, and is destructive to the charm of a clear healthy skin, which is above all, the basis of beauty. The body cannot be healthy without sufficient rest, nor is it possible to make up, by long rests at intervals, for the sufficient rest which should be taken regularly.

Beauty sleep is popularly supposed to be the hours of sleep before midnight, which is true to the extent that sleep before midnight implies long hours of sleep. The body works best under a system of reasonable regularity. We cannot put off the rest which we need at present with the idea of making it up later. We must have the regular cycle of rest and activity if we are to avoid the ill results of fatigue.

In the lives of many, particularly the young, we find the frequent temptation to overdo work or play. These individuals so often pass the point of normal fatigue that they come to disregard it and allow themselves to be convinced that they are not tired. They are always ready to go.

Such behaviour throws a tremendous strain upon the body which shows it sooner or later. It is reflected in the face despite all artificial aids. In addition, the fatigued body is an easier victim for the germs of disease. Fatigue is a real friend of the germ of tuberculosis.

The individual who protests that it is no use for him to go to bed at what most people consider a regular hour. There should be a regular bed-time, allowing for occasional exceptions, if the body is to be ready for sleep when the individual goes to bed.

We do not know a great deal about sleep, but certain things in connection with sleep may be accepted. The first point is that periods of rest must follow by any individual can be based upon low periods of activity; they cannot be postponed without endangering the body. The amount of sleep required the fact that he should feel rested and be ready to get up at the time he must rise in the morning. This does not necessarily imply a desire to get up—some persons like to lie in bed—but everyone should feel rested and refreshed and be thoroughly awake at rising time.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Much interest has been evidenced in the new Boy Scout Catalogue of Official Uniforms and Equipment which has just been issued and a copy of which has been mailed to every Lone Scout in this province. It is certainly an attractive publication, and features a large variety of articles of interest to Scouts of all ages.

A notable feature is the remarkable reduction in the prices of uniforms and we also notice that there are quite a number of new books and other items listed.

Lone Scouts will not find any mention of the special Lone Scout Mauve Neckerchief in the catalogue as this color has been reserved for the exclusive use of Lonies in Canada. When ordering uniform, however, Lone Scouts should be careful to specify that they require the "Special Mauve Lone Scout Neckerchief."

Sir Ernest Shackleton's Scout

The scientific staff of the Antarctic research ship Discoverer II., now in the far South Seas, includes J. W. S. Marr of Aberdeen, a Scout selected to accompany Sir Ernest Shackleton on his last expedition to the South Pole in the Quest. Scout Marr also accompanied the Algarson expedition to the Antarctic, and has since qualified for several university scientific degrees. He has made good.

Many Lone Scouts will envy the opportunities which have come to Scout Marr, and we would remind them that it was only because he worked hard to qualify himself as a good All-round Scout that he was selected in the first place.

A Cenotaph Flag For New Zealand

A white ensign from the Cenotaph in Whitehall, London, was presented to the Scouts of New Zealand by Lord Baden-Powell, and placed for keeping in Christ Church Cathedral, Auckland. A similar flag, presented to Canadian Scouts at the last world Scout Jamboree, occupies an honoured place at Dominion Scout Headquarters, Ottawa.

Dominion Headquarters at Ottawa have a number of interesting souvenirs from Overseas, including a beautiful Totem Pole, which Lord Baden Powell presented to the Canadian Contingent which attended the Jamboree in England in 1929. This totem pole was on exhibit at the Scout Booth at the Canadian National Exhibition last summer.

Next World Gathering of Boyhood

The dates for the next world gathering of Boy Scouts have been announced as August 1 to 13, of next year. The jamboree will be held in Hungary. It is expected that Canada will be represented by a contingent.

Hobbies

During the winter months it is often hard for a Lone Scout to find much to do to amuse himself, during spare time, especially if he is not a member of a Lone Patrol.

Patrols can organize Winter Hikes, Ski-ing Parties, Snow Fights and Skating Sports and have a lot of fun, but it isn't so interesting to do these things all alone.

We suggest therefore, that all the Lonies, whether members of Patrols or not, should have a hobby. You will find that almost every successful man has a hobby of some sort or another, with which to relax his mind, during his spare moments.

In the winter months it is nice to have an indoor occupation, such as Fretwork, Wood Carving, Collecting Stamps or Autographs, etc., making rugs or bead work, straw plaiting, etc., some of which hobbies can be made into very profitable occupations.

A suggestion has been already made to you that you enter the Fisher Body Craftsmen's Guild coach building competition.

"Lone E" also has a number of autographs of famous people, and foreign stamps which we would be glad to send to any Lone Scouts who apply for same, to the Lone Scout Department, The Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2, from which address, also, full particulars may be obtained of how to become a Lone Scout.

—"Lone E"

The Legislature In Brief

With the usual pomp and ceremony the Ontario Legislature got under way last week, and the main item of business was the speech from the Throne which was delivered by Sir William Mulock, Chief Justice of Ontario.

A modified moratorium on mortgages was one of the main items brought out in the speech, under which all proposed foreclosures will be heard before a County Judge who will have all power to decide whether additional time is to be allowed on either principal or interest payments.

Legislation will also be introduced for the amending of the Old Age Pension Act under which the Federal Government has to pay seventy per cent. of the total, which it is claimed will mean an annual saving of one million four hundred thousand dollars to the province and nine hundred thousand dollars to the municipalities.

Another measure to be introduced is the proposed amalgamation of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board with the Bureau of Municipal Research, under which powers will be granted the Board to govern finances of those municipalities which are insolvent or in a precarious financial condition.

It was also pointed out in the speech from the Throne that while agricultural production was maintained at a high level the financial return was much below normal. The new Ontario Marketing Board has organized the Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Markets Board and is giving special attention to grading and marketing several important farm products.

With regard to Hydro, it was pointed out that in the rural parts of the province the demand for power called for the construction of over twelve hundred miles of new transmission lines to supply nearly nine thousand additional consumers, and that by utilizing the flow of the Ottawa River at Chats Falls an important addition, second only in extent to the great Niagara development, has been made in generating facilities.

Two hundred miles have been added to the Ontario Highway system, while payments have been made by the Province to the Municipalities for road purposes of nearly seven million dollars.

Ontario Air Service Organize For Spring

Ottawa.—Despite the cancellation of a number of air mail routes, slightly more mail was carried by airplane in 1931 than during the previous year, according to a preliminary survey of flying operations in Canada just issued by the civil aviation branch, Department of National Defence. Fewer pilots' licenses were issued during the year.

Licenses were issued to 157 private pilots and 109 commercial pilots in 1931, compared with 175 and 125, respectively, in 1930. The number of air engineers increased from 61 to 134, and 19 air harbors were licensed in comparison with 10 in 1930.

Mail planes carried 483,490 pounds of mail during the year, compared with 474,199 in 1930. Light airplane clubs flew 3,000 less hours during the year. Toronto Flying Club led the light clubs with six craft. With 1,221 hours to its credit, the Toronto club was second in the number of hours flown. The Edmonton and Northern Alberta Club flew 1,290 hours.

Olympic Hockey Retained by Canada

Tying Score 2-2 Goal With 33 Seconds to Go—Wins Round 4-3

Lake Placid.—Her fourth consecutive Olympic hockey title was won by Canada after a bitter struggle with an all-fighting United States team here Saturday afternoon, holding the Americans to a 2-2 tie during a 30-minute overtime play.

The vaunted defensive skill of the Winnipegs was strained to the limit as the United States team bored in with the hope of an extra game Saturday to decide the title.

Having beaten the Americans 2-1 in overtime in their first meeting, the Canadians were two points up, and held desperately to their draw, the extra point confirming them as 1932 Olympic champions.

The United States never before made such a potent threat to gain the world's hockey supremacy, which Canada has so jealously guarded as her own since the game was admitted as an Olympic sport. The Winnipeg Falcons, Toronto Granites and Varsity Grads have all maintained Canada's traditional supremacy in the hockey world, and now the title reverts to a hockey team from the western city.

OUT FROM UNDER.

Yesterday the harrassed Winnipegs twice struggled out from underneath to tie the score as the Americans unleashed a surprisingly effective attack and covered up with a nearly impregnable defence.

With a minute to go, the Canadians were apparently beaten, 2-1. Romeo Rivers flung a hard drive at the United States goalie from the boards just inside the blue line and the red lights flashed just 33 seconds before the third period bell rang.

Rivers' goal gave the Canadians another chance, and for three ten-minute overtime periods they stood solidly on the defensive and turned back the rushing Americans. Devastating back-checking and crushing body-checks disrupted those drives of the American forwards. Winnipegs heaved the puck down to the other end of the ice as often as they could and made their opponents skate after it.

It was a hard and rugged game with the ultimate issue in doubt until the third overtime period had ticked away. The Winnipegs were surprised at the strength of the United States squad and nearly dropped the first game. On Saturday they made the same error. The game was barely two minutes old when the Americans put the puck in the cage behind Bill Cackburn. Everett skated into the Winnipeg's defence and took a pass from Palmer. He slammed the rubber into the cage as it touched his stick.

A little shaken by the unexpected turn of events, the Winnipegs slowed for a few minutes and then swept into the attack. The United States defence of Anderson and Garrison turned them back with heavy bodychecks. Hack Simpson, lumbering 186-pound Winnipegs' reserve centre, finally broke through. Unruffled, Hack barged through and fought off the defence with a husky shoulder. He swung right up to the mouth of the goal and drew Farrell out before he shoved the puck in.

U.S. REGAINS LEAD.

The Winnipegs took it easy for a while then, and the United States took the lead again. Two Winnipegs were sitting in the penalty box when Palmer scooped up a rebound and sent a bullet-like shot glancing off Cockburn's leg into the Canadian goal.

The Canadians put over a couple of counter-attacks, but were careful to stay within easy reach of their own defence. The ceaseless back-checking of the Canadian forwards sweeping the centre ice area was a sad stumbling block for the Americans, and they were still trying to get through when the timer's gong ended hostilities for another four years. "Uncle," said the inquiring little girl from the city, "why are the hens making such a noise?"

"I expect they want their food," he replied.

The little girl shook her head.

"But that's all nonsense, uncle," she said. "If they are hungry they can lay themselves some eggs."

Troops Massed By Both Sides In Preparation For Big Push

Japs Have at Least 25,000 Men and Ample Equipment for Conflict—Protest to be Made—Settlement Officials Object to Land of Nipponese in Concession

Shanghai, Feb. 15—Monday British and U.S. members of the International Settlement Volunteer Corps, patrolling the northern boundaries of the Settlement, received a baptism of fire to-day when a number of Japanese shells fell within their positions.

The volunteers withdrew immediately as a precaution, but soon resumed their positions and began strengthening their barricades against further possible shelling. The shells which fell in their sector were part of a Japanese bombardment of Chinese positions.

Japanese aeroplanes bombed Chapei for upward of an hour just before noon, but failed to accomplish any visible definite results.

Japanese soldiers streamed ashore in Shanghai again to-day to swell thousands awaiting the greatest battle yet in the warfare with China.

New Ships Arrive

They landed from four new troopships that arrived off the Japanese docks in the Whangpoo River, almost on the heels of a horde of Nipponese troops disembarked by seven transports yesterday.

Japanese naval headquarters had announced earlier that five or six transports were on the way, with possibly 10,000 troops.

Not a single Chinese gun spoke as the vessels under a convoy of destroyers passed the Chinese forts at Woo Sung, zone of recent battle, at the confluence of the Whangpoo and Yangtse Rivers, sixteen miles northwest of Shanghai.

The Japanese aeroplanes appeared over stricken Chapei, Chinese section of the city converted days ago into a battleground, and again bombed it about the time the new troopships arrived.

Chapei Again Bombed

Except for a brief exchange of artillery and machine-gun fire over Chapei early in the morning, and the later bombing, Japanese headquarters said everything was quiet on the Chapei-Woosung front, but Japanese planes flying over Woosung reported the discovery of as many as 500 Chinese soldiers moving from Woosung along the south bank of the Yangtse River.

Japanese officials interpreted this as indicating that the Chinese were beginning to retreat from that area. The reported movement, however, lacked confirmation in other quarters.

Preparing For Battle

A battle that would make hostilities around Shanghai during the past three weeks look like a mere skirmish appeared inevitable to-day as both Chinese and Japanese massed troops and more troops all along the Chapei-Woosung battlefront.

The coming of bloodshed on a large scale appeared all the more certain as feverish efforts of neutral mediators to avoid it met with failure at every turn. The British, United States and French Ministers spent all Sunday seeking a loophole which might open the way for some kind of negotiations, but achieved no tangible results.

Influential Chinese themselves held numerous conferences, trying to conceive some possible peace plan, but the early hours of Monday found them most pessimistic. Among the conferees was T. V. Soong and H. H. Kung, both former Ministers in the former Nankin Government.

Stevedores Still Busy

Although the Japanese completed landing of soldiers from seven transports at Woosung and in the International Settlement yesterday, large gangs of stevedores were still busy early to-day unloading equipment obviously intended for a "big push."

The Japanese concealed the number and disposition of troops along the battle line, but military observers estimated that they had at least 25,000 men and ample modern equipment ready for battle. The Chinese meanwhile continued to dig into their positions and declare that they would die before they gave in.

The Chinese man-power was apparently equal to the Japanese, or even greater, but their equipment, observers believed, was far inferior.

Out of the holds of the Japanese transports came tanks, howitzers, light and heavy artillery, aerial bombs and cavalry equipment.

Conflicting Statements

The latest word from the Japanese, officially, as to their intentions on the Chapei-Woosung battlefront, was contradictory. Early on Sunday Lieut.-General Kenkichi Uyeda, commander of all the Japanese offensive was at that a big Japanese offensive was at hand, and explained that the sole object in coming to Shanghai of large troop forces was to make the place safe. He added that he still hoped for peaceful settlement involving voluntary withdrawal of the Chinese to "a safe distance."

Late last night Rear-Admiral S. Shimada, commanding the naval forces of the Japanese, told correspondents that, in view of the Chinese attitude it probably would be necessary to "strike them out."

The Admiral intimated that if the Chinese troops did not voluntarily withdraw, the Japanese would drive them back perhaps thirty miles from the boundaries of the International Settlement.

With the arrival of a detachment of French reinforcements, expected momentarily, the foreign and military naval forces in the International Settlement, exclusive of the Japanese, will be brought to 12,100 men. The British with 3,500 men continued to maintain the largest force.

The United States forces number 3,100, 2,000 of which are marines. The French have 3,000 and the Italians 300. The rest of the force is made up of the Shanghai volunteer corps.

Protest Ignored

Edwin S. Cunningham, Consul-General at Shanghai, advised the State Department at Washington that no reply has been received to a protest he made to the Japanese Consulate against an attack by Japanese plainclothesmen upon Arthur Ringwalt, United States Vice-Consul, and Mrs. L. Young, a United States citizen of Chinese parentage.

Ringwalt, who comes from Omaha, Neb., accompanied the woman into the Hongkew area to rescue her child. In spite of the fact that Ringwalt displayed his United States consular credentials, they were roughly handled. Neither was seriously hurt and Mrs Young later recovered her child.

Startling Happenings Expected

"Spectacular developments," including the establishment of an independent State in Manchuria, were anticipated to-day in Rengo (Japanese) News Agency despatches from Changchun.

The messages said Chinese leaders in Manchuria were assembling at Mukden for the purpose of arranging final details of the formation of a new independent State.

Governor Hsi Hsia of Kirin Province already has pressed through Changchun en route to Mukden, and General Mah Chan-shan will leave Harbin for Mukde on Tuesday.

Despatches from Harbin to-day said no local conflict with Soviet Russia was anticipated, nor any movement of Japanese troops further northward contemplated. It was said the Japanese forces would be limited to Harbin and Tsitsihar. The approximate strength of Japanese forces in Manchuria was estimated at 20,000 to 25,000.

Air Mail Shows Increase Despite Cancelation of Routes

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—The program of reconditioning the planes in the service of the air operations department of the Ontario Forestry branch is proceeding on schedule, Captain W. R. Maxwell, director of the air service, said on Saturday. They will be ready for the Spring tests about April 15, as usual. "We always prepare for an early Spring fire hazard and an early break-up," said Capt. Maxwell, "and we are well on schedule for our reconditioning program this year to take care of an emergency."

The air service is conducting no regular training classes for pilots this season, according to Captain Maxwell. Usually a number of employees of the force take their licenses each Spring and take a course during the Winter. There are a number of planes at Sioux Lookout ready for any emergency which might arise. Likewise the plane at the Sault, piloted by Geo. Phillips, is equipped with skis and is standing by for any necessity. Frank MacDougall's plane at Algonquin Park is equipped with skis, and he is flying regularly each week, Captain Maxwell included.

THERE WAS A LIMIT

"Spare a penny or two, sir," said the poorly dressed young man to the passer-by. "My family is in great need."

"Is your father ill or something?" asked the stranger.

"He went bankrupt and went mad," said the young man.

"H'm!" said the stranger. "Did he do anything for his creditors?"

"No; he wasn't as mad as all that!" came the reply.

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 11

Problem

Hearts—A, 7, 6, 5
Clubs—A, Q, 10
Diamonds—K, 5
Spades—none

Hearts—K, Q, J, 10, 9 Clubs—K, J, 9 Diamonds—none Spades—9	Y A B Z	Hearts—2, 3 Clubs—none Diamonds—Q, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6 Spades—10

Hearts—2
Clubs—5, 4, 3, 2
Diamonds—J, 3
Spades—J, 8

If spades are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y Z win eight of the nine tricks against any defense?

Solution in the next article.

Contract, as the name implies, allows the player to score towards game only the number of tricks he has bid. For example, if a player bids two spades and makes four, he can only score two, the number bid, and the remaining two tricks are scored in his honor column at 50 per trick. This rule makes it necessary for players to bid for game on every hand, whether their opponents overbid or not, provided, of course, these hands warrant a try for game.

As a result, there are no "dead" hands at Contract where one player, for example, bids one heart and all pass, as occurs very frequently at Auction. When one side holds all the cards there is bound to be plenty of action whether opponents bid or not. The lucky side must bid for game if they want it and once they feel sure of game, they have the still further incentive of trying for "slams." At Contract a little slam, if bid and made, scores 500 points if not vulnerable and 750 points if vulnerable and a big slam, if bid and made, scores 1000 points if not vulnerable and 1500 points if vulnerable. As a result of these large premiums, the effort to bid and make slams offers one of the exciting features of Contract.

In the regular game of Auction you may take a chance now and then with a weak bid. It costs very little but in Contract you'll find it very expensive. For instance, in Contract you bid one no trump with just an ordinary thin no trumper. What will happen? If second hand passes, your partner may have good help for a good no trumper. Your partner will of course bid you up. He may be justified in bidding three no trumps. Think of the wallop you'll get if it's doubled. You have no place to go, and oh, boy, wallops in Contract count heavily against you.

It's the ambition of all Auction and Contract players to become experts, but it is really surprising how little real work they are willing to do to accomplish this result. There are probably ten million people in the country to-day who play Auction or Contract and yet not five per cent. of them ever buy a book on either game and, if they do, it usually is placed carefully in the bookcase and never opened.

But if you will not read a book on the game, you will derive much benefit from a study of the various hands that are analyzed in these articles and, if you keep at it, you are bound to improve your game; and if you learn to play a little better than your associates, you will win, even without the aces and kings. As one player described the game of a well-known expert: "The boy certainly knows how to play 'em. He don't get much to work with, but he can sure make nevens and eights act like kings and queens."

We cannot all be experts but we can certainly improve our game; and one of the best ways to do so is to study over the analysis of the test hands given in these articles. Every one of such hands will bring up points of play or bidding that, if properly understood, will be invaluable. These hands have all been submitted to the writer for analysis and came up in actual play. Study them over and make up your mind as to the correct bid or play in each instance. When the analysis is given, compare your opinion with the writer's and, if there is any difference, think it over and then adapt yourself and your game accordingly. Handled in this way, test hands will prove invaluable.

There is one point in the play of a hand that some of the good players don't always follow, and yet is generally a consistent winner. When the declarer has won the declaration at a suit and you have four or more trumps, open your long suit. With four or more trumps there is always a possibility of being able to establish your long suit and break up the declarer's hand by forcing him to trump your established suit. For example, hearts are trumps and your holding is as follows:

Hearts—Q, 9, 6, 5
Clubs—A, K, 7, 6, 5
Diamonds—Q, 6, 2
Spades—10

With such a hand, it is much better to open the club suit than to lead the singleton spade. Suppose you have bid clubs and your partner has supported the bid. You lead the suit and the declarer is forced to trump. Even if he has six hearts, he can only lead two rounds of trumps. If he leads three rounds, you can win the third round with the queen and force him to trump again.

Then it takes his last trump to draw yours and, if your partner can take a trick in the other suits, the declarer cannot score game. If the declarer has only five trumps but great strength in your singleton suit, the lead of your strong suit would beat him, but the lead of your singleton up to his strong suit would give h' an advantage that would enable him to score game. The singleton lead is always a gamble and is seldom a winning play, unless holding three trumps. With a strong suit and four trumps, the long suit lead is much the better. Watch this play and, when you understand the theory of it, you will be a much better player.

Radio Now Installed In Turkish Mosque

Istanbul, Turk.—For the first time in Islamic history a radio has been installed in a Turkish mosque. Choosing one of the most famous religious edifices in all Turkey, St. Sophia, for this innovation, Mustapha Kemal has directed that the radio services be chanted from the newly adopted Turkish Koran by 25 clergymen.

This is the second notable departure from ancient custom in religious service instituted by the progressive Turkish President this year. The Arabic Koran, always unintelligible as Latin to the layman, was replaced early last month in some Istanbul mosques by a Turkish translation. These innovations are in consummation of the Nationalist Government's aim of adapting the Islamic religion to the needs of modern Turkey.

1,600-Yr.-Old Jug Unearthed In Nebraska Cemetery

Butte, Neb.—A jug, believed to be at least 1,600 years old, was unearthed near here. It was hand-carved and once had been protected by a wicker frame. The discovery was made in what is thought to have been a cemetery of early Indian tribes. Pieces of pottery, flint arrow-heads, teeth and bones also were found.

The relics may have been the remains of a civilization of mound builders, it is believed. Specimens have been sent to anthropologists at the University of Nebraska.

Germany's Oldest Church Shows Date Block of 732

Siegen, Westphalia.—A stone bearing the date 732 has been found in the wall of the old church in Raumland, a small village on the Eder River, and research has established that the building was erected by St. Boniface. It is thus the oldest definitely dated Church in Germany, looking back this year on twelve centuries of existence.

They were discussing dogs, and the tales were becoming "pretty tall" when one of the group took the lead. "Smith," he said, "had a most intelligent retriever. One night Smith's house caught fire. All was instant confusion. Old Smith and wife flew for the children and bundled out with them in quick order. Alas, one of them had been left behind. But up jumped the dog, rushed into the house, and soon reappeared with the missing child. Everyone was saved; but Rover dashed through the flames again. What did the dog want? No one knew. Presently the noble animal reappeared, scorched and burned, with —what do you think?"

"Give it up," cried the eager listeners.

"With the fire insurance policy, wrapped in a damp towel, gentlemen."

A woman says she is troubled because her husband talks in his sleep—and mumbles so that she can't understand him. Gleeful Gladys says some women go right on chasing illusions at forty—by that time most of us are kept busy dodging disillusion. A woman seldom comes out of a sullen spell until she believes her husband has suffered as much as she thinks he should. Most of us try to put off everything except a good time. Foolishness is still foolishness, no matter how august may be the man who utters it. A lot of people don't care much what happens so long as it doesn't happen to them.

The time to start advertising is when the other fellow says: "Aw, there ain't no new business; let's cut down our appropriation." A large man never complains when joshed about his size, but the little man is sure to get sore if you call him a runt. No man is so handsome that he is good looking in a dirty shirt. A lot of "self-made" men would have fared much better had they let the contract to somebody else.

He was a guest of a Cockney family in England. They were eating ham.

The teacher had labored long and patiently to teach little Arthur the points of the compass.

Teacher—"When you stand with your face to the north, your right hand is toward the East, your left toward the west, and your back toward the south. Now, tell me the directions. What is in front of you?"

Little Arthur (after a thoughtful pause)—"My stomach."

Mother—"Would you like to come and rock the baby for a bit, Tommy?

Tommy—Rather! But I haven't got a rock."

She—"Do you know you'd make a wonderful fireman?"

He—"How's that?"

She—"You never take your eyes off the hose."

The reader is often carried away by the author's train of thought.

Sun in Manhattan

At dawn the sun begins his daily work
To make the city cognizant of him.
He faces walls inflexible and grim,
They fling a joyless and defiant smirk.
He jumps to some tall building and his darts
Glance in great flashes from the glassy quartz;
Another building catches these gay gleams
Annd throws back jauntily its onyx beams.
Thus is the light sent out and caught again
Till all the upper spires are lit, and then
With darkness hiding in his last retreat,
The searchlight of the sun sweeps down the street;
He climbs across the buildings, and below
In sunny garments men and women go!

Japan and Manchuria

Economist (London): Time, in the second chapter of the Manchurian story, shows signs of changing sides. From the seizure of Mukden on September 19 down to the completion of the Japanese occupation of Manchuria last week, time worked in Japan's favour. While the League Council wavered, the Japanese Army carried out its operations swiftly according to plan. Now that the plan has been executed, the Japanese are faced with the new problem of holding what they have taken; and now time may begin to work on the side of the Chinese guerillas, to whose favourite method of warfare the Japanese have exposed themselves by the enormous lengthening of their lines of communication. We do not believe that the Japanese Army will succeed in clearing Manchuria of brigands within three months or within many times that period. And meanwhile the Nine-Power Treaty and the Kellogg Pact will be working, impalpably but potently, upon the public opinion of the world to Japan's undoing. We have not seen the end of this Japanese adventure.

GOING UPSTAIRS WAS AGONY

Hobbling With Rheumatism

ALTHOUGH NOT YET 30

For a dramatic picture of the deforming and disabling effects of acute rheumatism, read this lady's letter. She had often looked at Kruschen advertisements and laughed—little dreaming that she herself would soon be joining in the chorus of praise for "the little daily dose."

"I suffered agonies with Rheumatism. The doctor said he had never known a woman under 30 to get Rheumatism like I had it. I was so bad I could only get upstairs by sitting on each stair, until I had pluck enough to pull myself up to the next one. My hands and feet were so swollen that they looked uncanny, and neighbours used to watch me hobble round and say how awful I looked. I had often laughed at the Kruschen advertisements, but thought, as I had given almost everything else a trial, I might as well give Kruschen a trial. I did so, and will always say I consider them wonderful. I take half-a-teaspoonful of Kruschen every morning. Now I can run upstairs. Yet I have taken Kruschen Salts for two months only."—Mrs. R. F.

The system of the rheumatic subject is a producer of that dangerous body poison known as uric acid, which is composed of knife-edged crystals. It is bred in accumulated waste matter which the organs of elimination have failed to expel. Kruschen is a powerful solvent of these flint-hard crystals. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside; knotted joints become loose.

Better still, Kruschen eliminates the root cause of the evil. Taken regularly, it keeps your liver and kidneys in perfect tune, so that these eliminating organs free your inside from all poison-breeding waste products.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

"They're Off!"—In Old Quebec

The Eleventh annual Eastern International Dog Sled Derby—crowning event of the 1932 Winter Sport season—is scheduled for February 22-24. For those three days, all eyes turn to Quebec City, where each day the fight between the best dog teams in America over a course of 40-odd miles a day is staged. Emil St-Godard, Leonhard Seppala, hero of the rush with diphtheria serum to Nome a few years back, are among the contenders, of whom last year there were eleven and this year there will likely be even more. In all, the race covers a distance of 123 miles and the finish is in Quebec itself through crowds of thousands of fans, lining the streets and cheer on the victor.

Handsome cash prizes are awarded, but this year interest is much above the usual. St-Godard who has won the race four times in the last five years, has two legs on the Speed Cup and another win this year will give it to him permanently. Seppala has two legs on the Gold Cup for the best conditioned dog and stands to win it permanently this year. Prizes total $2,150 with a first prize of $800; second prize, $600; third prize, $300; then $200, $100, $75, $50 and $25 in that order. In addition there is the Gold Cup for the best conditioned dog and the Speed Cup awarded to the team making the fastest time for a lap during the three days of racing.

The event winds up with the Dog Derby Costume Ball held at the Chateau Frontenac, the Canadian Pacific's great hotel, on Wednesday, February 24 at which prizes and cups are awarded to the winners.

"It's Lucky you have a Telephone"

Jim Ross hadn't noticed the broken fence until his favorite roan mare got caught in the barbed wire and cut her leg.

It didn't seem a bad cut at first, but blood poisoning set in and Jim thought he was going to lose a valuable horse. A hurried telephone call brought the veterinary surgeon.

"I think we can save her, Jim," the veterinary said, "but another couple of hours might have been too late. It's lucky you have a telephone."

BREAKFAST

Breakfast used to be a family meal. In most homes nowadays, however, breakfast has become somewhat a hurried event every man for himself.

To some extent, this has come about because people live farther away from their work-places, and so more time is taken in transportation. As the hour when the different members of the family must leave to reach school or work varies, so the breakfast-hour varies.

A much more common explanation, however, is that, on account of late hours, people are not sufficiently rested when it is time to get up. They refuse to leave their beds until the last minute, and then take everything in a rush, including their breakfast.

In general, they will tell you that, this does not make any difference as they are not hungry in the morning, and that they would not eat much even if they had plenty of time to spare.

We do not enjoy food when we are tired, and so the person who does not secure sufficient sleep, quite naturally, is not particularly interested in breakfast. The person who has been out the previous evening and who has indulged in refreshments or has eaten before retiring finds that his appetite for breakfast is lost.

The person who enjoys his breakfast is the one who feels rested when he rises, who has not loaded his stomach before retiring, who has time to wash and dress, and can then sit down quietly to a meal that is properly prepared and served.

What we should eat for breakfast depends largely upon what we eat at our other meals. We should consume, during the day, a pint of milk, some green vegetable, fruit and, generally, one egg. Cereal, meat, potatoes, and butter are used by most people; it is milk, green vegetables and fruits which are most apt to be lacking in the diet.

If the luncheon is to be a light one, naturally a more hearty breakfast will be eaten. For the indoor worker, who is not engaged in manual work, a good breakfast is one that consists of fruit, whole-wheat, toast and milk or cocoa or coffee. If his luncheon is a light meal, then he may add a whole-grain cereal or an egg to his breakfast.

The manual worker uses up more energy and so requires more food. The breakfast must be adapted to meet this extra demand, and the food eaten at the other meals must also be taken into consideration.

Starting out on the day's work with an empty stomach, or on a hurriedly swallowed meal, is a bad beginning for the day. Strength and health are sacrificed by such habits, and it is not an adequate preparation for the day's work.

The breakfast should not be unsatisfactory or unsatisfactory any more than are the other meals. Breakfast should not be hurried or unplanned; it should contribute its parts to the healthy upkeep of the body and to maintaining the individual's working capacity at its best.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Charged With Receiving Stolen Coal

In connection with the mysterious disappearance of large quantities of coal from cars on the C.P.R. sidings here, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Wilson, of this village, were served with summonses by Constables E. J. Rutledge charging them with receiving stolen goods.

The charges were laid following investigation by Constable Rutledge and Inspectors Ramsay and Corbett, of the C.P.R. Police, which revealed some of the alleged stolen goods stored in their cellar. The Wilson home adjoins the tracks and both Mr. and Mrs. Wilson told the police that the coal had been thrown over the fence by thieves and that they had subsequently removed it to their cellar.

The police state that some fifty tons of coal have systematically disappeared from coal cars on the sidings during the past six weeks. The quantity found in the Wilson home is stated to be but a small part of the missing load and further investigation is under way.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Our American Friends.

The Scouts of the United States have just celebrated their twenty-second birthday, and we join with other members of the World Wide Brotherhood in congratulating them on the splendid work which they have accomplished during that time.

The Boy Scouts of America were organized in 1910 by the late William D. Boyce and the story is told that he was in London, England, one foggy winter day and managed to get lost in the thick fog for which London is so famed.

He met a boy and asked to be directed to his hotel, but the boy volunteered to take him there, having been brought up in the metropolis and knowing every landmark and street.

On arrival at the hotel Mr. Boyce proceeded to hand a "tip" to his guide, who refused it stating that he was a Scout and could not accept rewards for his Good Turn. Mr. Boyce was so surprised to find a boy who would not accept a tip that he started to enquire who these BOY SCOUTS could be . When he learned all about our movement, he was so impressed that he brought the idea back to the United States and organized the Boy Scouts of America in that country.

A few years later the same gentleman was responsible for the organization of the Lone Scouts of America, whose activities are similar to those of the Lone Scouts of Canada.

Lone Scouts of Saskatchewan

We are very glad indeed to notice that arrangements have been made for a Lone Scout Column to appear in the "Saskatoon Star-Phoenix" in a similar way that this column is published week by week, to stimulate the interest of the Lone Scouts who live in the country districts of Saskatchewan and who are even more scattered than the Ontario Lonies.

Greetings to the Lonies

"Lone E" recently was invited to attend the Parents Night of the 99th Toronto Troop. One of the items on the programme was an imitation "Camp Fire Scene". The Scoutmaster asked "Lone E" to say a few words, and he told the boys and their parents all about the Lonies and their activities and the splendid work that they are doing. The 99th Troop were very interested and asked "Lone E" to give their very best wishes and Scouty regards to all the Lone Scouts of Ontario. So here they are, Lonies!

Birthday Greetings

The Lone Scouts of Ontario join with all Scouts the World over in wishing "Many Happy Returns" to our Chief Scout, Lord Baden Powell, who celebrates his 75th birthday on the 22nd February.

How Scouting Helps "Goodwill to All Men"

Most of you know the difficulty which is now being experienced in India, and you have also no doubt read of the difficult caste system which forbids a member of one Hindu Caste to be in any way intimate with one of another caste. You may also have heard that there is no love lost between the Hindus and the Mohammedans in that country.

Therefore the news that Boy Scouts from the Government High School at Kahror-Pacca, Punjab, India went to the assistance of a colony of "outcasts" whose huts caught fire is of great interest. Although they had to carry water from a well some distance away they soon got the fire under control, and a small girl was daringly rescued from one of the flaming huts. The Scouts included Hindus of all castes, Mahommedans and Sikhs, and the most remarkable thing of all is that the "outcasts" in India are the lowest possible class in the social scale, who perform the most degrading menial tasks and who are looked down upon by all other Indians. But although others might have left them to cope with their own troubles, the Boy Scouts forgot all about creeds and castes and went to their assistance in a manner of which we are proud.

Are You a Scout?

If you live in a small town where there is no Scout Troop, or on a Rural Route too far away from the nearest Troop, perhaps you would still like to be a Scout? Why not be a Lone Scout? If you are between the ages of 12 and 18 inclusive, and would like further particulars write to the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

We shall be glad to hear from you.

"LONE E"

Canadian Team in the Thick of the Fight

This end of the rink was the liveliest, when Canada conquered the German puck-chasers 4 to 1. The German lads were clever with their sticks, but the Canucks proved too much for them.

The Legislature In Brief

With the usual pomp and ceremony the Ontario Legislature got under way last week, and the main item of business was the speech from the Throne which was delivered by Sir William Mulock, Chief Justice of Ontario.

A modified moratorium on mortgages was one of the main items brought out in the speech, under which all proposed foreclosures will be heard before a County Judge who will have all power to decide whether additional time is to be allowed on either principal or interest payments.

Legislation will also be introduced for the amending of the Old Age Pension Act under which the Federal Government has to pay seventy per cent. of the total, which it is claimed will mean an annual saving of one million four hundred thousand dollars to the province and nine hundred thousand dollars to the municipalities.

Another measure to be introduced is the proposed amalgamation of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board with the Bureau of Municipal Research, under which powers will be granted the Board to govern finances of those municipalities which are insolvent or in a precarious financial condition.

It was also pointed out in the speech from the Throne that while agricultural production was maintained at a high level the financial return was much below normal. The new Ontario Marketing Board has organized the Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Markets Board and is giving special attention to grading and marketing several important farm products.

With regard to Hydro, it was pointed out that in the rural parts of the province the demand for power called for the construction of over twelve hundred miles of new transmission lines to supply nearly nine thousand additional consumers, and that by utilizing the flow of the Ottawa River at Chats Falls an important addition, second only in extent to the great Niagara development, has been made in generating facilities.

Two hundred miles have been added to the Ontario Highway system, while payments have been made by the Province to the Municipalities for road purposes of nearly seven million dollars.

The only charm some men possess is attached to their watch chain.

"Howdy, old man! Have you recovered from your accident?"

"No, not fully."

"Why, you look as well as ever."

Reminiscences

Some years ago Arnold Bennett and his wife—a charming Frenchwoman—had their portraits painted separately, by a "modern painter." The day came when the pictures were on view in their London house. The event was celebrated by Bennett coming home for tea—tea for two. Quite an event, for he rarely had lunch or tea at home at the time.

"I remember having a good tea for him," recalls Mrs. Bennett (in her intimate book "My Arnold Bennett"). "and I was looking forward to the joy of pouring out tea for him.

* * * *

"He came and sat in a seat facing the mantelpiece. His portrait was hanging on the wall by his right side, and mine was placed on the floor against the wall on his left side. While having tea Arnold was very silent and his eyes were looking alternately at the two portraits. He remained looking in silence while drinking his tea. At the end of the half-hour he had for his tea, he looked once more at both portraits; then, fixing his eyes on his, he said, 'I don't care what they say, I am a nice man!'

"I am sure that he did not like his portrait," adds Mrs. Bennett, naively.

* * * *

Arnold Bennett—like Kipling—had a passion for punctuality. A year before he met his wife—Marie Marguerite Hebrard, a Parisienne—he surprised his friends by telling them that he was engaged to an American girl. He did not marry her.

"She was never on time. I could not stick it," he later explained to Mrs. Bennett.

"He emphasized to me that it was a good thing for her he had given her up," says Mrs. Bennett, "for she married another man far better suited to her than he himself was."

* * * *

Like the wife of Joseph Conrad who rescued many of her husband's original manuscripts from the waste basket where he had thrown them as valueless—they were afterwards sold for a goodly sum—Mrs. Arnold Bennett retrieved from a similar receptacle "the manuscripts of articles, even of a book just published," written by her husband. She admired his handwriting and was interested in his hobby of classic caligraphy. Discovering this, Bennett arranegd a surprise for her.

Just before he began his best known story, "The Old Wives' Tale," he told her he had decided to write it in printed characters, so that she might have it.

"I could scarcely believe it possible," Mrs. Bennett says. "But what he said he would do he did. He had the tremendous patience, energy and capacity to carry it through the whole book, which is very long, nearly seven hundred pages.

"He would say, at times, 'I wish to the deuce I had never started doing it that way. It has to be done, hard as it is!' He stuck to it."

The book took him exactly eight months to write.

* * * *

Not long after he was married, in Paris, Arnold Bennett took his French bride over to England to visit his relatives in the Five Towns. There they were much entertained. At one big dinner party at Stoke-on-Trent Town Hall, Bennett was called on for a speech. The more he declined, the more insistent became the demand. Mrs. Bennett was on pins and needles, for she knew that under stress of emotion her husband stammered. However, up he got and, taking a fountain pen out of his pocket, and showing it to the company, he said, "Ladies and Gentleman, I don't speak, I write," and sat down.

* * * *

Speaking of stammering recalls a story told by Ford Madox Ford (in his reminiscences "Return to Yesterday"). During the World War, Ford, returning home from the front on leave, got into a railway carriage in which a South African soldier and a civilian were seated. Suddenly the South African turned on the civilian and exclaimed:

"You ought to join up too: a lusty young man like you. Why aren't you in khaki?"

* * * *

The young man rolled agonized dark eyes and exclaimed:

"I'm a P-P-P-P," grasping at his throat in the struggle of a hopeless stutterer.

"I don't care what you are," the South African shouted. "You may be a Pacifist, or a Papa, or a Potato-grower, but your king and country need you."

The civilian repeated:

"I'm a P-P-P-P."

* * * *

They continued like that until a stop at which the South African got out.

* * * *

"The other turned to me," chuckles Ford, "and, with all the signs of agony and an explosion of P's like the unsilenced exhaust of a motor bicycle, at last brought out:

"'I'm a Peruvian!'

"It appeared that, being a neutral, he had come to England to take a course in modern English Literature at London University.

* * * *

Most of us have opened a letter that did not belong to us and have suffered more or less embarrassment as a consequence, but hark to this confession by Ford Madox Ford:

"I was going through my morning letters half asleep in bed," he says "when I became aware that I was reading something of singular delicacy and was—when I came to look at the envelope—addressed by a lady I knew well to a man who had just been stopping with me.

* * * *

"I don't know what I ought to have done but know what I did. I went half an hour later by train up to London"—Ford was living at Winchelsea, some sixty miles from London. "I got some envelopes to match the one I had opened. Then, at one of my clubs I imitated the address of that letter on those envelopes. I managed at last a fair likeness. Then I posted the letter to my own house in that envelope. I had thus the London postmark. Then I returned to Winchelsea, and, as soon as the letter arrived, I forwarded it to the addressee."

Frank Harris gives an amusing account of Bernard Shaw's wedding to Miss Charlotte Payne Townsend—in his biography of G. B. S.—which he says was given to him by Shaw himself. The marriage took place at the West Strand (London) Registrar's office on June 1, 1898. Shaw was on crutches—recovering from an accident—and "wearing a jacket which he swears his crutches had worn to rags in the armpits. Graham Wallas and Henry Salt acted as witnesses."

Jerusalem Census Segregates Different Race of Population

Jerusalem.—The provisional list of totals of the urban population of Palestine, published by the Superintendent of Census, shows the Jews to be in the majority in Jerusalem, where they number 51,416 out of a total of 90,407. The Christians have yielded second place, which they held in the 1922 census, to the Moslems of Jerusalem, who now number 19,735 as compared with 19,180 Christians. Six towns—Nazareth, Bethlehem, Shafa Amr, Beit, Jala, Tel Aviv and Ramallah—have more Christians than Moslems. With these exceptions, all towns in the country show a clear Moslem majority, in most cases more than the combined numbers of the two other faiths.

Latest Notes of Science

New Supply Sources — How Infinitesimal is Measured

The tremor that shook Santiago de Cuba recently draws attention to a region of the earth nearly as unstable as Japan. A seismological world survey has shown that quakes are associated with the deeper parts of the oceans or with land regions that were once the bottoms of deep seas. What is known as the West Indian Deep has been an especially prolific producer of earthquike and volcanic disturbances. For this reason the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey maintains a seismological station at San Juan, Porto Rico, one of a string of stations extending most of the way from Maine southward.

Earthquakes are evidence that mountains are still being formed. Just what the rocess is, science is still unable to explain with certainty. It was formerly supposed that as the earth cooled and shrank eons ago it puckered and produced such ranges as the Andes, Rockies and Himalayas. That theory is now regarded as inadequate. The earth is cool, but mountain building goes on.

The Santiago quake comes at a time when an international scientific expedition finds itself in the West Indies for the express purpose of studying the creation of mountains and hence of earthquakes. At the head of the expedition is Professor Richard H. Field of Prin eton. Associated with him are distinguished physicists and geologists from the universities of Glasgow and Cambridge, scientists from the governmental staffs of the United States and Canada, and Dr. F. A. Vening Meinesz of Holland, an expert on the measurement of gravity.

The Santiago disturbance seems to have been arranged almost to suit the convenience of these specialists. When they return they will probably give us one of the most valuable critical studies of what happens when the earth shrugs her shoulders, as it were, and assumes a slightly different posture.

THE GROUNDHOG AND HIS SHADOW

When Feb. 2 came the old groundhog superstition received its annual meed of attention. That the creature, otherwise known as the wood chuck, should look for its shadow on Candlemas (Feb. 2) and, if it sees it, return to its hole, convinced that there will be six more weeks of Winter, is a belief hoary with age.

Students of folklore trace the groundhog proverb back to Germany, where any hibernating animal, preferably the badger or the bear, looks for his shadow on Candlemas. Since Candlemas was feast day with the Romans long before the Christian era, we see how hard it is to uproot old beliefs.

Some two years ago J. O. Frank of the Wisconsin State Teachers' College made a study of weather superstitions among school children in the Fox River Valley, Wis. Although this is the twentieth century and there is an active Weather Bureau, Mr. Frank found that country people still believe not only in the groundhog's powers of forecasting, but also that rain is sure to follow if a dog or a cat eats grass, if a snake dies on its back, or if a toad or a spider is killed. Heavy fur on animals, thick husks on corn, exceptionally heavy walls on muskrat houses—these, too, are supposed to indicate a hard winter. Dr. C. C. Abbott of the Smithsonian Institution tested the muskrat-house theory over a series of winters and found it sadly wanting.

CORTEZ EXTRACT FOR FATIGUE.

Ever since codfish swam in the sea mothers have been feeding their babies with codliver oil. Why? Modern science answers in terms of rickets and vitamin D. Rickets is warded off by the vitamin. And the codliver oil contains the vitamin. How did the mothers know it?

There has been a similar superstition about the flesh cut from various parts of an animal. Ancient warriors were convinced that they maintained and increased their fighting powers by eating kidneys and the meat that lies near them. Why? They knew nothing about hormones. Yet their belief is now justified in the light of recent studies which have been made of the adrenal glands. We still speak of a man of "kidney"—and with reason.

The adrenals are about as big as a fifth finger each and lie near the kidneys of all higher animals. From the outer skin or cortex hormones are extracted called corticin. These have properties little short of miraculous. What these properties are has been disclosed by Drs. Hartmann, Swingle and others in curing Addison's disease, usually regarded as fatal.

New light is thrown on this cortex extract by Drs. S. W. Briton and E. L. Corey of the University of Virginia's Medical School. They have shown that corticin makes more chemical fuel available through the blood stream.

Cortex extracts speed up the bodily functions. After having received small doses young rats become mature in one-third the usual time. If the results obtained apply to human beings, children of 5 would be able to become fathers and mothers.

Cortex extract is a restorative. Drs. Britton and Corey found that dogs that tire after an hour's exercise on a treadmill will run two and three times as long after a dose of the extract.

There is every reason to believe that the extract will ultimately be prescribed by physicians in cases of excessive muscular fatigue, depression and possibly overwork.

Before man can be thus converted into a superman the organic chemist must devise a cheap, effective way of extracting hormones from the adrenal cortex or of producing them synthetically. At present it takes a fortnight and the adrenals of about 300 cows to make a teaspoonful of extract. A dose is therefore worth some thousands of dollars.—Waldemar Kaempffert in N.Y. Times.

Britain To Buy Canadian Timber

London.—According to The Shipping World, a situation has developed favoring a profitable deal with Canada whereby Great Britain would exchange British coal for Canadian wood.

The trade publication says: "A timber merchants' group in London which has been buying soft wood from Russia has decided in the interests of Imperial preference to abandon this year's contract for 450,000 standards.

"It is therefore necessary to negotiate the purchase of this large quantity of timber from some other source. It is understood it is intended to place the order in Canada.

"It is hoped an agreement may be made to the advantage of the British coal industry as well as of the shipowners. Large expansion of British coal exports to Canada is possible and as British coal-owners, assisted by depreciation of the pound sterling, can now successfully compete with United States in price, there is no reason why this exchange of commodities should not be effected to the advantage of both countries.

"As far as this year's trade is concerned," says the publication, "contracts cannot wait for the Imperial Conference to be held at Ottawa in July. Prompt action is necessary."

How to play Bridge
AUCTION and CONTRACT
by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 1.

Problem

Hearts—A, 7, 6, 5
Clubs—A, Q, 10
Diamonds—K, 5
Spades—none

Hearts—K, Q, J, 1 Clubs—K, J, 9 Diamonds—none Spades—9	Y A B Z	Hearts—4, 3 Clubs—none Diamonds—Q, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6 Spades—10

Hearts—2
Clubs—5, 4, 2, 2
Diamonds—J, 3
Spades—J, 8

If spades are trumps and Z is in the lead, how can Y Z win eight of the nine tricks against any defense?

Solution in the next article.

Contract, as the name implies, allows the player to score towards game only the number of tricks he has bid. For example, if a player bids two spades and makes four, he can only score two, the number bid, and the remaining two tricks are scored in his honor column at 50 per trick. This rule makes it necessary for players to bid for game on every hand, whether their opponents overbid or not, provided, of course, these hands warrant a try for game.

As a result, there are no "dead" hands at Contract where one player, for example, bids one heart and all pass, as occurs very frequently at Auction. When one side holds all the cards there is bound to be plenty of action whether opponents bid or not. The lucky side must bid for game if they want it and once they feel sure of game, they have the still further incentive of trying for "slams." At Contract a little slam, if bid and made, scores 500 points if not vulnerable and 750 points if vulnerable and a big slam, if bid and made, scores 1000 points if not vulnerable and 1500 points if vulnerable. As a result of these large premiums, the effort to bid and make slams offers one of the exciting features of Contract.

In the regular game of Auction you may take a chance now and then with a weak bid. It costs very little but in Contract you'll find it very expensive. For instance, in Contract you bid one no trump with just an ordinary thin no trumper. What will happen? If second hand passes, your partner may have good help for a good no trumper. Your partner will of course bid you up. He may be justified in bidding three no trumps. Think of the wallop you'll get if it's doubled. You have no place to go, and oh, boy, wallops in Contract count heavily against you.

It's the ambition of all Auction and Contract players to become experts, but it is really surprising how little real work they are willing to do to accomplish this result. There are probably ten million people in the country to-day who play Auction or Contract and yet not five per cent. of them ever buy a book on either game and, if they do, it usually is placed carefully in the bookcase and never opened.

But if you will not read a book on the game, you will derive much benefit from a study of the various hands that are analyzed in these articles and, if you keep at it, you are bound to improve your game; and if you learn to play a little better than your associates, you will win, even without the aces and kings. As one player described the game of a well-known expert: "The boy certainly knows how to play 'em. He don't get much to work with, but he can sure make sevens and eights act like kings and queens."

We cannot all be experts but we can certainly improve our game; and one of the best ways to do so is to study over the analysis of the test hands given in these articles. Every one of such hands will bring up points of play or bidding that, if properly understood, will be invaluable. These hands have all been submitted to the writer for analysis and came up in actual play. Study them over and make up your mind as to the correct bid or play in each instance. When the analysis is given, compare your opinion with the writer's and, if there is any difference, think it over and then adapt yourself and your game accordingly. Handled in this way, test hands will prove invaluable.

There is one point in the play of a hand that some of the good players don't always follow, and yet is generally a consistent winner. When the declarer has won the declaration at a suit and you have four or more trumps, open your long suit. With four or more trumps there is always a possibility of being able to establish your long suit and break up the declarer's hand by forcing him to trump your established suit. For example, hearts are trumps and your holding is as follows:

Hearts—Q, 9, 6, 5
Clubs—A, K, 7, 6, 5
Diamonds—Q, 6, 2
Spades—10

With such a hand, it is much better to open the club suit than to lead the singleton spade. Suppose you have bid clubs and your partner has supported the bid. You lead the suit and the declarer is forced to trump. Even if he has six hearts, he can only lead two rounds of trumps. If he leads three rounds, you can win the third round with the queen and force him to trump again.

Then it takes his last trump to draw yours and, if your partner can take a trick in the other suits, the declarer cannot score game. If the declarer has only five trumps but great strength in your singleton suit, the lead of your strong suit would beat him, but the lead of your singleton up to his strong suit would give him an advantage that would enable him to score game. The singleton lead is always a gamble and is seldom a winning play, unless holding three trumps. With a strong suit and four trumps, the long suit lead is much the better. Watch this play and, when you understand the theory of it, you will be a much better player.

They were discussing dogs, and the tales were becoming "pretty tall" when one of the group took the lead. "Smith," he said, "had a most intelligent retriever. One night Smith's house caught fire. All was instant confusion. Old Smith and wife flew for the children and bundled out with them in quick order. Alas, one of them had been left behind. But up jumped the dog, rushed into the house, and soon reappeared with the missing child. Everyone was saved; but Rover dashed through the flames again. What did the dog want? No one knew. Presently the noble animal reappeared, scorched and burned, with —what do you think?"

A woman says she is troubled because her husband talks in his sleep—and mumbles so that she can't understand him. Gleeful Gladys says some women go right on chasing illusions at forty—by that time most of us are kept busy dodging disillusion. A woman seldom comes out of a sullen spell until she believes her husband has suffered as much as she thinks he should. Most of us try to put off everything except a good time. Foolishness is still foolishness, no matter how august may be the man who utters it. A lot of people don't care much what happens so long as it doesn't happen to them.

The time to start advertising is when the other fellow says: "Aw, there ain't no new business; let's cut down our appropriation." A large man never complains when joshed about his size, but the little man is sure to get sore if you call him a runt. No man is so handsome that he is good looking in a dirty shirt. A lot of "self-made" men would have fared much better had they let the contract to somebody else.

Radio Now Installed In Turkish Mosque

Istanbul, Turk.—For the first time in Islamic history a radio has been installed in a Turkish mosque. Choosing one of the most famous religious edifices in all Turkey, St. Sophia, for this innovation, Mustapha Kemal has directed that the radio services be chanted from the newly adopted Turkish Koran by 25 clergymen.

This is the second notable departure from ancient custom in religious service instituted by the progressive Turkish President this year. The Arabic Koran, always unintelligible as Latin to the layman, was replaced early last month in some Istanbul mosques by a Turkish translation. These innovations are in consummation of the Nationalist Government's aim of adapting the Islamic religion to the needs of modern Turkey.

1,600-Yr.-Old Jug Unearthed In Nebraska Cemetery

Butte, Neb.—A jug, believed to be at least 1,600 years old, was unearthed near here. It was hand-carved and once had been protected by a wicker frame. The discovery was made in what is thought to have been a cemetery of early Indian tribes. Pieces of pottery, flint arrow-heads, teeth and bones also were found.

The relics may have been the remains of a civilization of mound builders, it is believed. Specimens have been sent to anthropologists at the University of Nebraska.

Germany's Oldest Church Shows Date Block of 732

Siegen, Westphalia.—A stone bearing the date 732 has been found in the wall of the old church in Raumland, a small village on the Eder River, and research has established that the building was erected by St. Boniface. It is thus the oldest definitely dated Church in Germany, looking back this year on twelve centuries of existence.

Sun in Manhattan

At dawn the sun begins his daily work
To make the city cognizant of him.
He faces walls inflexible and grim,
They fling a joyless and defiant smirk.
He jumps to some tall building and his darts
Glance in great flashes from the glassy quartz;
Another building catches these gay gleams
Annd throws back jauntily its onyx beams.
Thus is the light sent out and caught again
Till all the upper spires are lit, and then
With darkness hiding in his last retreat,
The searchlight of the sun sweeps down the street;
He climbs across the buildings, and below
In sunny garments men and women go!

Japan and Manchuria

Economist (London): Time, in the second chapter of the Manchurian story, shows signs of changing sides. From the seizure of Mukden on September 19 down to the completion of the Japanese occupation of Manchuria last week, time worked in Japan's favour. While the League Council wavered, the Japanese Army carried out its operations swiftly according to plan. Now that the plan has been executed, the Japanese are faced with the new problem of holding what they have taken; and now time may begin to work on the side of the Chinese guerillas, to whose favourite method of warfare the Japanese have exposed themselves by the enormous lengthening of their lines of communication. We do not believe that the Japanese Army will succeed in clearing Manchuria of brigands within three months or within many times that period. And meanwhile the Nine-Power Treaty and the Kellogg Pact will be working, impalpably but potently, upon the public opinion of the world to Japan's undoing. We have not seen the end of this Japanese adventure.

GOING UPSTAIRS WAS AGONY
Hobbling With Rheumatism
ALTHOUGH NOT YET 30

For a dramatic picture of the deforming and disabling effects of acute rheumatism, read this lady's letter. She had often looked at Kruschen advertisements and laughed—little dreaming that she herself would soon be joining in the chorus of praise for "the little daily dose."

"I suffered agonies with Rheumatism. The doctor said he had never known a woman under 30 to get Rheumatism like I had it. I was so bad I could only get upstairs by sitting on each stair, until I had pluck enough to pull myself up to the next one. My hands and feet were so swollen that they looked uncanny, and neighbours used to watch me hobble round and say how awful I looked. I had often laughed at the Kruschen advertisements, but thought, as I had given almost everything else a trial, I might as well give Kruschen a trial. I did so, and will always say I consider them wonderful. I take half-a-teaspoonful of Kruschen every morning. Now I can run upstairs. Yet I have taken Kruschen Salts for two months only."—Mrs. R. F.

The system of the rheumatic subject is a producer of that dangerous body poison known as uric acid, which is composed of knife-edged crystals. It is bred in accumulated waste matter which the organs of elimination have failed to expel. Kruschen is a powerful solvent of these flint-hard crystals. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside; knotted joints become loose.

Better still, Kruschen eliminates the root cause of the evil. Taken regularly, it keeps your liver and kidneys in perfect tune, so that these eliminating organs free your inside from all poison-breeding waste products.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

Castoria made especially for CHILDREN

CHILDREN usually hate to take medicine but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And mothers like its action—so gentle, yet so prompt and effective.

Castoria is a never-failing comfort to children and mothers alike because it was formulated expressly for children—to correct their little ills and upsets.

The beauty of it is you can give Castoria to children of all ages with equally sure results. When baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed; and free from pain, he is asleep again in a jiffy.

In an older child when coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, a more liberal dose is usually all that is needed to cleanse and regulate the bowels.

Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your children are grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a child in his teens.

RESOLUTIONS

Passed by the Vestry of Holy Trinity Church, Welland

Ven. Archdeacon Perry

This meeting of the Vestry of Holy Trinity Church, Welland desires to place on record its deep appreciation of the great loss we have sustained due to the unexpected decease of our late highly esteemed rector, the Venerable Archdeacon Perry, D.D., whose constant and earnest devotion to his every duty was daily apparent not only to all our own parishioners but also to the entire communit as well.

His sympathetic and generous attention to the sick, his love of children his helpful, intelligent guidance of our large and promising sunday school his unflagging interest in all the schools of the city, his attractive rendering of the beautiful services of our Church, his scholarly appealing sermons, his courteous, gentlemanly bearing at all times, the high esteem in which he was held by his brother clergy—men of all denominations, the valuable contribution he made to the work of the synods and the diocese generally, all these helped to make him conspicuously prominent in church work throughout all Canada.

The loss to the Church and the whole community is large indeed. We wish to convey to his family our heartfelt sympathy.

His life work, well and faithfully done, at the close of a happy Christmas Day, in the midst of his family, without a struggle or a moment's warning he slipped peacefully and silently away to the Great Beyond.

God touched him with His finger and he slept.

Druggist's Stock--Formerly 675 Items Now Averages About 7000 Plus

Away back in 1775, the well-stocked drug store carried approximately 675 different items, and all of them were either remedies or articles confined to the medical field.

Today you can walk into a modern drug store and buy any of 7,000 articles ranging from spectacles to fishing tackle and books to watches. How did the drug store get that way?

Dr. Logan Clendenning, a medical writer, who set out to find the answer, believes that the humble postage stamp was the germ of it all. The public found it needed postage stamps at all times and all hours—and only the drug store was open.

"A number of factors have influenced the development of the pharmacy into a general store," says Dr. Clendenning. "The most important undoubtly, was the long hours which the druggist was under obligation to keep. All the other stores shut at say, 6 o'clock, but he had to keep open because people might need medicine at any hour.

"As the drug store was open when other shops were closed people got into the habit of dropping in at all hours to ask for this article and that —especially stamps. What was more natural than that the store should put in a supply of articles asked for?

"The samp question is really the crux of the whole development. The time was when druggists wailed about the imposition practiced upon them in the matter of stamp purchases. Nothing could have been more short-sighted."

Experts See No Future for Hemp Production

Hemp, once a profitable crop in this country, has dwindled in importance, and the vehicle through which it has lost its market was the principal market in former years. It is estimated that in the early Colonial days it took the product of 1,000 acres of hemp to make the ropes necessary to outfit a single sailing vessel of any size.

Now ships bring jute from India and this importation, due to its much lower price, has driven hemp from the market to a large extent. In spite of this loss of market, glowing pictures of prosperity to be had from hemp growing are painted for farmers who have had no experience with the crop. Agents with something to sell have induced many farmers to attempt crops, but little hope of success is held out by Department of Agriculture officials, who point out that by no means is the general run of land suitable for hemp production. Even if it were, there still remains the fact that the demand for hemp is more than filled by present sources, with the result that the prices are too low to make a crop an attractive proposition financially for the grower.—Washington Star.

Iguassu Falls One of Wonders of the World

The Iguassu falls of Brazil are said to be the most wonderful in the world. In the Wide World Magazine R. Halliburton writes: "Half a mile away a vast mass of water seemed to flow forth from the sky. It was a river, which, after wandering quietly through the forests of Brazil, had come at length to the edge of a great plateau. There it girds itself for a grand climax to its career—a climax so spectacular that no one who sees can ever forget that this river surpasses all others in the sublime beauty of its passing, leaving behind one of the wonders of the world. With one mighty charge along a front 10,000 feet in length it hurls over the brink, in superb 200 foot cataracts of foam. Niagara may have greater volume, Victoria greater height, but for artistry and coloring Iguassu stands alone."

Historic Eastern Spot

Shimoda, on the eastern coast of the Izu peninsula, came into the American spotlight in the middle of the last century, when a treaty was ratified there which first opened Japan to foreign trade.

In 1853 Capt. Matthew Galbraith Perry, United States navy, sailed up the bay of Sagami to Shimoda, went ashore with 300 men and delivered letters from President Fillmore to a representative of the Japanese emperor. In the spring of 1855 the first treaty between America and Japan, providing, among other things, for the opening of Shimoda to American trading vessels, was proclaimed.

America's first diplomatic representative to Japan resided at Shimoda. It was a tidal wave and earthquake that caused the diplomatic offices to be removed from Shimoda to Yokohama in 1859.

Pretty Indian Legend

The custom of sacrificing a beautiful maiden by sending her over Niagara falls in a canoe was practiced by the Indian tribes about the falls. The maiden selected paddled a white canoe, filled with fruits and flowers, over the falls. It was counted a great honor to be chosen as the sacrificial victim. Once the only daughter of a Seneca chief was selected by the gathered tribes. Her father loved her dearly, yet he showed no sign of grief. The revels continued during the whole day, and when night came and the moon rose the girl paddled her canoe toward the falls, amidst much tumult and shouting. Suddenly another white canoe darted from the opposite bank. It contained the chief, her father; the canoes met, and together they went to their death over the falls.

English Official Mark

The "broad arrow," used as a distinguishing mark on British government property, was the "cognizance" or heraldic symbol of Henry, Viscount Sidney, who was master-general of the ordnance from 1693 to 1703, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. In time it came to be used by other government departments besides the ordnance board (now the war office), with which it first was associated. Curiously enough, the "broad arrow" was a symbol of power and authority among the ancient Druids. It is felony to obliterate this official mark.

Not a Major Crime

A soldier walked rapidly from a railroad train in London, gazing nervously down at a suitcase he carried. A railway detective looked at him for a moment and then leaped in pursuit. Blood was dropping from the bag. A few days later the soldier was found guilty by court-martial. The charge was stealing six pounds of fresh meat from the company kitchen.

Careless Pedestrians

In Nuremberg they seem to have hit upon a plan which secures some lasting results. Any person who drops a paper or an empty cigarette box in the street is liable to a fine of one mark. A watchful policeman steps up, names the offense, collects the quarter and hands over an official receipt for it. The streets of Nuremberg are astonishingly free from litter.

Cause of Depression

A discussion on the present state of affairs took place in a Toronto Township farm home the other day and many good points were brought out. It was admitted that things were in bad shape; that half the farmers' credit was no good, some places were not able to pay teachers salaries; the list of unpaid municipal taxes was growing; Toronto Twp was $165,000 behind, Chinguacousy $40,000 and other places in Peel in proportion. Taxes must be paid though, they are a first charge against the land, and come ahead of a mortgage, Government loan or anything else. One kind of citizen who is 'up against it' is the man who has sold his farm and is depending on the buyer paying his interest and principal. If the buyer cannot make the farm pay how is the man who sold the farm going to get his money? Then what about the price of milk? The farmer suffers every time. There is too much spread between the producer and the dealer —if prices of things the farmer sells go any lower the farmer won't be able to carry on. The remedy for the present conditions, according to some, would be another world war —but we hope that will never be— for is it not true that the present depression is a result of the Great World War of 1914—18?

The milk producer to day gets $1.45 per 100 lbs., he pays 25c per cwt. to deliver to the city, which leaves him only $1 20 net., and its not enough.

One cause of the depression is that some men want too high wages and because they can't get what they ask, they won't work, and the country has to provide relief.

When the people of any country lose the spirit of independence then that country goes behind.

Another thing to remember is— the young men of to-day are getting too much 'book' education, and not enough of the practical kind.

And last of all, one thing that is causing hard times is the credit system. When people can buy on credit, they never think of pay day but it always comes, and sooner or later, they are financially embarrassed. The curse of any country is its credit system.

February

Men name thee in the lowland Scottish tongue
Auld Fill-the-Dyke, and pay thee scorn and hate
For thy cold showers and rivers loud in spate,
Forgetting that the ewes are quick with young
Upon the hills where last year's larks have sung,
That buds appear, and fronds in embryo state
Within the earth lie folded, there to wait
The changes of the sun by April rung.

O blind, blind, blind are men in seasons cold.
Complaining: there be naught but pain around,
And bestial our love's worn body lies.
O tell them, youth emerges from the old
As from her pyre with clap of brilliant sound
A phoenix springs into the light-filled skies!

SON OF THE GODS

BY REX BEACH

SYNOPSIS.

When Lee Ying, a prosperous Chinese merchant of San Francisco, announces that a son has arrived at his home, only Officer Dunne knows that the child is really a white foundling. Sam Lee attends Eastern College and finds a social barrier on account of his supposed Chinese blood. Several attempts by blackmailers fail, but succeed in getting Sam expelled from college.

He goes abroad where he meets Alanna Wagner, California heiress. They fall in love, but when Alanna learns that Sam is Chinese she publicly horsewhips him. Lee Ying dies before Sam arrives home. Embittered, he adopts the ways of the Orient. Alanna returns to New York and apologizes to Sam, but they both realize further meetings are impossible. Alice Hart, former Eastern student, tries to victimize Sam.

"Anyhow she consents to become my wife."

"She does more than consent. She demands."

"Very well. I'll marry her. Promise her that she shall be the proud mistress of my three-roofed house, that she shall wear robes spun from shimmering moonlight and eat delicate foods from the thinnest of imperial porcelain bowls. A hundred docile servants shall bow to her— But no, my ardor runs away with me. Tell her merely to come and see me, so that my heart may speak its own message."

"Come here?" The attorney looked incredulous.

"Oh, the illustrious Himes may come with her! He should do so. He's the one to discuss the wedding arrangements, the bridal settlements and such things. A quaint and amusing custom, isn't it?"

Mr. Carter left in a good deal of a huff.

Sam's message, as relayed by his attorney, was not wholly pleasing to Everett Himes, but Carter declined to do more than repeat his client's demand, so an appointment was finally arranged and on the afternoon set Alice and her companion appeared.

Miss Hart, who was under a high nervous strain, rose and peered furtively through the half-open door, then she motioned to Himes. Sam Lee was sprawled on a couch at the far end of the room. He was in a magnificently embroidered robe and one languid arm was around the waist of a shiny-headed Chinese girl. Another girl, who held a thin-necked stringed instrument in her hands, sat cross-legged on a cushion: both were in loose Oriental jackets and pajama-like trousers, both were giggling and tittering. The visitors retreated noiselessly to their chairs.

Moy returned, he bowed them into his master's presence. Sam Lee had risen from the couch and he invited them to be seated. He took Alice's hand and kissed it, he ran his gaze over her and in a voice unnaturally thick and queerly disconcerting he began a ceremonial speech of greeting. The two Chinese girls had retreated across the room and were pretending to look out of a window into the roof garden. They stole occasional glances over their shoulders, clung nervously to each other and exchanged embarrassed giggles.

Alice noticed something else, too. On a tabouret beside the couch was a queerly shaped pipe, a peanut-oil lamp and other articles which evidently went with them. An opium layout! The fellow was drugged. That accounted for his behavior, for his heavy-lidded eyes.

Everett Himes was speaking now, he and Sam were saying something about that Stevens girl, but there was no rancor in their voices. Good heavens, how Chinese Sam had become! And what a change in this place since that night long ago.

Himes asserted gruffly: "What is it yes or no? You asked her to marry you—am I right? . . . She wants to know what you propose to do about it."

"I have enough evidence to convince any court," the girl asserted.

"But why speak of courts, my dear? You long for me, I yearn for you. I bound forward with a shout. Marry you? Well, rather!"

Miss Hart had risen with a strangled cry, but Sam leaped forward and clutched at her.

"Let me go!" she gasped, and tried to shake him off.

"Never!" he drew her to him and his face was ablaze. "I'll marry you today, this hour—"

"Let her go, d'you hear?" It was Himes speaking, and he, too, had risen.

But Sam ignored him, hoarsely he ran on: "I'll smother you with jewels, with love."

Himes seized the half-demented youth and flung him aside.

Miss Hart had found her voice and hysterically she reviled him. Himes was storming at him too, but Sam only raved the louder. Alice ended the scene by suddenly turning and fleeing from the room. Himes followed her, cursing; he overtook her at the door to the steel stairway. She was sobbing and her knees shook, she cast terrified glances over her shoulder.

When the pair had gone, when that metal door had clanged shut behind them, Sam shouted to Moy, saying:

"Open the windows, quickly, and air this place out."

The sing-song girls, his "Oriental slaves," flung themselves upon the couch and rolled in convulsions of glee. They shrieked, they kicked, they hugged each other, and he joined in their laughter. One of them managed to gasp from the depths of the cushions:

"Oh, Mr. Lee, you're wonderful!"

"I surprised myself," he admitted.

"'Alice! I bound forward with a shout!' 'Posture girls!' He bought us in China. Wouldn't that slay you, Iris? Do you mind if we tell father and mother?"

"Of course not. It was nice of them to let you play in my little comedy. Burlesque, rather. I wonder that those people swallowed it!"

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Sam became a regular and an extravagant patron of the Oriental amusement places.

Entertainment was in full swing, excitement was high in the place on the Drive one night when Moy searched out his employer and found him on one of the upper floors. This was not Moy's night off and Sam was surprised to see him, but the Korean explained that he had been forced to come.

A gentleman had called up Sam's house on the telephone an hour or so before and had insisted upon speaking with him. The man was both uncomplimentary and unrefined. Moy had told him to go to hell.

After a lapse of time the person had appeared in the flesh; he had stormed into Sam's house, shattering its dignified repose with loud profanities and strident demands for immediate audience with the owner on a matter of life and death. He had finally given Moy a hundred-dollar bill and begged him immediately to lead the way to his employer. He was below at this instant.

Sam rose and went downstairs. In the ballroom staring with amazement and incredulity at the scene before him, stood Albert Wagner.

Wagner's face was haggard, it was bloodless; new lines had bitten into it. When Sam spoke to him he started: he mumbled a hoarse apology at intruding. His expression was one of mingled loathing and entreaty as he said:

"I've been looking all over—I've got to see you alone."

"I assume it must be terribly important or——"

"Alanna's sick. Terribly sick. She——" The speaker's voice failed him; the words stuck in his throat. "She's calling for you."

Sam closed his eyes. Through the blaring of horns, the din of frenzied voices, the scuffling of feet he heard Wagner imploring him: "Come with me! It—won't take long. Hurry, please, or—— I'm afraid she's—dying."

On legs that threatened to give way under him Sam followed the older man down and out into the street. A car was waiting and into this they hurried.

Sam inquired through numb lips, "What has happened? Why does she want to see me? What can I do?"

"She doesn't know she's calling for you. She's delirious. Rest assured I'd never have looked you up if it wasn't necessary!"

"Perhaps you'd better tell me what happened to her."

"I don't know, exactly. She's been hitting it up, running wild, for months. I couldn't do a thing with her. I just—worried. I suppose she wore out, burned up: anyhow she collapsed, all of a sudden. That was several days ago. I didn't think much of it at first. . . Oh, it has been hell, standing around, unable to do anything. I'm about all in. Of course I got the best doctors, and a couple of nurses. Some time yesterday—I think it was yesterday—she began—somehow your name popped into her mind. It stuck there. Not that it means anything—"

"I understand."

"Well, the nurses began to ask who Sam Lee was and if I couldn't get hold of him just to quiet her. She doesn't know what she's saying any more than a parrot; she hasn't mentioned your name in months. Not more than once or twice since we left Paradis. Anyhow the doctor seemed to think—I—I'm acting on his orders, see? He said he often had to humor people with brain fever, give 'em what they wanted."

For a while the two rode in a silence broken only by an occasional incoherency from the father and by his heavy breathing. "Tonight's the crisis. The doctor says—"

"So! You let it go as long as you dared."

Oblivious of Sam's words and his tone, Wagner talked on.

"—through till morning she'll be all right. Or if we could get her to rest; to quit muttering even for an hour or so. . . . They don't know who you are—the doctor and the nurses, I mean, and I didn't tell 'em—"

"Don't worry: I won't tell them, either. And you needn't fear that I'll presume when she recovers. I appreciate your embarrassment and I shall try not to add to it, either tonight or later."

A nurse met the two men as they entered the Wagner suite; she said there had been no change; she and the father left Sam alone. From the direction in which they had gone came a voice which the younger man did not at first recognize as Alanna's. It was throaty, flat, it droned along monotonously. Sam strained his ears but he could make out no words, all he could hear was an expressionless, unceasing rivulet of sound, the very quality of which affrighted him.

Anemia in Young Pigs

Little Pigs Wither up and Die or Become Very Unthrifty

Losses in little pigs, prior to the weaning age, is frequently due to anemia. The young pigs may thrive up to a certain age, usually about three weeks, and then start to wilt. They lose weight, hair becomes rough and staring, the skin loses the healthy pink color and becomes pale. This is first noticed in the ears. Diarrhoea is common and pneumonia is frequently associated disease. Pigs born in the late spring and summer, and get out on the soil and in the sun do not develop the disease. Anemia is a late autumn and winter disease due to iron deficiency. Indoor conditions induce the disease, in that such conditions keep the young pigs away from sun and soil. Young pigs that have access to sods, soil, ashes and mineral mixture, are less likely to develop the anemia condition, due to lack of iron, as they can obtain the very small quantity of iron needed from such materials. If you have experienced losses of young pigs while they were still on the sow, you are advised to read Ontario Department of Agriculture Special Bulletin, "Anemia in Sucking Pigs." The iron treatment and prevention methods are described therein.

Parlor Courting

A development of the times is the "back to the parlor" movement among young lovers. Instead of beauing a girl around to expensive "dates," the tendency now is to call on her at her home and spend the evening there dancing, playing games, visiting, listening to the radio and eating home made cake and what-have-you.

This may be hard on the entertainment industries but it is just as sure a road to the altar. It makes a young man think of home life and a girl looks her most charming in the soft lights of her parlor; and incidentally, when they do set up housekeeping, they have something saved to do it on. Few young men of to-day have salaries adequate to jazz rounds of yesterday—and perhaps all this is a blessing in disguise.

One advantage of entertaining the boy friend at home, is that the lady may invite him to call and not sit at home lonesomely waiting for him to ask her out. All this works appropriately with 1932—Leap Year.

Your Child's Eyes

Frequently the condition of a child's eyes account for his behavior—or misbehavior—which we find so difficult to understand. Eye trouble makes a child nervous, since he is under constant strain to see fully and to do what other children are doing and what is expected of him.

We blame the far-sighted child for being a disturbing element in the school room and for not loving his books. We do not realize that it is difficult for him to focus his eyesight upon close objects. It is hard for him to read and the strain and effort make him tired and nervous.

The near-sighted child, on the contrary, is the "book worm." His eyes can work best when focussed on the page near to him. He will not see the problems on the distant blackboard and will miss some of the instructions given there, but there is a reason.

These three troubles—cross eyes, far sight and near sight—are caused by defects in the structure of the eye. If corrected in early childhood it will save the child much trouble. These defects will grow more pronounced as the years go by, and will finally cause changes in the structure of the eye and will probably then become incurable. If your child's eyes are not right, consult a thoroughly competent occulist about them.

Add Gaiety

Break the monotony of meals and add significance to the home hours by giving a little especial attention to the menu and the setting of the table. Use your company linen and lace doilies once in a while. Light a candle as a centerpiece. Bring out your best dishes occasionally, not using the same old set until it is all broken.

Variety is the spice of life, and a treat or two added to the menu or different linens or dishes or even changing the places of the family at the table, may convert the stale meal into a jolly family party.

The good man often comes home these days much troubled and perplexed, wondering how he can meet those bills and keep the home together. Cheer him up with sweet touches of beauty in his home life. Show him you love him and that wealth is not everything. Above all things, do not tell him your troubles nor nag at him in these perplexing times when he is worried almost beyond endurance. Better is a dinner of herbs, where love and beauty and gaiety are, than a stalled ox and a grouchy temper, or even dull stolidity.

Fashions, Fads, Foibles

Materials for spring dresses will be soft and pliable. Rough weaves and diagonals are in high favor. Navy blue will be a leading color, with many bright blues prevalent. Brown and beige are still running strong and brick red or brighter red is popular. Black is more in favor than ever, for both daytime and evening wear. There is nothing better than black and white combination. Contrasting colors for belt and scarf enliven many a sombre garment and variety may be obtained by changing the belt and scarf. Combination of several shades of the same color is newer than the use of contrasting colors.

The silhouette is: broad shoulders, slim waist, long, straight skirt. For daytime wear, the calf is half covered. Sport wear is an inch or two shorter. The bias cut slenderizes hips and waist lines.

The ensemble effect is more in order than ever. In choosing hat, coat, gloves or shoes, think how they will go with the rest of your outfit. An exception to this rule is the short, fitted jacket of contrasting color and materials, which may be worn with many dresses. An innovation is increased width of heels on street shoes. For once, a hygenic move!

The early spring hat dips over one eye, much after the order of the Empress Eugenie. The later hat will have a wider brim and snuggle more about the ears, as of yore. Variations of the beret still prevail. Most spring hats are of rough, shiny straw. There is a new-type sailor with a brim which rolls up evenly all around. It is called the "gob" hat and looks it, but will be popular as it makes the wearer look young.

Frost As Preservative

Experiments have shown that fresh fruits may be packed and frozen and kept in good condition for more than a year, then brought out and put on the market. It seems to be the microbes which make fruit spoil, and the frost either kills them or makes it too disagreeable for them to do business, hence the fruit is not molested by them. All that remains now is to make this frozen-pack method inexpensive enough to be practical as a method of keeping fruits from picking time to market time, in some remote city, and then the housewife will not have to can fruit to preserve it and we may have fresh fruit at all seasons. The economical feature will probably be brought to pass in time.

Tone Up

Headache, stomach upsets, bad heads are full of plans for back yard patent medicine ad, but a bit of wholesome advice) are usually the result of faulty elimination. The best cure is fruit juices. The juice of two oranges at bed time; and a half grapefruit, without sugar, eaten for breakfast, with not much else but a dish of bran and figs or prunes—these will soon spruce you up, if you live hygienically otherwise.

Back Yard Beautification

With the first warm sunshine, many heads are ful of plans for back yard beautification. These include, not only beds of flowers and the placing of shrubs, but the popular fish and lily tubs or pools, a rock garden, or a back yard fireplace for outdoor meals.

Escalloped Dried Beef

Mix a half pound of slithered dried beef, a can of corn, one cupful of milk, salt and pepper. Pour into a greased baking dish, cover with a cup of buttered crumbs and bake for thirty minutes.

Childhood

The way to rear up children,
They know a simple, merry, tender knack

Although such trifles."

To England by Way of Suez

Palms and ferns and cloudless skies
Buddhist temples, butterflies;
Orchids, maure and red and gold;
Sunsets, gorgeous to behold;
Soft and clear, the temple bell
Tinkles to complete the spell
Of February loveliness
In Java; yet I must confess
A longing that once more I may
See England on an April day,
When Spring, descending from the hills,
Walks knee-deep in daffodils;
Young lambs bleat and pigeons pair;
Violets perfume the air;
Cowslips start up one by one;
Wallflowers gather in the sun;
Sweetbrier's fragrant leaf uncurls;
Cobwebs string the hedge with pearls;
Larks are music on the wing;
Thrushes to the morning sing;
Sunshine alternates with showers,
And blackbirds charm the evening hours.
But why continue in this strain?
Words alone are words in vain.
It is enough for me to know
A Cotswold lane where violets grow,
And count the East well lost to gain
And English primrose drenched in April rain.

Science Is Human Search For Truth

Noted Scientist Gives History of Man's Eternal Quest

Professor Arthur H. Compton, of the University of Chicago, Nobel Prize man and one of America's chief scientists, recently aired his views in The Scientific American. According to Professor Compton science is a search for truth, founded on the belief that we live in a reliable world.

Curiously enough, Professor Compton believes that although the world is generally reliable, it is not completely so, at least in the sense that the movements of its smallest particles are exactly predictable. Says Professor Compton:

"China in the thirteenth century was far ahead of Italy, though in Italy burned brightest the flame of Western culture,

"Why, 'in seven short centuries has leadership in human progress passed from the East to West? Why has China, for the most part not advanced from the days of Kublai Khan?"

"That is a popular question in the West, and the first and rather flattering answer we have given is that the white race is intrinsically a superior race.

"But if we stop to think that is not a satisfactory explanation.

"Near Peiping I saw the famous great wall of China. Up and down hill and across rivers it extends for 1,500 miles. It is so wide that four-horse teams can travel abreast on its top. As an engineering feat it makes the building of the transcontinental railroad a comparatively small matter. All of which leads to the conclusion that the Chinese certainly are not inferior in abilities.

"And so we are compelled to accept the conclusion that the shift of the leadership is not due to racial superiority nor to any innate advantage that the white people may have over others.

"The West, I believe, owes its favorable position to an idea: The idea of science.

"Now, the idea of science is simply an attitude that men may have toward the world. It is a desire to find out how this outside environment, in which they live, works, coupled with the desire to increase their power to control it. It is an attitude that looks at life, determines its methods of operation, and adjusts them, so far as is possible, to human needs.

"Leonardo da Vinci was one of the first consciously to develop this point of view. And Galileo, Kepler, Newton, and a host of others should be permanently great names in our history, for they made significant contributions to the extension of this way of looking at life and things.

"Science was largely responsible for the industrial revolution which has altered the lives of people. If you do not believe this, go to the Orient, where in many places you will find spinning-wheels, potters' wheels, and other tools in use to-day, such as the Occident had centuries ago. Industry, by itself, is stagnant and static. It needs science to make it progressive and dynamic.

"Virtually everything we touch is, in part, due to scientific investigation. Science was called upon at almost every stage of the development of the automobile and the steam or electric train that bring the modern business man to work. It made possible the development of sky-scrapers and typewriters and printing-presses and the radio.

"At home we sit down to a table on chairs produced by scientifically conceived machinery. The tablecloth was woven on scientifically constructed machinery. The very dishes from which we eat were made possible by an experimentation with high temperatures, so that the ancient art of the potter might keep step with our age. Indeed, our whole day's life is inextricably bound up with scientific research.

"So it seems reasonable to take the point of view that the advance of civilization and the hope for its future are in science."

Science is founded upon a belief that the world is reliable in its operation. Strange as it may seem, says Professor Compton, this view was not widely current two hundred years ago, and hardly conceivable two thousand years past. The characteristic attitude of the past is that of the farmer who, when his barn was struck by lightning, offered sacrifices to Zeus or Thor, so that such a thing might not happen again. Now we know the thing to do is to put up lightning-rods. We read further:

"And we don't stop there. Not only do we protect ourselves from outlaw electricity, but we have domesticated the force, as we did cows and horses, and have compelled it to draw our loads and carry our burdens. We can do this because we think of the world as a reliable, orderly thing, a cosmos, and not a chaos.

"Science, viewed broadly, is more than a matter of test-tubes and electrons. Fundamentally it is a discerning approach to the problem of living satisfyingly in an environment of materials, men, and events that do not of themselves conform readily to our desires. It is a search for truth.

"The great problems, how and of what is the world made, were the dominating inspiration of several philosophers who dwelled in Greece some two thousand years ago. Why did not the idea of science develop in old Greece? Why did not the idea of industrial revolution take place in 200 B.C. instead of in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries A.D.?

"The first reason is, probably, Socrates. The modern skeptic punches holes in old ideas, but this famous skeptic put holes in the then new idea of science. The current school of scientists has advanced the theory that ideas and purposes, as well as stones and water, are composed of atoms.

"Socrates pointed out that the fact that you can and do think is in itself proof that something was started for you with which you commence. And Socrates won the day.

"It is hardly fair to say that Socrates killed this early scientific school, but he helped do so. And so did Plato. And so did Alexander the Great, who brought back from his travels in the Orient those Chaldean magicians and astrologers who introduced the idea of magic in the West.

"Thus Greek science died in early infancy. The Greeks couldn't develop the idea of science because they could not reconcile a reliable world—a world controlled by atoms—with the work of thought. The problem that Socrates saw, the gulf between mind and matter, the enigma of purpose and of thought, still remain with us."

Health—According to Dr. Gordon P. Jackson, M.O.H., Medical Health Officer of the City of Toronto, the death rate in Toronto in 1931 created a new low level. He is quoted as saying: "Our program immunization has played a substantial part and definitely shows the way to complete annihilation of diphtheria within our midst. Maternal mortality rate as per thousand has also decreased from 7.01 to 6.03.

Bat fish are curiously shaped fish with flat heads and slender tapering bodies which are found near the West Indies. Two species migrate as far north as the South Atlantic coast. In 1903 a specimen about five inches long was taken off the coast of North Carolina. Mature bat fish are about twelve inches long, and are found usually in shallow tropical and subtropical waters.

The Twenty Fifth Anniversary of Macdonald College with particular emphasis on Founder's Day, February 10th, focuses attention on this institution and its founder, the late Sir William C. Macdonald who built, equipped and endowed the entire institution at an expense of more than six million dollars.

Founder's Day which this year, marks the 101st Anniversary of the birth of the late Sir William C. Macdonald, founder of the Macdonald Tobacco Company and Canada's greatest benefactor, once more draws attention to the tremendous scope of his benefactions to McGill University with which the Macdonald College at St. Anne de Bellevue is affiliated. These benefactions total more than twelve and one half million dollars, $10,690,165 of which was given during life. While the Faculty of Science and of Scientific Agriculture was possibly the dearest to Sir William's heart, every faculty of the McGill University benefited during his life and after. The Faculty of Law received $232,500. The Conservatorium of Music $300,000. The Faculty of Medicine was bequeathed $500,000. The McCord Museum Building was purchased at a cost of $142,000, while the Macdonald Park site now occupied by the Stadium, and the Student's Park was purchased at a cost of more than one million dollars and presented to the University. Student's activities came under the beneficient scope of Sir William as the McGill Union testifies. Sir William spent $219,000 on its erection and equipment. In addition to the wonderful equipment at St. Anne de Bellevue, those buildings at McGill which bear the Macdonald name and those donated by the late Tobacco knight, stand today, as the greatest monument to his memory.

Macdonald College was founded by the late Sir William in 1907. It was designed to include three schools—one for agriculture, one for household science and one for normal teacher training. The gift included the grounds, almost 800 acres in extent, the complete equipment and endowment. The college itself was incorporated with the University of McGill as the Faculty of Agriculture, although the teachers' training feature is possibly his best known contribution to life in the Province of Quebec.

Other sections of the country have benefited by the late Sir William's benefactions, the Macdonald Institute and the Macdonald Hall at the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, being among the most important.

93, Still Working

"A man who quits working before he's a hundred is just plain lowdown lazy," says John Wilson, St. Paul's bailiff, fired because he's 93. He is suing to get his job back.

Real birds' nests are eaten in China. But only the very rich can eat them, as they cost as much as $15 for one half the size of a teacup. They are the nests made by the selangane and other socies of swifts. They are composed of a mucilaginous substance from the birds' glands and are not, as formerly supposed, made from seaweed.

I should say sincerity, a deep, great, genuine sincerity, is the first characteristic of all men in any way heroic. —Thomas Carlyle.

"The American of to-day fills into a month more than the old colonist accomplished in a year. — Sir Arthur Keith.

LEARNING

It is not the moving about, the strange places one sees, nor the people one meets, that really count in life, you know. I think it is the things one learns, the places in which we take root and grow, and the people who teach us what is really worth while—patience and the beauty there is in the simplest and most common lives when they are lived close to nature.—Ellen Glasgow.

SNEERERS

The most insignificant people are the most apt to sneer at others. They are safe from reprisals, and have no hope of rising in their own esteem, but by lowering their neighbors. The severest critics are always those who have either never attempted, or who have never failed in original composition.—Hazlitt.

A GALLANT SPIRIT

Where there is a brave and gallant spirit in a man, it commonly, and, in the absense of extraordinary trials, manages to save something of time of thoughts, of energy, from the urgent demands of his outer life and his bodily wants. There is the blessed rest of Sunday, a standing and a speaking witness of the truth that man does not live by bread alone.

ACTS

Every act we do is full of the power of reproduction; we are tracked and hunted by our deeds; and after we have lost them from view and from memory, they reappear and claim as of right the mastery over our fate.

"Weather pretty raw to-day!"

"Yes, I suppose the weather man's indications must have said that it would be well done."

The Best Cake Jim Ever Tasted

"It's surprising how things go astray. When I was visiting my sister Martha she gave me a new recipe for lemon cake. Yesterday, when I specially wanted it, I couldn't find it anywhere."

"So you had to do without it, I suppose?"

"Oh no, I just called Martha on the telephone and she gave me the recipe over again. Jim said it was the best cake he ever tasted, and I said that it's lucky we have a telephone."

Women's Day of Prayer

A great encircling chain of prayer was welded last week when women all over the world met in groups to join their voices in the fifth annual World Day of Prayer. The chain was unique by the variety of its international links and was made effective by its spirit of unity. Nationals of various countries were consulted as to their desires for their respective native lands and these special requests were made objects of prayer. With each passing year new countries are reported as participating, Manchuria, South Africa, Uruguay and the Fiji Islands are new links in this year's chain. The programme used was prepared by Miss A. J. Yusufji, a young woman of India, the theme being, "Hold Fast in Prayer."

To associate themselves with this chain, the women of the Missionary Societies of the Anglican, Presbyterian and United Churches, gathered in the Anglican Church. The attendance was large, the spirit was very uplifting. A number from each of the churches took part. Last year the day of prayer service was held in the United Church; next year it wil be held in the Presbyerian Church. This system of rotation has been going on for some years with encouraging results.

MARRIAGES

Russell—Wepperman

A very pretty wedding was solemnized by Rev. H. E. Payne, of Huttonville, when Roy F. Russell and Miss Rose Wepperman were united in marriage. The bride wore a dress of pink georgette and lace, with white shoes and hose to match, and was attended by her sister, Miss Mae Wepperman, gowned in a dress of Spanish tile silk flat crepe. Thos. Russell, brother of the groom, was best man.

The funeral of Mrs. Edwin Hack, formerly, Florence Munday, from the home of her brother, James Munday, Park St., to Trinity Anglican Church was largely attended. The services were in charge of Rev. H. Earl, rector, and interment was in Trinity Cemetery.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Heading for Toronto they were struck by the Toronto bound flyer. The truck was carried three-quarters of a mile on the engine and completely wrecked. Three sheep were killed and the fowl strewn along the roadbed. The men were dead when taken from the wrecked auto.

Here and There

The railroads cannot continue to pay a million dollars a day in taxes; they cannot pay interest on their bonds; they cannot buy new equipment unless they earn the money. In putting the railroads in a sound, money-making, position we are aiding the whole country, says the Hornell (N.Y.) Tribune Times.

Montreal witnessed an unprecedented invasion from Quebec on the first week-end of February, when over 3000 men, women and children, drawn from all ranks and classes, arrived on the three dollar return Canadian Pacific excursion from the Ancient Capital. Four special trains were used.

Seated on a glittering ice throne between two huge natural icebergs, Miss Margaret Stevenson, of Edmonton, in her role as Carnival Queen and assisted by His Honor Lieutenant-Governor W. L. Walsh, opened the 16th Annual Banff Winter Sports Carnival at that Canadian Rockies resort, this month.

The appointment of W. R. Patterson to be General Auditor, Canadian Pacific Railway, has been announced, effective February 1, over the signature of E. E. Lloyd, Comptroller, in succession to G. C. Gahan, who died recently. Mr. Patterson, who was born in Toronto in 1890, is one of the youngest railway executives on the continent.

Plans for a national championship for grouse and woodcock dogs are under way and New Brunswick is considered as the best possible locality for staging the event. Field enthusiasts in the United States recently held a meeting to discuss the championship and were greatly influenced by the advice of Ozark Ripley, well known sport writer, who strongly advocated the claims of New Brunswick.

Indication of the contribution made and being made to civilization by the engineering profession was demonstrated at the 46th annual convention of the Engineering Institute of Canada held at the Royal York Hotel, Toronto, recently. A very wide variety of topics formed the basis of speeches and discussions at the convention at which the most outstanding men in the profession were present.

A little brown jug left Grand Pre, N.S., recently on a long journey south to the Land of Dixie. Unlike the brown jug of the old song, it did not contain ale, or anything likely to excite the U S. Customs officials. Just water from the historic well of Evangeline at Grand Pre Memorial Park, site of the birthplace of Longfellow's heroine. The water will be used to christen the new 10,000 ton steamer "Acadia" to be operated on the run between New York and Yarmouth, N.S.

Ski-ing, the sport that has had the greatest growth of any winter activity in the past decade, reached its peak this year with thousands of skiers trekking out to the Laurentians, north of Montreal, every week-end. Special trains are put at their disposal by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Similar week-end outings are encouraged by this railway in all the great centres of population and it takes a major place at all sport meetings across the continent.

No, He Wasn't Telling That One to the Wife

"I can match that one," said the man who owns a dog to the man with a new baby at home.

"Impossible!" said the man with the new baby. He had just offered, as an illustration of the intelligence of infants, the story of how a baby, picked up and walked with at 11:03 p. m., will demand with wails to be picked up and walked with the next night at 11:03 p. m. And the next.

"Well," said the man who owns a dog, "when our Maggie had puppies, I was doing night work. Came in at 3 a. m. Maggie and her puppies were sound asleep in their basket at that hour, but one night when I wasn't sleepy I turned on the light in the kitchen, dumped them all out on the floor and played with them for a while. The next night I did the same thing. And the next.

"The night after that I came home tired, I walked right through to the bedroom, undressed and got into bed, and you should have heard the yelps that went up from that kitchen. Every one of those puppies spent the next 15 minutes noisily reproaching me for my neglect. They woke up the wife, they woke up the neighbors. They made the darndest fuss. The next night I ignored them again, but they woke up and yelped at 3 a. m., just the same. It took three nights of ignoring them to break the habit."

"You don't say," said the man with the new baby, looking thoughtful. "Well, I wouldn't dare tell that one to my wife."—New York Sun.

Turkish Capital Famed for Its Many Mosques

As the tourist gets his first view of Istanbul from the deck of an approaching ship, he is more aware of the mosques than of anything else, says an article in a Boston paper. Their domes, and the slender minarets which rise near them, give Istanbul a real distinction which many great cities lack. Not even Cairo has mosques which show up so astonishingly against the skyline. They are almost numberless, but there are a dozen that are really tremendous in size. They occupy commanding sites, so that the domes and minarets rise above the surrounding roofs. They give Istanbul, from a distance, an aspect of wonderful dignity and grandeur mingled with the charm of the Orient.

Of these mosques, the most renowned is St. Sophia, one of the most glorious buildings in the world. It was built as a Christian church and dedicated in the year 538. The minarets at the four outside corners were added by the Turks when they converted the structure into a mosque. From the outside, St. Sophia is apt to seem a little disappointing, but within it is hardly surpassed anywhere in architectural merit. It would be hard to find another great nave so light and so graceful.—Detroit News.

Mother Earth's Age

The earth is 2,000,000,000 years old, according to the estimate of Prof. Dr. Otto Hahn, director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute at Berlin. The noted physicist bases his calculations on the quantity of lead to be found on the surface of the earth.

"The progress made recently in the study of radio-active substances and the disintegration of the atom enables us to fix the age of the world with fair accuracy," the professor told an audience of German scientists. "Uranium and thorium, contained in certain minerals, are converted, in the course of millions of years, into radium, and finally into uranium lead and thorium lead. The lead findings help us to determine the age of the earth at 2,000,000,000 years."

Old Story Disproved

There is an often repeated story credited to the historian, Harvey Rice, that Moses Cleaveland's exploring and surveying party started up the Chagrin river, mistaking it for the Cuyahoga, and that upon discovering the error Cleaveland gave it this name as representative of the state of his feelings.

It appears, however, that this story has little foundation, for on maps made before the Revolution the river was called the Chagrin. The name is no doubt from an Indian word given as "Shagrin" or "Shaguin" and said to mean "clear." One map issued in 1755 calls it the Elk river.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Spinster's" Derivation

Spinster means one who works at the spinning wheel. In the olden days the work of making cloth for clothing was a part of the household duties and fell to the younger women to spin the yarn. As the prepossessing and marriageable girls had their minds on their fellows, the job usually became the responsibility of those who had had their chance and lost. So a spinster came to mean any unmarried woman, and is still today the legal phrase in England for any woman who has never been married.

Mine Rescue School

To train rescue crews in mine accidents a factory in Berlin, Germany, has opened a school where invasion of gas-infested chambers and the carrying of men to safety are taught. Experiments are made under varying conditions, different types of gas masks being worn by the operators, and dummies are rescued from rooms filled with poisonous vapors.

At the bowling-alley the boys have held an elimination contest for the supremacy in the fine art of "makin" tha pins fly. Here's the standing at the end of the elimination contest: 1st, A. Arch, 28 points; 2nd, H. Saul, 25 points; 3rd, N. Russell, 21 points; 4th, M. Woodruff, 20 points; 5th, C. Hillier and H. Pickett, 16 points; 6th, E. E. King, 8 points; 7th, L Ardagh, 6 points. The play-off between the first four teams will take place very soon.

HOW MUCH?

How much you should eat of what you do eat is a subject of real importance to you. No one can set down for you the exact amounts of the different foods you should eat.

The amount of food required varies according to age, sex, season and activity. During the years of growth, food is required for body building, which is not needed once growth is completed. Men require a little more food than women. Activity uses up energy, and as body energy comes from our food, the active person requires more food than does the individual who is inactive. The heat of the body is maintained at an even level, and in cold weather, more food is used to keep the body warm than is necessary during the summer season.

How then is any one person to know how much to eat? The simplest and most practical method is to watch your weight. You can find out the average weight for your age, sex and height. Weighing yourself ocasionally will show whether you are gaining or losing weight, or whether an even weight is being maintained.

If you are overweight, you have eaten too much in the past. If you are overweight and gaining, you are eating to much in the present. The reverse is true as regards underweight and continuing loss in weight.

It may be that underweght is not due to an insufficiency of food alone; it may be the right kinds of foods are not being used. Nutrition is not, by any means, entirely a matter of food. Loss of weight may be due to actual disease, or to lack of rest, or fresh air, or some other essential to healthy living, the absence of which interferes with the proper digestion and use of foods eaten.

The person who is free from disease and who is using the wide variety of foods which he should take, can judge as to the quantity needed by watching his weight. We are not suggesting that you should live with your eye on a weight scale, but we are of the opinion that an occasional weighing, once a month, is a good way to keep check on the quantity of food eaten.

It is much easier to avoid overweight than it is to correct it. It is much more simple to cut down sufficiently on the diet to avoid adding weight than it is to cut off enough to reduce weight. Weight can be reduced, but the process requires considerable determination, perseverance and sacrifice.

Many people are tempted to eat more food than they need. It requires self-restraint to pass by certain inviting dishes. However, failure to control the appetite is punished by digestive upsets and by overweight which is a burden and a handicap.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Pig Pays Old Account

Potatoes Buy a Haircut

Three thousand seven hundred and seventy-four pounds of oats for 4-000 pounds of coal; a bag of potatoes for a haircut; a pig in payment for an outstanding bill. Thus the farmers in this district meet the present money shortage in the manner of their forefathers, by barter.

"With barns full of grain and no money, the farmers do the only thing they can." states V.C. Johnston of the Builders' Supply Co. "Yesterday a farmer came hear for coal. He had only oats to offer so we gave him two tons of coal for 111 bushels of oats."

"We take lots of grain in lieu of cash," commented F. G. Reid of the Credit Valley Mills. "Just to-day we exchanged a load of bran for a load of barley. Just a few days ago we took a pig from another farmer who owed us a bill. There is always bartering between farmers and grocery stores but this year it is more pronounced."

The local barber here recently refused a bag of potatoes for a haircut. He already had a cellarful.

"I think this custom of bartering will become more popular from now on," a well-to-do farmer near here stated to The Star. "We are all short of ready money and most of our crops are still unsold. We have no other course to pursue. More farmers are going back to horses from tractors to do farm work, because horses can be fed by produce from the farm."

No service stations about here have yet been asked to barter gasoline for any farm products. (Daily Star)

S.H.S. NOTES

On Tuesday, February 23rd, a meeting of the Literary Society was held. The program was supplied by the pupils of Second Form. A short play entitled "The Minister's Mistake" was enacted by Lucy Scheid, Ross Hollingshead, and Leona Durie. The Bailey sisters favoured us with a piano duet. The next feature, a musical contest, was conducted by Lucy Scheid. Bill Munro, Margaret Falconer, Erna Bailey, and Jean Temple, put on a play entitled "Getting Rid of an Agent." Lucy Scheid played a piano solo. Wanda Cooke, who coached the plays, is to be congratulated on the excellence of the program.

Oratorical Contest Winners Announced

The S.H.S. Literary Society held its annual Oratorical Contest on Wednesday, February 24th. As there were not as many taking part as in former years, the contest was held in the school. Mr. Gerhart, Mrs. H. Couse, and Mrs. C. P. McArthur acted as judges.

Mae Treanor, who was the first speaker, spoke on "The Life of Sir Walter Scott." Lucy Scheid spoke on "Friendliness" (the need of the world to-day). This oration was very well delivered and was worthy of receiving first award in the girl's section of the contest.

There were three boys in running for the honour of representing S.H.S. in the district finals, Wesley Wolfe, Alexander Dick and Harold Treanor. Although each of the boys had chosen the same topic, (i.e. "The Life Of Thomas Alva Edison") all the addresses were very interesting. Alex. Dick got the decision in this section of the contest.

Lucy Scheid and Alex. Dick will have their names engraved on the Oratory Shield and will represent Streetsville in the district finals which will be held in the near future. The best wishes of all the pupils goes with them.

On Friday, February 26th, the Middle School pupils of S.H.S. visited the pupils of Cooksville Continuation School. The time was passed by playing games, participating in contests and a short while in dancing. Refreshments were served and were enjoyed by all.

Margaret McClintock and Gerald Sproule won the "Soap" contest. Edith Rogerson and Roy Hollingshead won the "Scrambled Relatives' contest. Irene Cook, the Mysterious "Miss Cooksville" was discovered by Aubrey Pope. Aubrey Pope, the mysterious "Mr. Streetsville" was discovered by Margaret Law. Charles Herson won the "Art" contest.

There are quite a few pupils out with colds, sore throat, etc., but the show must go on and we are in the midst of our winter term examinations.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAXING OF WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. Peter sees Barbara destroy a jewelled comb of Sheila's and when she refuses to talk he realizes she is protecting someone. At Orme's trial it is revealed that Orme is Sheila's real husband. Dr. Cavanaugh testifies that Orme has been the victim of amnesia. His testimony clears Orme. Peter, realizing that a master mind is behind the whole thing, goes to visit Dr. Cavanaugh.

CHAPTER L.

Peter ignored Bossy, waiting at the curb, and swung down the street with long, uneven strides. He felt an imperative need of physical action to bring some sort of coherence to the wild idea which had flashed across his mind in Professor Gambion's library.

His pace lagged, at times stopping altogether. It was incredible—incredible even to himself! Then he pushed on rapidly, as if the whole amazing scheme would escape unless he could pursue and overtake it.

Barbara was protecting someone—someone whose claim upon her was strong enough to bring that thin whiteness to her cheeks, that desperate purpose to her eyes; a claim that not even murder could break. Her silence was not self-protection; he was sure of that; Barbara had told him that she had not killed Sheila O'Shay—and Barbara could not lie.

And it was not Ellsworth. She did not love Ellsworth. Her sentiment for Ellsworth had never been love—not love as Peter knew it, not the love that was a steady flame in Barbara's eyes when he had held her in his arms in the little room with the firelight, nor when he sat beside her in the court room. Besides, Ellsworth was not a cool, calculating murderer.

"Among all the things we don't know about Sheila O'Shay's murderer, we know that he is not an ordinary criminal." Cavanaugh had said that. "How easy it is to fool mere normal people." He had said that too.

Peter went back, step by step, over the scenes in the court room. Cavanaugh had acquitted Orme—there was no doubt of it. But why had he given no hint to Graham, nor to Peter himself, that he had known Orme prior to the murder?

Peter, who was acute enough, had not the slightest suspicion of those earlier meetings. Perhaps Cavanaugh had the right to withhold the knowledge from Peter, but Graham was Orme's lawyer, Graham should have been told. And even though he had merely allowed Peter to deceive himself, it was nevertheless a deliberate deception—a deception with a motive.

Motives! "The strongest motive is likely to seem feeble to the other fellow." Yes, Cavanaugh had said that.

And yet—if he were wrong! He must be wrong—it was too bizarre. It was beyond belief, almost beyond imagination. If he were wrong, he would show himself the world's most utter fool. If he were wrong, he stood to lose Barbara—she would never forgive him. And yet, deep down below the seething chaos in Peter's mind, that flash of light burned on. Reason, commonsense, credibility were all against it. But it burned on. And there was only one way to find out.

Peter felt suddenly helpless. Who was he, to pit his wits against the subtle, calculating mind that had framed this murder? It was David against Goliath. He had only his little stone of truth to throw—if it was the truth! But it was the truth. Wild as it was, it had clicked somehow—the click of absolute certainty, of a reason beyond reasonableness. David against Goliath—but David, with his little stone of truth, had won.

Dr. Cavanaugh opened the door to Peter's ring, his big frame silhouetted against the light. For the first time, Peter noted that the square shoulders had acquired a slight stoop. The flesh hung upon his cheeks in folds, deepening the lines of his face as if they had been marked with a heavy pencil.

It was not surprising that he should feel the effects of fatigue and overwork in a difficult and exacting case; but Peter's association with him had been so close that he had hitherto failed to observe the change. He felt now that every sense was sharpened, that his nerves reached out like an antennae, responding to almost imperceptible stimuli.

He was like a man feeling his way through the jungle, listening for the danger that lurked in the rubbing of blades of grass, watching for the shifting of a shadow.

Dr. Cavanaugh leaned forward to recognize the young man standing hatless in the gloom. Peter saw his fingers tighten on the door knob. But his voice was genial. He greeted Peter as an unaccountable but always welcome friend.

"The ubiquitous Peter! I thought your labors were over by this time. But come in!"

The sincere heartiness of his tone rocked Peter back to sanity. But with that new alertness which nothing escaped, he saw that the doctor's eyes were hard and impenetrable, like agates.

"I've come to mull over the aftermath of our current mystery." To his surprise Peter heard his own voice speaking in easy and natural tones. He knew that his hands were steady, that his face betrayed nothing of the tumult in his mind. He lighted a cigarette, testing himself by holding the match until it almost burned his fingers. The tiny flame did not so much as quiver.

"Is there an aftermath?"

Dr. Cavanaugh settled himself in the chair behind the desk, waving Peter to an arm chair drawn close beside the student lamp. He glanced obliquely at Peter as he selected a cigar from the box beside him. Deliberately he struck a match and held it, watching the point of flame creep closer until it almost burned his fingers. The flame did not waver.

"You saved Orme—single-handed. The papers are full of it. Yours the honor and the power and the glory. In theatrical parlance, you ran away with the show, and landed another triumph for the man who makes no mistakes. Graham was simply nowhere. And yet, I wonder—isn't it barely possible that that star performance was itself a mistake?"

A Royal Scot

Sandy mumbled something about expecting a few "bawbees" for posing when the photographer approached the Scotch terrier section at the dog show.

"Your account really flatters me unduly." The doctor lifted a deprecating hand.

"Not at all. I've noticed your impeccable modesty, doctor. You never boast—you have no need to. It is an admirable attitude. But I'm still left wondering."

"Surely you don't think Orme was guilty?"

"No," Peter said meditatively, "I don't think Orme was guilty."

"And you are kind enough to say that it was I who got him off?"

"Yes, you got him off. And yet it must be rather hard on you to realize that, for the first time, you have met your match. You set out to solve this case—and you have not solved it. You have made your first failure. The public has not caught that angle of it yet—but it will. The man of no mistakes is fallible after all. The Tule Marsh murderer was too clever for him. And presently it will occur to them that the great man is not quite so great as they thought him. 'He did some clever work,' they will say, 'but perhaps he played in luck. It may not have been so hard as it looked. He couldn't find the man that killed Sheila O'Shay. And if that man could beat him, there are others who can beat him, too.' You have been a legend, Dr. Cavanaugh. And a legend must be perfect, or it is nothing."

"And do you imagine," Dr. Cavanaugh said gravely, "that I have not thought of that?"

"Yes," Peter nodded. "I believe you have thought of it."

"And suppose——" Dr. Cavanaugh paused, pursed his lips and sent a perfect ring into the air. He watched it until it wavered and broke. "Suppose I have not really failed? Suppose I could solve the mystery—if I would."

Peter leaned forward. In the shadow he had the illusion that the face of the doctor was carved in gray rock—heavy, sinister, brooding. And then he knew only that it was the face of a man who was very tired.

"Dr. Cavanaugh," he said in a voice thin and taut with the intensity of his emotion, "I believe that you have the answer. I came here to fight it out with you. But I am not going to fight you. When all's said and done, you are a very great man—and you have been good to me. I leave it to you. I leave it to you—absolutely."

"Yes," the doctor agreed gravely. "It is left to me. If I do not tell you the answer, you will never know it. There is not a shadow of proof. And remember, my failure is in my own hands. If I choose to fail——"

"Do you think you can fail, doctor? Other men, of course—but you?"

Silence was in the room, silence that vibrated like a bell.

Suddenly the doctor smiled—a smile of strange, remote tenderness.

"Peter," he said softly. "We are none of us immune from the weaknesses of humanity. None of us quite immune. None. Just two people in my life have touched me deeply. I am far greater than either of them. They are bound by all that I have cast aside. They are straws in my hands. And yet—those two, Peter, are you and Barbara. I am going to tell you the answer."

CHAPTER LI.

Dr. Cavanaugh leaned back in his chair. The lines in his face were deep corrugations, like crevasses worn in stone; but the face itself was somehow changed, smoothed into relief that comes with the end of conflict, the victory of a final decision.

"I always said you were a bright young man, Peter," he said, as casually as if the story he had promised to tell were of no more personal import than a smoking room anecdote. "How did you come to guess?"

"Partly because there was no one else whom Barbara would guard, not only with her life, but with her honor. That is what her silence meant. It is the only thing it could mean. It seemed wildly absurd, of course, to imagine you a criminal. You had the intellect to carry it through, to make it a perfect crime. But that wasn't enough. You must not only have the wit to conceal a crime, but the character to commit it."

February Seagulls

The gifts of song and flight are separate,
The thrush and blackbird are content to be Pedestrians of the air. Of her own weight,
It seems, the lark falls upward precipitously.
But over the ice of the wind the swallows skate
On their wings' outside edge their flawless 3,
Nor could old Euclid's self assimilate
The gull's celestial geometry.
When birds were still at twilight in February
I watched, while rain was flogging Thames with looped
And windy thongs, diagonally dull,
How suddenly through gloom and sleet and flurry
With motion, bright as torches rose and stooped
The Phoenix resurrections of a gull.

—Humbert Wolfe, in "Snow."

A Musician's Love of Nature

When only a boy he showed a great fondness for nature, and would often wander off from his uncongenial surroundings, and, under the shade of some trees, would study and listen to the music of nature, and rustling of the leaves, the sighing of the wind, and the humming of the insects. His dreamy moods increased as he reached manhood, and his greatest pleasure was to walk in the fields and woods. He arose at daybreak and worked till two o'clock, and then, after his dinner, he made the circuit of the town several times, no matter what the weather was. His figure was familiar everywhere. With long unkempt hair, careless attire, and hurried gait, he went striding along, constantly humming to himself, and, when he became excited by some new idea, waving his arms about in apparently a frantic manner. He always carried a notebook with him. "No man on earth," he writes, "loves the country more."—From "Pictured Lives of Great Musicians," by Alethea B. and Rebekah Crawford.

CORK TIPS

There will be less difficulty in removing a cork if a narrow strip of tape is placed underneath it before inserting it into the bottle. To remove the cork, pull the ends of the tape.

Rub a little glycerine over corks before inserting them into bottles that contain anything sticky. This will prevent the adhesive from hardening round the corks.

Corks that have been used for stopping bottles containing liquids with strong odors should not be used indiscriminately, or they may contaminate the contents of other bottles.

MENDING A LEAK.

Sometimes in frosty weather a water-pipe or tank springs a leak. The best way to deal with it until the plumber arrives, if the hole is quite a tiny one, is to stick a match in it. The wood will swell as it becomes damp and provide an effective stopper. When the hole is too big to take a match make it a little larger by inserting a stick and working it round and round. Then stop the leak with a small cork, which will swell in the same way as the wood.

BEFORE STORING KNIVES

Knives, not of the stainless variety, that have to be stored for some time, will not rust if they are rubbed over with a little olive oil before putting away. Wrapping them in baize and leaving them in a box with a tight-fitting lid are additional precautions.

When preparing a mustard plaster use the white of an egg instead of water, and the plaster will not blister.

SO MUCH SIMPLER

Enamelling will be done in half the time and with much better results if the tin of enamel is kept in a basin of hot water while it is being used. If the article to be enamelled is slightly warmed, too, it makes the task easier. Enamel dries quicker and more evenly in a warm room than in the air.

A solution of alum water — two ounces to the gallon — will render clothing washed in it non-inflammable.

MENDING CHINA

A splendid cement for broken china is made by mixing white of egg and quick-lime to a smooth paste for one article at a time, as it dries quickly. See that the edges to be joined are quite clean and dry. Spread the prepared cement on them and press tightly together. The paste soon sets quite hard and makes a lasting mend.

Slightly soiled suede gloves can be cleaned by rubbing them, while on the hands, with a piece of flannel dipped in flour.

FASHION HINT

"How to make my old short skirts conform to the new length was a problem to me until I hit on this plan. I dropped the hems; and as the part that had been turned under was darker than the rest, I redyed the entire dress, after having bleached the goods, following directions in the Diamond Dyes package.

"I used Diamond Dyes for the redyeing, of course. I have dyed many things with these wonderful colors. They have saved me many dollars and have never failed to give perfect results—smooth, even colors—fast to wear and washing. Friends think my things are new when I redye or tint them with Diamond Dyes. They do give the most gorgeous colors!"

Gilwell Beads

All Ontario Lone Scouts, and especially those of the 2nd Troop, will be glad to hear that Scoutmaster Don Hutchison has been awarded his Gilwell Certificate and Beads which were presented to him by Chief Executive Commissioner John Stiles at the recent Provincial Council Annual Meeting held in Toronto.

This certificate shows that Mr. Hutchison has successfully passed the necessary courses of the Scoutmaster's Gilwell Training Course which includes ten days under canvass and which is intended to assist men to train as efficient Scoutmasters. Graduates of this course wear a badge, when in uniform, which consists of two wooden beads, suspended around the neck on a leather bootlace.

We join with all Lonies in congratulating Mr. Hutchison.

Lone Scout Work Dedicated

We hear from St. Thomas, Ont., that the members of the 5th St. Thomas Troop attended a dedication service on February 14th at Trinity Church, in that town, when two flower baskets, which were donated to the church last Christmas for permanent decoration in the church, were dedicated.

Those flower baskets were the handiwork of Lone Scout Charlie Roberts, of Sparta, from whom the 5th St. Thomas Church had obtained them at Christmas time.

Will Soon Be a Patrol

We are glad to hear from Colborne and to know that the Lonies in that place are still as keen as ever. They have all passed their Tenderfoot Test and hope to shortly organize into a Patrol. Good work, Colborne. We wish you every success.

Cenotaph Custodians

Boy Scouts are the official custodians of the Cenotaph at Hamilton, Ont. A Scoutmaster and four boys from each troop in turn mark war anniversaries by running up new flags. The duty was turned over to the Scouts in consequence of anniversary dates being overlooked at the City Hall.

Perhaps Lone Scouts can undertake this duty in the communities in which they live? Get into touch with the local authorities and suggest it to them. Other duties in connection with the Cenotaph might include keeping the stone clean, cutting the grass around the monument, planting flower gardens, etc. This is an excellent Good Turn to your community.

Scouts at Parliament Opening

As in previous years, a picked group of Toronto Boy Scouts acted as ushers at the opening of the Ontario Legislature, February 10.

This honor indicates the degree to which Boy Scouts are trusted, and the esteem in which the Boy Scout Movement is held in Government Circles in this province

Tenderfoot Badge

Lone Scouts will please note that at the recent Annual Meetings of the Provincial Council for Ontario it was decided that in future the Cloth Tenderfoot Badge (or the Ontario Official Badge as it is sometimes called) will be worn on the Left Pocket instead of above the pocket as previously.

2,000,000 Scouts in 45 Countries

World Scout census figures at the end of 1931, as received by the International Scout Bureau, show a total of 2,039,347 Scouts and leaders. This represents a year's increase of 168,033.

800,000 Scouts in the Empire

At the end of 1931 there were 808,307 Boy Scouts and leaders in the British Empire, an increase during the year of 51,424. Canada's total was 58,568, an increase of 5,996.

If all these boys remain true to the ideal taught them in the Boy Scout Movement, such difficulties as are now being experienced in China will not be possible when they are grown up.

Boys Trained For Public Service

During 1931 a total of 4,566 Canadian Boy Scouts passed Proficiency Badge personal health tests, and tests qualifying for public health and safety service. Of the total 1,019 became Ambulance men (advanced first aiders), 517 Missioners (junior nurses), 256 became Public Health Men, 326 Public Safety Men and 318 qualified as Rescuers (from drowning). 474 passed the Healthy Man Tests, 510 qualified as Athletes, 268 as Masters-at-Arms, and 876 as Swimmers.

For particulars of how to become a Lone Scout write to The Boy Scouts Association, Lone Scout Department, 320 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"Lone E."

One River—and No Rain!

A country about the size of England, peopled by agriculturists, but practically without rain, and dependent for its water supply on a single river—that is the province of Sind, in India.

Under British rule the primitive canals have been greatly improved and extended, and now the province has the largest irrigation system in the world, with a dam about a mile in length, pierced by sixty-six sluice gate openings, and seven great canals, every one bigger than the Suez

The new system, known as the Lloyd Barrage, has just been opened. The value of the dam is that, during the period when the Indus is normally low, the shutting of the sluice gates will keep the water at a sufficiently high level to feed the canals. Then when the river is in flood the gates will be opened.—"Answers" (London).

Iodine Content of Eggs Raised By Hungarian Farm-Wife

Budapest—The race, supposed to be exclusively between American and German scientists, to produce an egg containing a large amount of iodine, apparently has been won by an outsider, Mrs. M. Janosi, a poultry farmer, living in Zugulo, near Budapest. It is said that iodine can be far more easily assimilated by the human system if the iodine is contained in eggs, than when it is administered direct.

Mrs. Janosi is said to have succeeded in producing eggs which contain 0.169 milligrams of iodine without any unusual taste being perceptible. Her purported achievement is regarded as of great importance.

Unique Well System Installed in Bermuda

Hamilton, Bermuda.—A great engineering achievement came to fulfillment recently with the opening of a system of horizontal wells, capable of supplying millions of gallons of fresh spring water to the colony of Bermuda. These wells have now begun to supply the city of Hamilton. They will soon be extended to care for the water needs of the entire colony.

Bermuda has been dependent upon rainfall as its source of water. The island is the cap of a submerged marine mountain and the water is quickly shed by the rock underlying the soil. Prof. W. D. Turner, of Columbia University, having been called upon for advice on the possibility of developing a permanent supply of water, found that because of the geological stratification of the limestone rock in Bermuda, the water travelled in horizontal veins before finally reaching sea level.

The problem was to intercept these water veins and collect the water in a central pool. A trench, four feet deep and 250 feet long, has been excavated along a hill at a point just above sea level. Interlocking pipes have been laid at the bottom of a pit intercepting the water veins, and this pipe leads to a concrete-bottomed reservoir.

The new plant was officially opened by the Governor, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thos. Cubitt.

INTRODUCTION—The first twelve chapter of John's Gospel tell how Jesus worked the works of him that sent him, while it was day. He tried to make himself known to the world, but the world rejected him. 1: 11. Chapter 13 marks the point at which he turned to "his own," 13: 1. No longer are we in the atmosphere of controversy. All is now tenderness and intimacy. We are in the "Holy of Holies" of the Gospel. These wonderful chapters preserve for us the last discourses of our Lord.

I. LOVE AND TREACHER., 13: 1, 2.

The key to all that follows is in the words, "Having loved his own, he loved them unto the end," or "unto the uttermost." He was prepared to face for them whatever the situation demanded, suffering, apparent defeat, death. It was a love which grew more tender and intimate as dangers gathered. He was troubled at the thought of leaving his disciples behind "in the world," like sheep among wolves—while he was departing out of the world unto the Father.

In harsh contrast is the picture of Judas, v. 2. Stubbornly there still lodged in Judas' mind—and indeed, in the others' also—the popular idea of what Messiah's kingdom should be, namely, power, prosperity, independence, for Israel. But now Judas began to suspect that when he left father, mother, houses, lands, to follow this new Moses, he had been deceived. In blind resentment he had bargained to strike at him whom, until now, he had followed. "If he be indeed Messiah he will rout his enemies when his hand is forced. If he will not deliver himself and vindicate his claims, then let him die." Perhaps this may have been the motive that drove Judas out into the night.

II. THE HUMILITY OF GREATNESS, 13: 3-5.

Untouched by the sadness and tenderness of this farewell meal, blind to the situation still, they argued among themselves who should be first, Luke 22: 24. No one was willing to perform the menial task of washing the feet of his companions—a customary and necessary service.

Imagine the feelings of the Master as he looked upon his disciples—Judas, uneasily looking for an opportunity to slip out to betray him—the others, standing on their dignity. Without a word he performed the lowly task himself.

The greatest men are often the most humble. It is the "small" man who is always standing on his dignity. True humility is not to doubt one's powers, but rightly to understand their scope. Jesus knew what he was—he was conscious of his divine mission and destiny (v. 3), and by his act of kindly courtesy he put their petty striving to shame. Years after, Peter, in one of his letters, admonished, "All of you gird yourselves with humility to serve one another," 1 Peter 5: 5. He had not forgotten the lesson of that last night together.

When Sir Bastle Frere was coming to visit a Scottish home, the master of the household, sending his servant to meet him, sought for some description by which the visitor might easily be recognized. "When the train comes in," he said, "you will see a tall gentleman helping somebody." Such was Jesus. Such is the Christian ideal.

III. THE DAILY CLEANSING, 13: 6-11.

To Peter's objections, Jesus replies that this is a symbolic act, the meaning of which will be made clear to him later on. v. 12ff. Peter, disciplined by life, purified, enlightened, some day will be able to exclaim, "I understand now what my Master meant."

The insistence on the washing (v. 8), is John's way of saying that only through baptism can one enter the Christian fellowship. As one who has come from the public baths needs only to have the stains of travel removed from his sandalled feet, so the man who has been cleansed spiritually, typified by baptism, does not need to be re-baptized after he has lapsed into wrong conduct, but to have the daily impurities removed by daily contact with his Lord. The absence of daily fellowship with Christ is the secret of our "travel-stained" church membership.

IV. AN EXAMPLE, 13: 12-15.

When Jesus said, "Ye ought, also, to wash one another's feet" (v. 14), he asked them not to perpetuate the act itself, but to practice the spirit of it. The truest following is service to our fellows in the spirit of our Master.

"Miss Britain" Leaves For Paris

Here is "Miss Britain 1932" leaving for Paris and the international pulchritude display. She hopes to be crowned "Miss Europe."

Drink More Milk

La Presse, Montreal: In all the highly civilized countries of the world the milk industry is looked upon as being of the first importance, as much because of its profits as of its importance with regard to health. Milk plays a preponderating role in the nourishment of all people. If, for example, ten million pints of milk were consumed daily by the inhabitants of Canada, the health, strength and vitality of the population would increase from day to day, from year to year, and from generation to generation. Illnesses would tend to be diminished in an amazing proportion.

AFFECTION

Just as the diminutive wren will fight hard in her nest for her young against the hungry owl, or just as a hen will gather her chickens beneath her wings, and herself bravely meet and repel the swoop of the ravenous eagle, so will maternal affection nerve her who gave us birth to shield us from all dangers which imperil either our bodies or our souls. Hence maternal affection, for this and other reasons, is truly sublime and God-like!—Dr. Davies.

Fresh Air Fashions

London.—For the spring every woman will be knitting her own jumpers again. A return to knitted sports clothes worn at all hours and on all occasions is imminent.

Once again a fresh air look is to be cultivated, and women lunching in the most exclusive clubs and restaurants of the West-end will look as though they have left their golf clubs in the lounge.

They will not have done so, of course, for their wind-tanned appearance will be purely synthetic. In compliment with the new open air modes dark brown cosmetics are already on the market.

No garment has been missed so much from the feminine wardrobe as the woollen jumper, which has been more or less out of fashion for several seasons. It will return in the spring. The new version is short and must be hand-knitted. Many of them will have light colored tops and sleeves joining a darker foundation. Light blue with emerald green and pale pink on dark red are the two smartest combinations.

Accompanying them will be knitted woollen cravat scarves in a three-colored scheme, the smartest being a tricolor design. These scarves are more than fashionable, they are a craze.

Everything that comes under the heading of "woollens" must look simple and home-made, even the suits which are actually man-tailored and pressed to perfection.

Mexican Kitchens

I wish I could show you a Mexican kitchen. They are quite out-of-the-ordinary. It is a little room with a floor of red bricks. The range is a number of oven-like holes in a ledge of brick and clay, extending two or three feet from the wall with its top about four feet from the floor. Each of the holes is one cooking place. It is filled with charcoal and the draft comes in from an opening underneath. The Mexican cook wants no other stove.

One visitor here recently sent for one of these cooking ranges. He had to tear a hole through the rear wall to make room for the chimney. After setting it up in his daughter's house, he gave instructions that it be used. Later his daughter reported that although the servants had struggled for hours, they could not make the new stove burn. When he went to investigate he found they had built the fire in the oven.

Home baking is almost unknown in Mexico but many of the Indian villages have great ovens which are used in common. The family desiring to bake brings its own fuel, or sometimes several join together in a baking day.

The cooking pots, which are sometimes copper, but more often red clay, are set on the live coals, and water is boiled, soups are made, meats are fried, and, in short, first class meals are prepared in this way. The fuel is comparatively cheap, so that a workingman's family can do its cooking on about two cents' worth a day. —Frank G. Carpenter, in "Mexico."

Fashion Nuggets

Light-weight woolens continue to grow in favor. The weaves, colorings, and styles are so chic that they walked in where a silk would fear to tread. The colors are as delicate as evening shades. Salmon, pink, azure-blue, and pistache-green are among the shades.

Fabric bags in rough, loose weave will be in demand to carry with the woolen frock or suit. Cotton mesh bags are suitable for the wash frock and novelty crepes and twills for the silk ensemble.

CLOUDS

The inner side of every cloud
Is bright and shining.
I therefore turn my clouds about,
And always wear them inside out
To show the lining.

A PURPOSE

Yet, I doubt not through the ages
One increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of man are widened
With the process of the suns.
—Tennyson.

YOUNG MAN KICKED TO DEATH

Leslie Van, aged 21, of Toronto, was almost instantly killed when a colt he was leading out of its stall on the farm of John Devereaux dealt him a terrific kick in the head, which caused a fractured skull. Dr. Joseph McAndrew, of Georgetown, was summoned, but declared life extinct. Coroner Dr. H. A. McColl, of Milton, who was notified, decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Young People had Successful Gathering

In the United Church

One of the best meetings of the season was held on Monday evening at the United Church, when the Young People of the Church held their regular society meeting. The devotions were ably conducted by Charlie Hersom and assisted by Mrs. Chas. Falconer as the musical director. Following the business Mrs. C.P. MacArthur very cleverly gave a ten minute review of the present situation in the Far East dealing with the situation as it is in Shanghai and Manchuria. This is always a part of the evening's proceedings.—Current Events.

Harry Johnston, who was leader of the program, called upon Alice and Gordon Steen to favor with a duet, which was beautifully and efficiently rendered. He called upon Rev. Mr. Purchase to introduce the speaker of the evening, Mr. W. M. Mounfield, Registrar of the College of Art, Toronto. Mr. Mounfield soon won for himself a place in the hearts of the many listeners. His address was humorous, witty and instructive. He told of the work being done by the College of Art in its four important branches, and the wonderful ability displayed by the 500 students who are registered. Among the many students there stands out head and shoulders above anyone else, Mr. Mounfield said, a Chinese lad, who has won scholarships and promises to become one of the leading artists in Canada. He showed his desire to make a name for himself when he lived on bread and water for several months in order that he might be able to follow up his course at the College. His income was small so he felt he would have to do without even the bare necessities of life to realize his objective.

Mr. Moundfield's address was a treat and he has placed the Young People under a debt of gratitude for his clear, earnest, humorous and thought-provoking address.

"We scoured a Continent"

Before installing our new system of men's laundry we scoured the whole continent of America to be sure that equipment and methods were the best and most modern. To-day there is nothing finer in men's laundry work. Men's collars are now being done with a new kind of starch and you have never before had such comfort. They are in appearance as stiff as custom demands, yet have a springy resiliency that gives the same yielding comfort as the soft collar. A MORE BEAUTIFUL CANADA

Every unimproved or unplanted home in Canada can be made more attractive by the judicious use of trees, shrubs, vines, flowers and well-kept grass. The old saying that a home is not a home until it is planted very well emphasizes the necessity and wisdom of planting. Some places have lagged behind in the matter of beautification. This is perhaps more noticeable in rural districts. However, there is abundant evidence to show that where intelligent attention is given to this matter the results may be very satisfactory indeed.

Canada is a land of rare natural beauty from the Bras d'Or Lakes of Cape Breton Island to those famous mountains whose feet are kissed by the Pacific. Nature has endowed this country with the most beautiful and the greatest variety of natural scenic grandeur to be found anywhere in the universe. Mountains, lakes, streams, forests, plains, waterfalls are to be found in great abundance. The unlovely spots are man-made and it would seem that the least we can do is to make these man-made places sufficiently attractive that they will, in some measure at least, be in keeping with the great natural beauty to be found throughout this great Dominion. The progressiveness and thrift of a community or municipality are often reflected in its appearance and the best advertising that any community can do is to present a pleasing appearance to the world—an appearance of progressiveness, thrift and industry, reflected by well-planted and well-kept public and private grounds.

We are influenced to a greater extent than we realize by our surroundings. Children are particularly sensitive in this regard. Surely a home in and around which flowers are grown is a better place to bring up children than a home where no attention whatever is paid to these friends of the plant kingdom. As the twig is bent the tree is inclined is an old saying and very applicable in the connection with the training of children. If children are taught to love flowers and to become familiar with them, their hearts will be filled with love for these things which will leave less room in their hearts and minds for the things that hurt and destroy.

We frequently meet with the objection that gardens and flowers cost too much or that they take to much time. The truth is that it is not so much the matter of money or time as it is of desire and disposition. If we are disposed to have gardens and flowers and really desire to have attractive home surroundings, we will have them no matter how busy we may be. Your nearest Experimental Farm or Agricultural College will gladly give you information regarding suitable varities for your district. The cost in any event need be only trifling and the amount spent on the nursery stock necesary to improve the average size home will be one of the finest investments that possibly can be made. It will pay great dividends in satisfaction and will increase the value of the home. Your individual efforts in making your home more attractive will improve your street. If your street is improved your city or town will be mproved, and if your city or town or township is made more beautiful you have helped to make a more beautiful Canada.

COOKSVILLE

Walter Dix, of Woodbridge, who was night watchman at Grinblatt's Garage, Hamilton, is in the General Hospital from severe burns on the hands and face, received, it is alleged, when he was driving a stolen car near Cooksville on the Dundas Highway. The car was owned by Nelson F. Corrin, 275 King Street West, and it was found wrecked and charred early on Saturday. Dix was arrested by Chief of Police at Weston, and was brought here today by Detectives Speakman and Witthun.

The car is said to have burst into flame as Dix was driving it, and he was almost trapped in the vehicle.

Present Three Plays In Aid of Churches

Three plays were presented in the town hall, Cooksville, in aid of the bulletin fund of the Cooksville, Britannia, Meadowvale United Churches. The plays and their casts were: "Mother Earth and Her Children," Mrs. C. S. Jones, Miss Elda Harris, Miss Bessie McCurry, C. B. Wright, A. A. Wilson, Leonard Sanderson, Robert Whaley. "Silence Please," Miss E. Harris, C. B. Wright, Dorothy Sanderson, Miss Mable Armstrong. "The Trysting Place," Miss Mable Armstrong, Kenneth Laughton Miss Mary Dunton, Miss Rilla Harris, Robert Whaley, William Chinnery, A. A. R. Wilson. Rev. C. Sinclair Jones was instrumental in organizing the entertainment, funds from which will defray expenses of the publication of a bulletin circulated throughout the circuit.

A petition is being circulated in Toronto township calling upon council for an audit of the township books for several years back, Deputy Reeve R. S. Whaley admitted to a reporter. It is understood to have received considerable support, especially in the north end of the township.

"There is such a petition going around," Mr. Whaley stated. "It calls for an audit of the books by chartered accountants. I expect the petition will be presented to council."

"Is council likely to grant the request?" he was asked. "They will have no choice if the petition is signed by a large number of people. I don't just know how many names will be needed."

Churches Repeat Plays

The three plays put on in aid of the Bulletin Fund of the Cooksville Circuit United Church were repeated a Meadowvale cast taking the place of the Cooksville players who presented the play—"Mother Earth and Her Children" on Thursday night. Those taking part were Mrs. Will Lambe, Miss Bona Newman, Miss Kathleen Gooderham. Thos. Reeve. Wilfred Penrose, Fred Austin, Robert Whaley.

CELEBRATED HIS 75TH BIRTHDAY

Trafalgar, Feb. 29.—S. H. Albertson, clerk of Trafalgar township for 13 years, and formerly its assessor, celebrated his 75th birthday Sunday. An active man, enjoying the best of health, he appears to be only about 55.

"Be temperate in everything," was his formula for good health and long life. "Don't eat too much and not too fast. Don't take any medicine unless you can help it," was his advice.

"I had measles when I was 49," he said, "the worst disease I ever had. I've never been sick, except for colds. When I was a young lad my parents took me around so I could have the measles early, but I never caught them."

Practically all trade was by barter when he was a lad on the farm at Postville, he recalled. Butter, eggs and other farm goods were exchanged for groceries and dry goods.

"We used to kill our own pork and team it to Toronto," he said. "In those days the roads were clay and Dundas St. was a stone road, with six toll gates between our place and Toronto. It used to cost about 30 cents for the trip.

"Sixty years ago we sold our pork for $4 a hundred, just about the price it is now. Butter was 15 cents a pound and eggs ten cents a dozen.

"I remember when we made all our sugar. We made maple sugar in the spring in big cakes, five or six inches thick, and when we wanted to sweeten something we used to scrape it off the pieces with knives. We made enough in the spring to last all year.

"We used to have better times than we do now with the automobiles," he chuckled as he recalled sleighing parties in the days when winter did bring snow.

Mr. Albertson spent the day quietly. In the morning he went to church, where he heard his nephew, Rev. W. B. Albertson, a missionary on furlough from China, preach. In the evening he was tendered a dinner by his relatives and friends at the home of his son, W. A. Albertson, who lives in Oakville. Among those who extended him birthday greetings was his elder brother, William, who will celebrate his 82nd birthday next May. An elder sister, Mrs. E. J. Harbell, lives in Vancouver.

Picturesque "Home" for Wild Life in France

There has been constituted in the south of France a national reserve for wild life which, in some ways, is the most picturesque natural home for bird and beast to be found in Europe. It is situated on the Camargue, the island famous in old French history and legend and well known to visitors to Aries in Provence. Really the delta of the River Rhone, entirely formed by alluvial deposits, it is in great part a savage region of marsh and prairie.

The Societe Nationale d'Acclimatation, which has charge of the reserve, protects about 50,000 acres as tenant, and it is proposed to increase the area ultimately to 100,000 acres. Even after a relatively short experience, however, it has been observed that the migratory birds of many species which have always used the island as a landing station are increasing in numbers. For many it is the last hopping-off place for Africa. Besides every sort of wild duck in immeasurable numbers—storks, herons and egrets—there are many rare birds which cannot be seen elsewhere in Europe. Perhaps the most astonishing are the pink flamingoes, which are to be found in flocks of 3,000 or 4,000 together.

Little-Known Men Who Are Worthy of Honor

It is suggested that a statue be erected to the memory of the man who first introduced the orange to Great Britain. Japan already has a statue to its first orange bringer. France has put up a statue to Marie Harel, the inventor of Camembert cheese, and Offenburg, in Germany boasts a statue to Sir Francis Drake for bringing the potato from the New world to the Old. But nobody knows who brought the oranges to Britain. They came from Spain about the year 1290, but beyond that there is no record. The first man to import oranges in quantity was Benjamin Bovill, a London fruit broker, the centenary of whose death recently occurred. The man who first brought bananas to Britain is just as worthy of a statue to anyone connected with oranges. Worthiest, perhaps, of any is Sir Richard Weston, who flourished in the reign of Charles I. Though very few people have heard of him it was he who introduced turnips, clover and other sown grasses into Britain and so laid the foundation of modern agriculture.—London Mail.

Blinds Not "Venetian"

Venetian blinds, now becoming popular in America, are not, and never were, really Venetian, Home and Field says.

"While the roller shade is purely an American invention, the use of venetian blinds, or tilting slats, dates back nearly 300 years to the West Indies," the article says. "The blinds now in use are quite similar, but with added improvements. Apparently there is no authoritative information as to why they are called venetian. Careful research shows that they were not seen in Venice until many years after they had been in use elsewhere. It has been suggested, however, that they may have been invented by a Venetian trader making his home in the West Indies and named in his honor."

The Three of Them

The following incident is reported by Mrs. A. M. G.:

"A little five-year-old girl was added to my class last Sunday, and when the lady who brought her introduced her to me she said: 'She was born in Egypt.'

"I thought no more about it, and when class work began, I told the little tots about Moses. The little newcomer said she had heard about Moses; and then, to interest her, I said, 'Moses was a Jew, but he was born in Egypt.'

"'Yes,' exclaimed the new child, 'all three of us were born in Egypt: my sister, and I, and Moses.'"—Kansas City Star.

Make Life a Battle

Young people like to be doing things. A keen student of youth has said that the average young person gets a far greater thrill out of hewing his own pathway through the world than in rolling along in a luxurious car over a roadway that other hands have prepared. But, after all, no one can wholly remove from us all responsibility or fight all our battles for us. Nobody has a right to find life uninteresting or unrewarding who sees within the sphere of his own activity a wrong he can help to remedy, or within himself an evil he can hope to overcome.—Montreal Family Herald.

Says New Buildings Ungodly

"There is a saying that God made the country and the devil made the towns," said Sir Thomas Comyn-Platt in an address before the council for the Preservation of Rural England, in London recently. "When I walk in London and see the buildings they are erecting I can quite believe they are not the work of the Almighty. England owes everything to the country."

Health in Economy

In order to determine the effect of a special diet, nine young women, students at the Washington Missionary college, lived four weeks on food costing 36 cents a day apiece. At the end of the period physicians pronounced them fitter, fatter and fairer.

Kiangwan Seized By Japanese Land New Army — Bid For Peace

Tokio Restates Position to Powers in Significant Move to End Battle; Guns Shake Shanghai as Troops Land —Presents Five Points as Settlement Basis Before Assembly Meets

Tokio, Feb. 29 (Monday).—It was learned from a reliable source that Japanese and Chinese representatives met to-day aboard the British flagship in Shanghai and discussed terms for a truce. The conversations were submitted to the respective governments and not immediately divulged.

The conference was arranged by British Minister Lampson, and British Admiral Sir Howard Kelly acted as observer. The Japanese representatives were Admiral Kichisaburo Nomaru and Yosuki Mutsuoka, chief Japanese spokesman at Shanghai. Wellington Koo and the chief of staff of the 19th Chinese Army represented China.

Shanghai, Feb. 29 (Monday).—Chinese and Japanese artillery shook the countryside to-day in a bombardment which greeted fresh Japanese troops pouring into Shanghai from Woosung, and punctuated reports of further efforts toward peace between the rival forces in this vicinity.

Kiangwan, focal point on the Chapei-Woosung battle line, had fallen to the Japanese, apparently without a struggle, after days of attack there.

Tme big guns of both sides roared in Chapei and beyond toward Kiangwan, however, splitting the thick atmosphere hanging over Shanghai in a continuation of the conflict.

The shelling began soon after daylight and continued intermittently well into the morning.

If peace was near, it was not evident along the battle front.

General Shirakawa said the Japanese command expected large Japanese forces to arrive in Shanghai to-day and to-morrow.

At least 500 new Japanese troops came ashore within the International Settlement, landing at the docks of the Japanese steamship line, Osaka Shosen Kaisha, a stone's throw below the Japanese Consulate on the banks of the Whangpoo River.

More Soldiers Waiting

Generally accepted reports said the major portion of the Eleventh Japanese Division, the spearhead of which arrived yesterday, was on transports awaiting boats to bring the soldiers ashore. Unverified reports on the waterfront said twelve newly arrived troopships lay outside Woosung, waiting to discharge their men.

The Fourteenth Japanese Division was believed near by.

Japanese sources said the peacetime strength of the Eleventh and Fourteenth Divisions was 10,000 men each, while their war strength was 20,000 each.

Although the Japanese soldiers were increasing numerically and guns continued to roar, reports of peace efforts were said to be coming with greater strength from Japanese circles.

After the Japanese reinforcements from the transport Florida Maru came ashore, they arrived within the confines of the wharves, yards and warehouses, while additional military supplies were unloaded. Conspicuous among them were a number of aeroplanes.

The planes, unassembled and in boxes, were swung from the ship to waiting trucks and rushed to the nearby Japanese flying field, along the border of the International Settlement, where the work of assembling them went forward rapidly.

Kiangwan Falls

Kiangwan Village is now held by the Japanese. The Chinese admit this, but deny they were forced out by their foes. They assert they had to evacuate the village because of the dead and the debris, while the Japanese say the Chinese were forced out by an attack on Saturday afternoon.

The Chinese are entrenched west of Kiangwan, and reinforcements have been sent to them, the vanguards of three of General Chiang Kai-shek's divisions having entered that sector and Chapei yesterday.

The defenders who yesterday surrendered the western end of Kiangwan Village ruthlessly plundered all houses that had not been wrecked by Japanese bombs or shells, and then set fire to the buildings, according to Major Kenkichi Uyeda's spokesman. Major Miyawaki said he participated in the final attack on Kiangwan.

Only twenty terrorized and hungry Chinese women and children were found. They and hundreds of famished and ferocious dogs had survived seven and a half days of shelling and bombing.

Proposal to League

Geneva.—The Japanese Government conducted the most significant diplomatic negotiations of the Far Eastern war crisis in preparation for a complete re-statement of her case against China before the forthcoming League of Nations general assembly meeting.

The negotiations were described as a peace move. They involved all powers represented on the League of Nations council and the United States, it was understood.

Members of the Japanese delegation have secretly visited almost all delegates to the council, in addition to sending identical memoranda to them, as individual representatives of their governments, stating the Japanese proposals for cessation of fighting at Shanghai.

Naotake Sato began conferences with Joseph Paul-Boncour, French president of the council, and Paul Hymans of Belgium, who is most likely to be chosen president of the General Assembly. It was understood Ambassador Katsuji Debuchi at Washington conferred with Secretary Henry L. Stimson.

All were informed of the Japanese terms under which a lasting truce might be developed, preferably through a round-table meeting of representatives of the powers at Shanghai. It was considered significant that the Manchurian situation was not mentioned in the Memorandum as Japan considers it separate from the Shanghai warfare.

Five Points in Memorandum

The memorandum was understood to contain the following five points:

1—Japan declares she has no intention of increasing her concession in Shanghai and that her armed forces are there only to protect Japanese lives and interests. Japan is willing to retire to within the international settlement if the C' ese withdraw to a point consistent with safety—presumably 12½ miles from Shanghai.

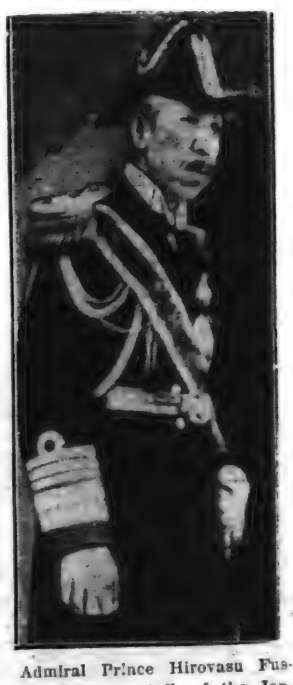
2.—Japan points out that the Chinese 19th Route Army, which has won fame defending Shanghai, is comprised of "dangerous elements engaged in Communist agitation." In this connection the memorandum noted specifically the 61st division, commanded by General Chien. It was declared that General Chien was responsible for British and other intervention at Shanghai in 1927 and that, while he is there, there cannot be any degree of safety or order.

3.—Japan suggests that, if both Chinese and Japanese withdraw, there should be a round-table conference of the interested powers, probably to establish a neutral zone at Shanghai.

4.—The arrival of fresh Japanese troops in Shanghai is only for safety, and in no way compromises Japan's attitude as explained in the memorandum.

5.—Japan denies reports that she contemplates establishing neutral zones in cities other than Shanghai.

Missouri Makes Survey To Check Grasshoppers



A careful survey to determine the condition of the overwintering eggs of grasshoppers is being made throughout the State of Missouri, by the extension entomologist of the College of Agriculture in co-operation with the county extension agents.

Due to the abundance of grasshoppers last Fall and the mild Winter, it is realized that the pest may do much damage again next Summer. The United States Department of Agriculture is considering plans for extensive work on grasshopper control in the areas devastated last year, and this survey is being made by the College of Agriculture in order that it may co-operate more effectively.

War Which is Not War

New York Evening Post.—Whatever may or may not be done to constrain Japan or to affix the responsibility for the events now occurring in Manchuria and Shanghai, the League should at least prevent the establishment of the precedent that it is no longer necessary to declare war. Under the old rules there were certain obligations and responsibilities which the belligerents acknowledge, but what is to happen to the paraphernalia of international law and the rights of neutrals if one nation can attack another, as Japan has attacked China, without being obliged to make any declaration of the war it is actually waging?

For truth it is ever the fitting time who waits till circumstances completely favour his undertaking will never accomplish anything.—Martin Luther.

U.S. Akron Badly Damaged Dashed to Earth By Wind

Lakehurst, N.J.—Repairs to the great naval dirigible Akron, dashed to earth by a strong gust of wind, last week, will require several weeks, said Captain Harry A. Schoemaker, commandant of the Lakehurst Air Station.

The accident, which nearly made a total wreck of the big ship, disrupted the plans of six Congressmen who were waiting for a ride in the Akron's cabins, and sent them back to Washington disappointed.

Throughout a misty morning, the Congressmen, under the chaperonage of Rear Admiral William A. Moffatt and Commander Garland Fulton, had been waiting for the weather to clear.

Fifty men, aided by the mobile "mast" to which the bow of the ship was attached, had trundled the big bag out of the barn. There came a sudden gust of wind. The stern of the ship banged to earth. There was a sound of ripping fabric and wrenching steel. A stabilizing fin was crushed. Great patches of the Akron's underbody hung clear from the smooth silver belly and there was a gaping hole in her rudder.

Regaining control over the airship, for the wind had dropped, the ground crew nudged the Akron back towards the hangar and moored it successfully.

20,000 Chicks Per Week Raised at Missouri Hatchery

The largest "chick" plant in the world uses gas for a variety of heating purposes. This mammoth hatchery and poultry raising establishment located in Jefferson City, Mo., produces 20,000 chicks each week. The incubators hold 96,000 eggs. Thousands of chicks are produced weekly from this most modern "chicken factory."

Gas was recently installed for the three steam boilers that are necessary to keep the ten great brooder rooms and the rest of the building at the proper temperature. Each room has its own prescribed, predetermined temperature, which must be kept constant day and night.

Among other pieces of gas equipment in the plant is a rotisserie which will barbecue sixteen chickens at a time. A gas soup kettle is also under consideration for the purpose of aiding in the canning of chicken soup. There is also complete laundry equipment.

Sweden to Stay off Gold

Stockholm.—The Swedish Government has indicated its intention to extend until May 15 the suspension of the gold standard, according to news items in last week's papers. The present suspension order expired Feb. 29th.

Home-Made Money Used By Farmers

Wanted Money to Buy Milk for Cheese so Printed Own Coupons

Saskatoon.—"If the banks won't lend you any money make your own money," farmer co-operation at Leroy, Sask., say. Last summer they had a cheese factory which had run several years ago, but closed down when the price of wheat was high and farmers stopped milking cows.

They wanted to reopen and buy milk to make cheese, but cheese is a commodity that is not immediately ready for sale. It must mature for several weeks.

Unable to borrow money from the banks on the security of their cheese, they printed coupons paying 50 cents per 100 pounds of milk with promise of redemption when the cheese was sold. As the cheese was sold these coupons were redeemed and these farmer financiers were able to pay themselves an interim dividend of 30 cents and a final payment of 17.9 cents per hundred that the farmers got for their milk. All of the coupons were redeemed within two weeks of the time the last cheese was sold.

Mexico to Add 7,000 Miles To Highways This Year

Mexico City.—Mexico's 1932 road building program calls for the construction of 11,000 kilometers (about 7,000 miles), of highways, according to the Communications Department. About 100 primary roads and connecting links are included in the projects for the year.

Although government departments generally will operate on reduced budgets this year, there will be no reduction of the highway budget, the Secretary of Communications announced.

The two major highways of the nation, from Mexico City to Laredo and from Mazatlan to Matamoras, will be finished and opened before September 1, he said. These highways probably will be dedicated during the Independence Day celebration September 16. The highway from El Paso to Chihuahua City will be finished July 1. Eighteen kilometers of this road were completed recently and the work is being pushed steadily.

Revenue Stamps Bring Six Million For 1931

Ottawa—Sale of revenue stamps for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, brought in $6,156,313.20 and for the eight-months' period ending Jan. 31, last, $4,147,159, Arthur Sauve, postmaster general, told P. J. Veniot (L. Gloucester) in the House of Commons last week.

Japanese Plane Takes Toll

Canada's Exports To Gt. Britain Show Increase

Report Shows $1,889,000 Gain For January This Year

Ottawa.—An increase of $1,889,000 in domestic exports to the United Kingdom was the outstanding feature of Canadian trade in January. That export increased from $7,982,000 in January, 1931, to $9,871,000 in January, 1932, according to the summary issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Lowered valuations of goods generally in the 12 months indicate a still greater increase in the export of quantities.

At the same time the export to the United States, a trade that has declined seriously since the Smoot-Hawley tariff went into effect in June, 1930, decreased by $4,767,000, or from $22,053,000 in January, 1931, to $17,286,000 in January, 1932. Agricultural and vegetable products, once a heavy export to the United States, totalled only $520,000 last month. Agricultural products represented almost one-half of the increased export to Great Britain, or from $3,667,000 to $4,929,000. Animals and animal products to the United Kingdom increased from $1,977,000 to $2,293,000, ments, leather and fish showing gains.

Other advances in exports to Great Britain included wood, wood products and paper from $662,000 to $869,000, machinery from $110,000 to $148,000, non-ferrous metal products from $1,063,000 to $1,150,000, non-metallic mineral products from $42,000 to $43,000, and chemicals from $100,000 to $215,000.

Women Delegates of League Confident Peace is Coming

Geneva — An optimistic keynote marked addresses delivered here on Sunday by two British delegates to the World's Disarmament Conference.

Miss Winnifred Kydd, Montreal, Que., member of the Canadian delegation, stated recent speeches of leading delegates from the various countries indicated the aspirations of the peoples of the world for assured peace. Despite some vital differences in point of view, Miss Kydd proceeded, it is abundantly evident that every country in the world is anxious to make real progress toward disarmament.

The Montreal delegate declared the decision to use the draft convention as the framework of discussion had been encouraging to those who had spent years of work in perfecting the draft.

Mrs. Margaret Corbett Ashby, of Great Britain, expressed confidence that despite the doubts and difficulties confronting the conference there was every reason to hope that for the first time in history "the murderous weapons of warfare" would be willingly laid aside by the countries of the world.

Japan Becoming Aware of Isolation

Alarmed by Protests of Powers—Visualizes Possible Boycott

London.—Japanese authorities are gravely concerned with the possibility that Japan will be isolated in the Shanghai conflict, the Daily Express correspondent at Tokio reported Saturday night.

The Japanese are much more worried than previously, the dispatch said. They believe there is grave danger of an anti-Japanese boycott in the United States; in the difficult financial situation in Japan; in the concerted protests of the Great Powers; and in the difficulties faced by the Japanese soldiers in Shanghai.

It was reported that General Ludendorff, head of the German Imperial army, has been invited to take supreme command of the Chinese army and reorganize it on a scientific basis.

Butter Export for 12 Months Nine Times Previous Figure

Ottawa, Ont.—Canadian butter exports in the last two months were more than nine times what they were in the previous year. Last month the quantity sent abroad was 112,600 pounds, valued at $28,046, compared with 65,900 pounds at $23,459 in January, 1931. In the twelve months ended in January the total exported was 10,727,200 pounds at $2,334,440, compared with 1,185,000 at $407,135 in the previous twelve months.

Export of cheese last month was down somewhat, being 751,600 pounds, compared with 918,100 in January, 1931. The total for the twelve months ending in January, 1932, however, was 84,621,900 pounds, compared with 79,530,100 in the previous twelve months.

Canadian export of eggs in December amounted to 20,810 dozen, 14,940 dozen going to Newfoundland alone. In the twelve months ended in January the export amounted to 642,560 dozen, compared with 175,205 last year.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 12

Many times in this series of articles the writer has warned players against over-bidding where the situation did not justify it. In other words, don't overbid unless the possible gain is fairly equal to the possible loss. The usual way for the thoughtless player to make this mistake is to bid a minor suit, clubs or diamonds, when the bidding indicates that he has no chance for game. Why take a chance of only making three or four odd in clubs or diamonds when, if you are doubled, you may lose a big penalty?

A score less than game is only of value about once in fifteen deals; so it is a good rule never to bid to make a score less than game if there is any risk attached. There is practically nothing to gain by the bid and so much to lose. One very good player at one of the local clubs seems to have a weakness for this kind of bidding. The other night, for example, he held the following hand, A's in the diagram:

Hearts 10
Clubs—K, 9, 8, 6, 5, 2
Diamonds—A, 8, 4
Spades—K, 10, 3

No score, rubber game, at Auction. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A passed, Y bid two hearts and B and Z passed. At this point A thoughtlessly decided to bid three clubs. The bidding should have indicated that he had no possible chance for game. Z's no trump bid, Y's two-heart bid and B's pass were all indicators that Y Z held the best combined hands. For that reason A couldn't hope to score game. On the other hand, he had a good chance to save game. His hand would probably be worth three tricks with hearts as trumps so that if his partner could take but one trick he would save the game.

A, however, thought of none of these very evident facts and bid three clubs, which Y doubled a : defeated by 400 points. If Y Z had played the hand at hearts, they could have scored only three odd as B would have taken two heart tricks, and A would have taken two tricks. A's bid in this instance cost 400 points when he should have known beforehand that he had no chance for game and a fair chance to save game. Beware of such bids, and of any bids where the possible risk is ot offset by an equal chance for game.

At Contract, of course, A, with the foregoing hand, also should pass.

Example Hand No. 1

	Hearts—A, J, 10, 5
Y	Clubs—K, 10, 9, 8, 5
A B	Diamonds—K, 10, 9
Z	Spades—K

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one diamond, A one spade and Y passed. What should B bid with the foregoing hand?

AUCTION BIDDING:

B should bid one no trump. The singleton spade is a danger spot and he should warn his partner at once that his hand is weak in spades. The no trump bid is justifiable as he has a fair all around hand and a sure stopper in the diamond suit. With two or less trumps of your partner's suit, always warn him of the fact, if possible.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

B should bid two clubs and then, if overbid by partner or opponents, should bid the hea suit.

Example Hand No. 2

Hearts—none
Clubs—8, 4, 2
Diamonds—9, 4, 3
Spades—A, K, Q, J, 8, 5, 2

A	B
	Z

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A two hearts, Y two spades, B three hearts, Z three no trump and A doubled. What should Y now bid with the foregoing hand?

ACTION BIDDING:

Y should bid four spades. If Z has a sound three no trump bid, Y should have no trouble in making four spades. The danger of letting Z play the hand . . no t . p is thr . may not have a spade and Y has no re-entry card. The four spade bid seems the proper one.

CONTRACT BIDDING:

Rt Contract, the bidding would be the same.

Problem

	Hearts—A Clubs—K, J, 7 Diamonds—A Spades—none
Hearts—3 Clubs—none Diamonds—6, 5, 2 Spades—10	Y A B Z	Hearts—none Clubs—A, Q Diamonds—Q, 10 Spades—J
	Hearts—2 Clubs—none Diamonds—K, J, 7 Spades—A

There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win four of the five tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the ace of spades and discard the ace of hearts from Y's hand. He shou then lead the deuce of hearts and let A win the trick with the trey. On this trick Y should discard the ace of diamonds. A is now in the lead and must lead a diamond. No matter what cards Y and B play, Z must now win the balance of the tricks.

It is an easy problem and unusual only because of Y's discard of his two aces.

To take things as they be—
That's my philosophy.
No use to holler, mope or cuss—
If they was changed they might be wuss.

If rain is pourin' down,

I ain't a-learnin' we'll be hit,
But grin thet I aint in it

If I got deep in debt—
It hasn't happened yet—
And owed a man two dollars, Gee!
Why I'd be glad it wasn't three.

If someone come along
And tried to do me wrong,

To thank the Lord I wasn't him.

So dark there wasn't light
Somewhere about it I took care
To strike a match and find out where.

Customer—"My dear, haven't you gained about ten pounds since the Christmas holidays?"

Her Friend—"Yes, it was those darn plump puddings!"

Quiz—"What's the difference between a husband and an ice man?"

Quip—"My feeble brain won't answer."

Quiz—"Well, a husband has only one one wife and an ice man takes his pick."

A man was stranded on an unknown island. He was afraid of cannibals, so he moved very cautiously. As he was climbing up a small hill he heard a voice: "Who in —— trumped my ace?" The man lifted his eyes to the sky above and said: "Thank Heaven, there are Christians on this island."

Speaker—"And where, I ask you, is Julius Caesar? Where is Attila the Hun? Where are Moses, Oliver Cromwell, Charlemagne, Hannibal?"

Enthusiastic Usher—"Stand up, boys, so's the gentleman can see you."

Mrs. Henry Peck—"Let's see, what is the name of that place where so much was done towards promoting peace in the world?"

Henry—"Reno, my dear."

Clem—"Why do they call a sailboat she?"

Alex—"Because it makes its best showing in the wind."

Mom—"Yeah."

Pop—"Hurray! Funny papers tomorrow."

Newly Rich in Texas

A clerk in a country store in a little town in East Texas sold a lease on his 40 acres for $10,000. One of his friends asked him what he was going to do, now that he was rich, and he replied, "Well, I put the check in the bank and they won't do anything about it until it clears. If I get the money, I'm going to quit work and try and get caught up with my cat-fishing."

This story is told without comment and without attempting to point a moral. A little girl, after Sunday school, was asked by her mother, "What does your nice teacher do?" The answer was prompt and certain. "She just collects the money."

Friend—"How did they treat you in Scotland?"

Visitor—"Reluctantly."

Of course the man who blows his own horn always thinks the rest of the band is playing the wrong piece. How dependent we are on others; the reputation of ourselves and our businesses is at the mercy, say, of our errand boy or a casual talker. There's just one consolation about both death and taxes. When you finish one you're through with the other. The most envied bride in a younger set is one who has a sufficient number of dishes to serve three meals a day for three consecutive days without washing a single dish. Man sweats in a woolen coat so milady may keep serenely cool in almost nothing.

The importance of the jacket-like dress can't be over-estimated.

A rust shade tweed-like woolen made this jaunty model. The cross closure of the simple bodice is youthfully slimming. The straight skirt widens its hem through inverted plaits that kick out in graceful flare in motion.

It's very attractive in black woolen with vivid shiny red buttons, red patent leather belt and white pique collar.

Vivid green woolen, with brown suede belt, brown buttons and brown woolen collar is another interesting scheme.

Style No. 2550 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 36 and 38 inches bust.

Size 16 requires 2½ yards 54-inch, with ¼ yard 35-inch contrasting.

Oldest Map in World Discovered in Mesopotamia

Cambridge, Mass.—The oldest map in the world, so far as the science of cartography has yet been able to discover, drawn more than 4,000 years ago on a clay tablet three inches square, is the unique archeological discovery of excavators for the Semitic and Fogg Museums o. Harvard University working in Irak, according to an announcement made public here by Harvard University.

The map so small that it can be held in the hollow of the hand, was found more than twenty feet underground, so that the merest accident of circumstance revealed the discovery to science and history. When found it was almost indistinguishable from the clay fill and sediment in which it was firmly embedded. It required five weeks of careful drying, treatment and ultimate baking at a high temperature before the surrounding clay could be removed from the tablet and the map itself revealed.

Three of the four points of the compass are marked on the borders of the map in the ancient symbols of the people who preceded the builders of the Nusi temple. It is, apparently, according to authorities on the Sumerian and Akkadian languages, a map of 356 agn of garden land, belonging to Azala, or Shat-Azala, who clearly must have been a man of wealth. Place names appear on the tablet, and a river runs from north to south, dividing into three streams at the foot of the map. Mountains flank the river valley on east and west; these are drawn in the characteristic Babylonian style of many centuries later.

Plan Glassless Buildings

New York.—The buildings at the Chicago World Fair of 1933, which will cover three and a half miles of waterfront on the shores of Lake Michigan and several artificial islands, will be virtually without windows, according to Harvey Wiley Corbett, chairman of the architecture commission appointed for the fair. Exhibits, Mr. Corbett explained, are displayed better with artificial light than by daylight.

"Artificial light," Mr. Corbett said, "will become a most important factor in design, not only of the interior of the buildings, but on the exterior as well. It will be possible even in the daytime to change the color of the buildings by the playing of light symphonies upon their surfaces."

There is nothing more pitable in the world than an irresolute man, oscillating between two feelings, who would willingly unite the two, and who does not perceive that nothing can unite them.—Goethe.

Users of Telephone Increase By 20,000

Report Shows Canada Led World in Estimated Number of Calls Per Capita in 1930

A recent report just issued shows that 20,000 were added to Canada's already large number of telephone users, although unsatisfactory business conditions did affect the telephone industry. This increase was the smallest annual growth in a period of 15 years. Nevertheless, there was a decided advance recorded. The Eastern Provinces all showed increases, and though there were declines in the Prairie Provinces, the number of instruments in use rose during the year by 20,039. The number of telephones in use at the end of the year was 1,402,861.

The average number of telephones per thousand of population was in 1930 the largest of any country in the world except the United States. The average in Canada was 141.1 per thousand, while in the United States it was 164. The total number of telephones was exceeded only by the United States, Germany, and Gt. Britain and Northern Ireland. The number of telephones in the United States was 20,068,023, in Germa y 3,182,305, and in Britain and Northern Ireland 1,886,726, the figures all being for 1929. The only other countries approaching Canada's density were New Zealand with 103 and Denmark with 96 per thousand.

In estimated number of telephone calls per capita Canada led the world. Completed calls or conversations in the Dominion in 1930, according to an estimate by the official statisticians, averaged 250.5 per capita and 1,872 per telephone. The United States with 231 conversations per capita, and New Zealand with 212, were the only other countries with averages of over 150 in 129. The estimated number of completed calls in Canada during 1930 was 2,626,752,502, including 37,496,867 long distance calls. The long distance calls were actual counts and the local calls were estimates based on counts made periodically by systems operating almost 90 per cent. of all telephones in Canada.

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, tosses and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made specially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a young infant to relieve colic. Yet it is as effective for older children. Nerves Kept Her Awake

Mrs. Scheer Says She Sleeps Like Log Since Taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Feels So Refreshed in Morning.

"I can truthfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for all those suffering from a rundown state of nerves," writes Mrs. Scheer, of Prince Albert, Sask. "My nerves were in such a rundown condition that I could not sleep at night. Many nights I could not lie in bed at all, and would get up and walk the floor. A friend told me her mother was in the same condition and had found relief by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I have taken four boxes, and can now sleep like a log, and I feel so refreshed in the morning. I do my own housework and am a dressmaker besides."

The reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are so effective in such cases is that they create new rich blood, which supplies to the nerves the very elements they need. Equally effective for all rundown or anaemic conditions. Try them. At your druggist's. 50c a package. 276

WHEN FOOD SOURS

ABOUT two hours after eating many people suffer from sour stomachs. They call it indigestion. It means that the stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. There is excess acid. The way to correct it is with an alkali, which neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

The right way is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia—just a tasteless dose in water. It is pleasant, efficient and harmless. Results come almost instantly. It is the approved method. You will never use another when you know.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store.

The ideal dentifrice for clean teeth and healthy gums is Phillips' Dental Magnesia, a superior toothpaste that safeguards against acid-mouth. (Made in Canada.)

Nothing gives greater value than your telephone — it costs so little and is worth so much.

The Best Cake Jim Ever Tasted

"It's surprising how things go astray. When I was visiting my sister Martha she gave me a new recipe for lemon cake. Yesterday, when I specially wanted it, I couldn't find it anywhere."

"So you had to do without it, I suppose?"

"Oh no, I just called Martha on the telephone and she gave me the recipe over again. Jim said it was the best cake he ever tasted, and I said that it's lucky we have a telephone."

Jack Frost—King of Architects

Jack Frost, nature's greatest architect, completed yet another wonderful job, at Banff, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Rocky Mountains, this winter, when he designed and built the columns of the ice-castle of the Carnival Queen. As is easily seen by the picture, the two great pillars are the outstanding features of the palace. They were built by putting into play, one month before the opening of the great event, two vertical streams of water. Then, more men got busy and built the connecting wall of gleaming transparent ice-blocks, between the two pillars, and set in front of it the great throne of ice, from which the ceremonies of the Carnival were conducted, in the presence of thousands of spectators from all parts of Canada and the United States. Snow and ice contests of all kinds, winter sports in profusion, including the Alberta Provincial Skating Championships, went to make up the programme, which terminated in the election of Miss Margaret J. Nicol, of Drumheller, Alta., well-known as a tennis and hockey enthusiast, as Carnival Queen for 1933. Her picture is shown inset.

To the Editor:

Regarding the withdrawal of the grant for the Home Demonstrator, by the Peel County Council. Without this grant the Home Demonstrator will be unable to carry on her work. I wonder if the council realize just what this will mean to the women and girls of Peel County. The Short Course in Home Economics, which is held each year, is just one phase of our Demonstrator's valuable work in the community. In this course girls are taught that while many things contribute to health, the foremost consideration is food. This is recognized today as never before, and those who regard their own welfare and desire to give their family the best possible equipment for the stress of modern life are anxious to learn how to choose foods wisely as well as the best methods of preparation. This is very ably taught by our capable Home Demonstrator. In this way many receive valuable instruction through lectures and food demonstrations, that otherwise would not have the opportunity of obtaining this information. She is also responsible for the organization of many Junior Institutes.

The work of this organization is of great value to the community. It consists of more than merely acquiring knowledge it includes the application of that knowledge and training, in carrying on work, first of all in the home, also in the community. For unless one can put their training into practise in every day life, it is of little value. Through the Home Demonstrator the Juniors are taught to apply their knowledge of Home Economics in the planning and preparation of properly balanced meals, in the adoption of modern more efficient methods and labor saving devices in executing their daily household tasks and in making the homes and surroundings more attractive. The Home Demonstrator also plays a very active part in many competitions held in the county, such as, musical festivals, debates, dramatic clubs, public speaking and garden contests, and judging competition work. To have this work cut off would mean a great loss to the young people of this county, who with their energy, enthusiasm, broad vision and intelligence, play no small part in the building up of the social and home life of the community.

President, Caledon Short Course.

Here and There

New Brunswick will be selected as the training ground for the Boston Bruins Hockey Club prior to the 1933 N. H. L. season. About 40 players will go into the hunting camps some time around October 15.

Autumn sowing of all grains in Soviet Russia last year amounted to 95,400,000 acres, representing a decrease of 10.8 per cent from the official fall sowing programme mapped out by the government, according to a recent cable received by the Canadian Department of Trade and Commerce.

Week-end trips, so popular last year on Canadian Railway lines, will remain in force this year after February 29, the date set for their discontinuation. The Canadian Passenger Association has reached this decision under pressure of public demand. Under this arrangement, round trip tickets between any Canadian stations for any week-end are offered by the railways at the rate of one and a quarter times the regular single fare.

Two Alberta speed-skating records were smashed at the recent Banff Winter Sports Carnival. The 220 yards event was won by A. E. Hardy, of Saskatoon, in 20 seconds flat, 4-5 seconds better than the former Alberta record. The Three mile event was also taken by Hardy in 9 minutes and 2-5 seconds, being 23 and 3-5 seconds less than the former Alberta record. Miss Margaret J. Nicol, of Drumheller, was elected Carnival Queen and will reign over the Banff Winter Sports Carnival of 1933.

Travellers in Canada at Eastertide will have the benefit of the same ticket privileges as were granted them at Christmas, according to a recent announcement made by the Canadian Passenger Association on behalf of the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways. This concession will be fare and a quarter for round trip generally to the travelling public, between Thursday, March 24 and Sunday, March 27 with return available up to Tuesday, March 29.

Fifty-seven 10-year leases of salmon and trout fishing rivers, lakes and streams in New Brunswick will be put up to public auction at the Parliament Building Fredericton, April 7 next, at upset prices ranging between $25 per annum and $12,000 per annum, is the announcement of Hon. L. P. D. Tilley, provincial Minister of Lands and Mines. They represent the pick of salmon fishing facilities on this side of the American continent.

At the close of a meeting of the directors of the Canadian Pacific held at Montreal, February 8, President E. W. Beatty announced that in order to help western farmers over the present period of depression the Company has offered to write-off interest on land contracts for the year 1931. This offer will be extended to the year 1932 on condition that the contract holder pays his taxes and one full installment on his contract this year. Further encouragement in the form of a bonus will be given to those who make payments on account of arrears of interest, the bonus to be in proportion to payment made. This should be of great assistance to contract holders on the Company's lands who have suffered through depressed markets or crop failures. (524)

BRAMPTON

Whispered rumors of a possible clash at the annual meeting of Peel County Milk Producers' Association proved groundless. The meeting was much touted, due to the unsatisfactory arrangements existing between shippers, truckers and Toronto dairies, but no action was produced at the meeting, and not a single resolution was passed.

Robert McCulloch who explained the step recently taken in accepting $1.45 per hundred pounds of milk, told the meeting which was one of the largest ever held in the Oddfellows' Hall, that as far as he could see, the farmer had no redress immediately at hand. The time would come, he thought, when the farmers would have to band together, and distribute their own dairy products, but he could not see the advantage of such a step at present.

One of the reasons that the market has been unfavorable, said Mr. McCulloch, was that many of the shippers had failed to standardize their cream, and had not produced an even quantity and quality during the entire year. "Second grade cream," said Mr. McCulloch, "should be put into axle grease. We are soon going to pay more for oil and grease than we will be getting for cream," he added. Mr. McCulloch would be glad to see an investigation of the entire situation.

Other speakers were Prof. G. I. Christie, of the O.A.C., Guelph, who told the meeting that the Ontario Government had sent an investigator to Denmark, where conditions were found to be even worse than they are in Ontario, in spite of a high degree of co-operation amongst the farmers. Over-production has been the downfall of the farmer in Denmark, he said.

W. E. Brecken, Bronte, and E. H. Clark, Aurora, president and director of the Toronto Milk Producers' Association, told briefly of the conditions which the organization has to combat.

Directors elected at the meeting were: John Anderson, Bolton; D. J. Lammy, Malton, H. A. Dolson, Georgetown; Robert McCulloch, Brampton; W. J. Fraser, Streetsville; Norman Cameron, Norval. At a meeting of the directors, H. A. Dolson was returned to office as president, and Robert McCulloch re-appointed secretary.

Although crown counsel voiced the fear the court was being used to collect a civil debt and remarked the defendant had offeredwhat would seem a fair defence in a civil court. Vincent T. Owen was found guilty by Magistrate L. J. C. Bull of obtaining goods by false pretences.

Sentence was suspended for three months, the magistrate ordering Owen to pay costs and voicing the hope he make a settlement with Lewis Shaver before the three months elapsed. The charge was that Owen had given a lien on a truck in the name of his wife.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Lucy Schied and Alex. Dick were declared winners in the oratorical contest at Streetsville High School. They will receive gold medals and are now qualified to enter the semi-finals for Peel County.

Other pupils who took part in the competition were Mae Treanor, Wesley Wolfe and Harold Treanor. Mrs. H. Couse, Mrs. C. P. M. Arthur and H. W. Gerhart acted as judges.

COUNTY CENTRAL WELFARE BOARD

All welfare organizations of the County of Peel are asked to send representatives to a meeting to be held in the Court Room, Brampton, on Thursday, March 10th, at eight o'clock. The purpose is to organize a central body which will aid in gathering information by surveys, assist in interesting welfare groups in needy cases and in every way co-operate with existing organizations and prevent overlapping.

It is hoped that the Minister of Agriculture, Honourable T. L. Kennedy, and the Minister of Public Welfare, Honourable W. G. Martin, will be present to address the meeting.

Musical Mouse Plays Last Chord

"Mickey, the musical mouse," has come to a sad end. He made his home inside a piano in a Port Credit home, and startled the housewife by playing ghostly chords and scales as he scampered up and down. His musical efforts, however, were not appreciated, and a trap was placed in the piano. Soon the phantom notes ceased. Investigation of the trap showed that that particular musician will play no more.

Brownridge, also of Hornby, won four prizes as follows: Field peas, 1st; oats, 2nd; red clover, 2nd; timothy, 5th.

Children Enrolled in Old English Colleges

A curious possibility of the turning of the wheel is suggested by the plea which is being made for an earlier entry into the universities, partly in order that distressed modern parents may be relieved a little earlier of the cost of maintenance of sons and, presumably, daughters. It is true that at present boys enter the university at an age when, over a long period, they would have been ready to leave. John Milton had only just passed his fifteenth birthday when he went up from St. Paul's school to Cambridge, and he was nineteen when he took his bachelor degree. Sir John Denham was sent to Oxford at sixteen, though he seems to have behaved himself there very much after the fashion of some young fellows who have matriculated at a later age, for the future poet is described as a "dreaming young man, given more to dice and cards than study." But even fifteen or sixteen, which seems very early to us, would have seemed very late to the authorities of an earlier age, when "thousands of boys, huddled in bare lodging houses, clustering round teachers as poor as themselves, in church porch and house porch" took the place of "the brightly colored train of doctors and heads." It was in those days that scholars like "Edmund Rich, archbishop of Canterbury and saint in later days, came to Oxford, a boy of twelve years." The most ardent advocates of change would scarcely advise a return to those days.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Demand for Ambergris Greater Than Supply

Treasure trove was recently thrown up on a Pacific coast beach in the form of a piece of ambergris; at least that was what its finders called it. Ambergris, always scarce and now even scarcer, has been a coveted possession for centuries in view of the high price it commands. It has figured in history and in fiction, and from time to time it has brought a measure of wealth to those who have been fortunate enough to find a piece of it.

This strange substance comes either from the stomach or the intestines of the sperm whale and frequently contains the beaks of cuttlefish, on which the whale feeds. It is a grayish substance, often mottled with darker streaks. Whalers after a kill sometimes found large pieces of it floating in the water. Long ago chemists discovered that ambergris could be melted in boiling alcohol and used in the manufacture of perfumes. Hence it became a valuable commodity. It is much rarer than it used to be, because of the scarcity of sperm whales. In the early days of American whaling the sperm whale was plentiful, ranging into the North Atlantic for its food.

Ruins of Old Roman City

Timgad is a ruined city, 23 miles southeast of Batna, in the department of Constantine, Algeria. Timgad, the Thamugas of the Romans, was built on the lower slopes of the northern side of the Aures mountains, and was situated at the intersection of six roads. The auditorium of the theater, which held nearly 4,000 persons, is complete. A little west of the theater are baths, containing paved and mosaic floors in perfect preservation. Ruins of other and larger thermae are found in all four quarters of the city, those on the north being very extensive. There are the remains of seven churches. Numerous inscriptions have been found on the ruins and from them many events in the history of Thamugas have been learned. Thamugas passed from history after the defeat of Gregorius, governor of Africa, by the Arabs in 647.

Road Versus Rail

It is now many years since the expresses of the railway companies running England to Scotland services used to race against each other, and there is today very little "sporting interest" in connection with trains. On the continent, a new form of railway racing was growing up some time ago, touring cars being run against expresses. This road versus rail racing is now discouraged in Europe. However it is catching on so much in New Zealand that a recent race between a car and the Wellington-to-Auckland train was broadcast throughout the country. The race took place at night and, despite the handicap of bad and very hilly roads, the car won by half an hour.

Had Daughter's Sympathy

Iris had been sitting with an absorbed look on her face, gazing at her father.

"Why did you marry mother, dad," she suddenly said.

"Because I was a fool, I suppose," he replied.

"Poor Mums," said Iris softly.

"What do you mean, miss?" asked father sharply.

"I mean that it was sad for mother to marry a fool, dad," explained Iris seriously.

Ray Baths for Horses

Race horses and dogs are being treated with artificial sunlight just before they go on the track in England. Some stalls are fitted with four powerful lights, and in the rays from these the animals stand quietly while taking their "baths." Among those in the know the sunbath is considered a factor when deciding racing odds.

Running a Newspaper

The thing that makes it hard for a person to run a newspaper is his friends. When a friend thinks something ought to be kept out of the news paper he dosen't hesitate to ask it as a personal favor. An enemy doesn't ask any favors. But a friend thinks the conduct of a newspaper is the personal matter of an editor when as a matter of fact he is largely in the position of a man serving a public trust.

A philosophical old fellow once said to the writer, "A newspaper that dosen't make you angry once in a while isn't worth the subscription price."

To make people angry isn't the chief province of a newspaper, but if it's going to be one worthy of the name, it must print the news without fear or favor. This paper has been threatened with, and indeed has suffered, business reprisals, not one but frequently. These things must necessarily be borne in silence. The great reading public which a newspaper serves is not interested in the personal difficulties of the editor or publisher, though we have noticed instances where a full airing of threats and subsequent reprisals would have made absorbing reading.

But such things must be regarded as part of the game—to be suffered perhaps because of sins committed in other directions. An then, too, it must be remembered that all things, both human and divine, are subject to criticism. Even the Bible does not escape. —Exchange.

DEGENERATIVE DISEASES

It is generally known that there has been a very definite increase in the average expectancy of life, but it is not so generally understood that this increase is the result of a tremendous reduction in the number of infant deaths, the practical elimination, through sanitary measures, of such diseases as typhoid fever, and, through preventive measures and better methods of treatment, a marked decrease in other diseases, of which diphtheria is an example.

The increase in the average expectancy of life means that a much larger number of those who are now being born reach adult years. There is little or no increase in the expectancy of life of those who have reached their fiftieth birthday.

Naturally, when more persons are reaching middle age, there is an increase in the diseases which occur at that period of life. But, making due allowance for that fact, there appears to be an actual increase in the degenerative diseases of middle life.

Chronic diseases of the heart, arteries and kidneys are grouped together as degenerative diseases. The reason for their being so grouped is that these diseases arise out of the same causes, and so are frequently found to occur in the same individual.

The wearing out of the vital organs is the natural accompaniment of advancing years. The premature wearing out, or degeneration in middle life is simply a premature old age. We must go through life using the same body machinery with which we started out. Worn parts cannot be replaced, so we must prevent undue wear and tear if the body machine is to last the natural span of years.

The degenerative diseases occur early when the vital organs have been subjected to abuse, to undue strain, or to injury. The result is seldom seen immediately, and so the symptoms are rather apt to be ignored.

Overindulgence in food or drink throws a severe strain upon the eliminative organs, which, if continued or if frequently repeated, will wear these organs out. The poisons which germs give off, either during the attack of an acute communicable disease, or in the process of chronic poisoning from a focal infection, such as diseased teeth, damage the tissues making up the vital organs.

It appears that the prevention of the degenerative diseases rests upon the proper care of the body. This means the avoidance of the undue strains which follow upon errors in diet, or overindulgence; keeping the body fit and running smoothly by attention to diet, fresh air, rest, exercise and elimination; being careful not to subject the body to the damaging effects of germ poisons by avoiding communicable diseases, if possible, and, in every case, treating them properly if they do occur; removing focal infection.

The early discovery of degenerative changes through the periodic health examination will enable the individual to so adjust his life that his days may be prolonged.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

W.C.T.U. PETITION

The presentation to the people of the petition to the government asking for a curtailment of the amount of money spent in Ontario for alcoholic beverages during the present time of financial depression, sponsored by the Ontario W.C.T.U. has been completed and the petitions will be presented to the Ontario Government at a very early date.

The Brampton W.C.T.U. hereby thanks all who helped in any way to accomplish the very thorough canvass made of Peel county and to express their sincere appreciation of the support afforded by the various ministers and temperance leaders throughout the county to the Peel Prohibition Union with its enthusiastic and capable officers, whose organization made possible the intensive work accomplished in the rural districts, to the newspapers who gave the needful publicity, to the canvassers who cheerfully and ably looked after the actual securing of the signatures, to all who signed the petition and to every one who in any way assisted with this most worthy work.

How Can Farmers Get Along?

(Pickering News)

Dealers are offering 13 cents per bag for potatoes in Stouffville, and in Uxbridge they brought only 11 cents per bag. In Toronto farmers are paid only 20 cents per bag, which hardly pays for hauling them to the city. Turnips are being shipped from Stouffville for six and seven cents per bag. How farmers can succeed in making things go at these prices will require a great deal of thought. Farmers, these days, should be financiers in the highest sense of the term.

BARN BURNT

Last Saturday night the bank barn of Mr. Ed. Devlin, at Omagh, was destroyed by fire, along with eight cows, implements, crops, seed, hen house, etc. It is reported that the fire was caused by the hired man up setting a lantern. The loss will be heavy, with only a small insurance.

Timely Precaution Prevents Cancer

Smallest Irritation Should Receive Prompt and Careful Attention

No one properly informed should die of cancer of the skin. Beautiful women never die of cancer of the skin, except when it is situated on the bridge of the nose due to the irritation of their vanity never-slip eye glasses. Beautiful women and everyone who pays attention to the looks of the exposed part of the body observe at once the upigmented mole or the wart or the area of irritation of the skin, or the sore spot, and when they seek an immediate examination and treatment they are absolutely protected from cancer. This information is pretty widespread among all groups of people to-day. Cancer on the bridge of the nose due to neglect of the irritation by the vanity glass has practically disappeared, because people, doctors, oculists and opticians now know the dangers, and, the moment an irritation appears the type of frame is changed. The majority are beginning to learn that none should neglect any irritation of the skin anywhere. The first appearance of a scaly area called an area of keratosis, whether it weeps or not, whether it is painful or not, should be washed three or four times a day with warm water and soap, using cotton, followed by medicated alcohol and then covered with a little vaseline, two per cent. yellow oxide or mercury ointment. An irritation from the bite of any insect should be at once washed in alcohol and covered with collodion. The most minute pimple should be washed with alcohol, covered with yellow oxide of mercury on a bit of cotton and fixed with collodion. When the armies of the nations depended largely on their feet, the medical profession instructed the soldier on the protective care of the feet. It is more important to-day to teach the people about the proper care of the skin on any part of the body for protection against cancer than it was to instruct the soldier about his feet.

When the family physician is selected before illness comes, you can learn from him the simple care of the skin at the periodic examination and show him any skin defects that may have been present since birth or appeared recently.

The properly trained family physician will know when the skin defect should be referred to a dermatologist or a surgeon for further diagnosis and treatment.

Seventy years ago the most common form of cancer of the skin was among chimney-sweeps due to their occupation and their ignorance of cleanliness. This form of cancer of the skin has disappeared, because the occupation has disappeared. There is evidence that all forms of cancer of the skin will disappear when the people and the medical profession learn and practice the care of the skin just as cancer of the mouth will disappear when people learn and practice the care of the mouth and teeth.

MOURNING WARDROBE

"A death occurred in our family and I had to go in mourning. I could hardly afford to buy all black clothes, so decided to dye what I had. I consulted our druggist and he advised using Diamond Dyes. Everything came out beautifully; coats, wool dresses, stockings and all. I have since learned to appreciate the excellence of the black Diamond Dyes. I tried another black dye and the results were impossible. I had to get Diamond Dyes and do the work over. Recently I have tinted my curtains a beautiful raspberry shade and dyed a rug a lovely garnet with Diamond Dyes. They are real money savers—the finest dyes money can buy—I truly believe."

How Dominion-Wide Industry Began in a Store

WHAT CONSISTENT ADVERTISING WILL DO

President of Biscuit Company Tells Success Story

A romance of modern business that should be an inspiration to every small store-keeper was told to newspaper men today (Friday, February 26th), by Mr. C. E. Edmonds, President of Christie, Brown and Company, Limited, who is completing his fifty-sixth years of service with the company.

Mr. Edmonds, who can recall personally much of the rise of the Christie, Brown organization, told how the giant biscuit company was started in a small store on Yonge Street, Toronto, by two men with a working capital of probably not more than $500. To-day the business they founded is capitalized at millions of dollars and is the largest industry of its type in Canada. It has two manufacturing plants in the East, another—the million dollar Winnipeg plant opened last week—in the West, and thirteen distributing branches from Halifax to Vancouver.

The simple history of Christie, Brown and Company as told by the active veteran president is this—The business began in 1849 when two young men, James Mathers and Alexander Brown, formed a partnership in a small store in Toronto to make biscuits. They had with them as assistant salesman, William Christie, who was destined to become a partner and eventually play an important part in Canada's biscuit making industry.

The biscuits sold from this small bakery became popular with a limited clientele and the business began to progress. Four years later Brown and Mathers retired and the business was handled by young William Christie. Mr. Brown, however, re-entered the company in 1861 and the name, Christie, Brown and Company, Limited, was adopted.

Confederation of Canada in 1867 found the business firmly established as one of Canada's coming concerns. In 1871 and again in 1874 larger premises were necessary and it was symptomatic of the sales energy behind the organization that the first trans-Canada train had a Christie representative on board.

From that point the business has never looked back until to-day Christie Biscuits are known round the world. The original store in Toronto has been replaced by three factories—one occupying nearly a whole down-town block in Toronto, the second Toronto factory occupying many thousands of square feet of floor space, and the third—the new Winnipeg plant—is acknowledged the finest biscuit factory on the continent.

The original plant turned out a very small variety of biscuits. To-day over 500 lines are marketed.

And here, according to Mr. Edmonds, is the real key to success in the Christie, Brown organization. It has consistently maintained a high standard of quality in its products and has advertised steadily in good times and bad, using newspapers from coast to coast, year in and year out.

Insects Cost Canada $100,000,000 Yearly

Winnipeg — The annual damage wrought in Canada by insects amounts to over $100,000,000, Prof. A. V. Mitchener of the Manitoba Agricultural College, told members of the Canadian Society of Technical Agriculturists here. From 10 to 0 per cent. of the standard crops of the country are annually destroyed byinsects he declared.

Prof. Mitchener added that in 1932 a more extended area of Manitoba will be infested with the grasshopper plague than was the case in 1931.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAX WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

SYNOPSIS.

Don Ellsworth's wife, formerly actress Sheila O'Shay, disappears. Dr. Cavanaugh, criminal psychologist, identifies a charred body found in the tule marsh as that of Sheila. Barbara, his daughter, faints when she hears him tell this to Peter Piper, a Herald reporter.

A threatening note signed "David Orme" is found in the murdered woman's safe. Peter trails Orme and arrests him. At Orme's trial it is revealed that Sheila is really Orme's wife. Dr. Cavanaugh's testimony clears Orme of the murder. Peter calls on Dr. Cavanaugh and the doctor confesses to him that he is the murderer.

"A chance conversation tonight made me understand the thing that has puzzled me in the way you handled Orme's trial. It was your ambition that took no account of the little question of playing fair with Graham when you sprang your previous meetings with Orme for the first time on the witness stand.

"You wanted to tower—to make us all pygmies. You didn't even see that it wasn't cricket to keep Graham in the dark. And you had me fooled, too. You had me fooled perfectly. That worried me because you shouldn't have wanted to fool me. You were not only clever enough to do it—but you could want to do it.

"You told me the truth about yourself when you spoke of the single-minded people, the people who go their own way, the supreme egoists. You did not call them that, but that is what it amounts to, doesn't it? They are outside morality. They are not held by all those tangling threads that bind us to others. You didn't mind letting Graham down—you didn't mind letting me down—so that you could have the glory.

"I remembered things that you said. And the way you laughed when you told me once that we are all more or less insane. Your laugh troubled me at the time, though I didn't know why; I know now. It was because that laugh was the only time you ever came out from behind the wall you had built around your real self.

"You came out for a moment then. You laughed because you alone were secure in a terrible sanity—a sanity in which you could rule us, entangle us, play upon us. You alone were free and unhampered. And tonight it all came to me. It made everything clear. You said once that clues were negligible compared with motives.

"Well, you were right. I haven't a clue to go upon. I haven't a shred of evidence. The only thing I can see clearly in the whole dark business is a motive. Not even that—just the insight into the sort of man you are. You could conceal your tracks, but you could not quite conceal your character. And even yet I don't understand how you dared to do it—how you dared to take this case and follow it through, discover all that you did about it, uncover everything—and stop just short of uncovering yourself."

The doctor smiled.

"Yes," he said, "that presented its problems. I may say, in fact, that this was my most difficult case. Perhaps it will be remembered as my greatest triumph. You ask how I dared. But I dared do nothing else! The only safety lay in the path of danger. There was Camberwell. I could not leave Camberwell to work alone, perhaps to stumble on the truth. I must keep the threads in my hands. And I dared not do less than my best. Camberwell is too good a man to be deceived by a fake. It must be the real thing. And it was the real thing, every step of it. It is not easy to go about solving a problem, step by step, exactly as if you did not know the answer—to remember every moment the precise limits of your supposed knowledge. But I did it. It did it so well that sometimes I almost forgot that it was only a game I was playing.

"It had its fascination, too. The most dangerous game, played with superlative skill."

"It was you who killed her?" Peter asked quietly.

"Oh, yes, it was I who killed her. I could not do otherwise. I always knew, of course, that I should not hesitate if the need arose."

Peter looked curiously at the face before him. Cavanaugh bore his gaze without flinching.

"And yet you don't look like a murderer'" Peter said.

"Why should I? Only a fool would be a professional criminal. Crime is the response to an emergency. Naturally I did not co rt emergencies. Words! Most of humanity is ruled by words, pretty words, ugly words. Honor, loyalty, crime—what are these but colored words? Stripped of their color they are nothing. But only the minority is ready to pass beyond playing with those colored words. I very early found that out. One must pretend to play the game that the other children are playing. Only so can one be free to play one's own game unmolested. So I treated their words with the utmost seriousness—only I knew as they did not, that the words meant nothing. I learned to be very careful. I put on the mask of their conventional morality—only I knew it to be only a foolish mask. There used to be rumors—before I learned that I must never let the mask slip. That is the reason I came out here to live. That is the reason I adopted Barbara. Barbara took the words seriously—oh, very seriously indeed. A household with a grown daughter to preside over it was by just so much more entrenched in conventionality than even the most discreet of bachelor establishments."

"Is she really your daughter?" Peter broke in. "She thinks she is. That's why she won't marry me."

"I let her think it. Knowing Barbara's code, I thought it would hold her to me. You see, Barbara knows that I killed Sheila. But I didn't expect this. I—see," the doctor said slowly. "She believes that she is my daughter and, having found out what kind of a man I am, she fears that she has inherited some of my criminal tendencies. It is not convention that has shocked her, but biology!"

"How little you understand us, after all!" Peter's eyes shone with a strange pride. "Barbara did not need that. You could have been sure of her loyalty. You won it without lies. You won it by what you did for her. No lie could straighten it. It is a part of her. You only hurt her—filled her with terror of herself!"

"But, my dear man!" Dr. Cavanaugh spoke in mild protest. "I could not possibly foresee that I would be obliged to kill anyone, still less that Barbara would find out about it. It was merely a general precaution. You may tell her the truth, of course. You may even tell her that I loved her. I have seen her suffer, and for the first time in my life I found that the suffering of others had power to hurt me. With all that strength I had that weakness.

"You may tell her that I loved her. I wish she could have been glad to be my daughter. But since she feels differently—" The doctor's shoulders straightened. He also had his moment of pride. "Since she wishes to be free of any taint from me, you may tell her that I can pass on to her no physical inheritance."

"I'd like to tell you," Peter said, "that I don't feel like that myself. I wanted to marry her anyway. I still would."

"Thanks. It's a queer thing, Peter. Perhaps it is just as well that this is the end. For I have discovered my weakness. I wanted Barabra's love, and I want your respect. The only things in life I have wanted that I couldn't go out and wrest from the folly of humanity. The only things—"

"Maybe it's a flaw in me, too," said Peter. "At least I never thought I could feel that way about a man who has done what you have done. But I—so far as I'm concerned you have what you wanted. You are a man with a great mind, and you are a brave man—and you have been good to me. I—I shall always be rather proud of saying that you were my friend."

The simple truth of his statement shone from Peter's eyes. But he saw that the doctor did not believe him.

"Words—words," he muttered. "Soft, pretty words, to cover the sting of reality."

"Would you mind telling me why you killed her?" Peter asked.

CHAPTER LII.

Dr. Cavanaugh drew a prescription pad from under the desk blotter, scribbled upon it briefly, and passed it across to Peter.

"There!" he said. "That is a signed endorsement of what I am going to tell you. You may want to have it to give to your editor."

"To Jimmy?"

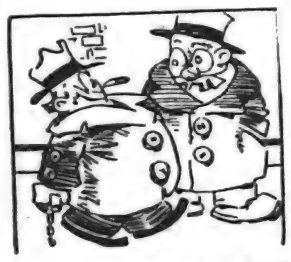
"Oh, I know that you are not going to turn me over to the police. You are going to give me my own way out. That is one of the foolish little words you are bound by."

Peter's jaw jutted forward.

"Yes," he said. "You're damn right it is."

The solution of the Ellsworth mystery—the last case of Dr. Cavanaugh—is my little legacy to you for your paper. I think it is what you would call an important exclusive."

Peter tried to smile back, but the cords in his throat hurt him.



"I—I won't use it," he blurted.

"Oh, but you must! I don't want to be remembered as a failure. My last case must be a success. I shan't know it, of course, where I am going—but I know it now. And your editor will like it. You ought to be pleased at that."

"Damn the paper!" Peter choked, uttering the worst blasphemy of which he was capable. "Damn everything! But if you'd rather have it so, I'll take it."

"The man of no mistakes," the doctor said with musing irony. "Well, I made just one. I did not, after all, understand myself. I accounted for everything—and I did not know that the one thing I could not face was failure. I have scorned the world's judgments, but I am bound by them after all. I could not have the world say that I had met one case which I could not solve. There was one other thing."

"I sometimes wonder why I never reached success in life."

"There have been too many bars in your way, my boy."

What ample time the plowman has for thought,
To ponder many things:
This life; the days that constitute his span;

This Year's Fashion

London Sunday Express: It is announced on the authority of the "Tailor and Cutter" that this year men will be wearing fancy waistcoats of peach, champagne or sunshine yellow; the button-hole in the lapel will be cut down instead of across; the jacket will be rather longer, and the sleeves will show a little more cuff But in the case of most men the forecast for this year's fashion is that they will be wearing last year's suit, thanks to Lord Snowden of Ickornshaw.

Sunday School Lesson

S. SCHOOL—Feb 29 .... GRAHAM
March 13. Lesson XI—Jesus Comforts His Disciples—John 14. 1-18. Golden Text—Peace I leave with you; my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.—John 14: 27.

ANALYSIS.

I. OUR FATHER'S HOUSE, 14: 1-3.
II. THE WAY THITHER, 14: 4-11.
III. THE TRAVELLERS' TRIUMPH, 14: 12-14.
IV. THE TRAVELLERS' COMRADE, 14: 15-18.

INTRODUCTION—It is suggested that chapter 13-17 should be read in this order: 13: 1-32; 15, 16, 13: 33-38, 14, 17. This would seem to be nearer the original arrangement.

The eleven, in the Upper Room, are staggered by the disclosure that their dream of an earthly kingdom is shattered, their beloved leader going where they cannot follow, 13: 33. Peter's too confident declaration (13: 37), brings its desolating answer. Jesus follows with the most heartening words of the whole Gospel, chap. 14. One remembers Lockhart's story of Sir Walter Scott's last days, "Here he expressed a wish that I should read to him, and when I asked from what book, he said, 'Need you ask. There is but one.' I chose the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel; he listened with mild devotion and said when I had done, 'Well, this is a great comfort'."

I. OUR FATHER'S HOUSE, 14: 1-3.

Forgetting himself, the Master turns to encourage his disciples. "Let not your heart be troubled"—"cadence of soothing tenderness, soft as a mother's hand." It is possible to face life calmly, steadily. Jesus, himself, in the "swelling of Jordan," can give his sustaining word. Christian, beginning to sink, cried to his friend Hopeful, "I sink in deep waters, the billows go over my head." Then Hopeful cried out, "Be of good cheer, my brother, I feel the bottom and it is sound." This steadiness comes through faith in God and in Christ, v. 1.

Their future is assured because he is going into his Father's presence. (a) There is room for all. (b) There is progress. "Mansion," (v. 2) means resting places on a road. Heaven is not a stationary perfection, but a reaching forward. There, our reach must always exceed our grasp, or, as Browning says, "What's a heaven for?" (c) The Father's presence is a spiritual presence—not a "place" above the bright blue sky. What is heaven to a reasonable soul? Says Luther, "Naught else, but Jesus."

II. THE WAY THITHER, 14: 4-11.

Thomas, still perplexed, asked the question of v. 5. The man with no definite aim in life wanders ineffectually. The Master replies with great declaration, v. 6. "You want to know the truth about God? Well, you see it in me, 'No man cometh to the Father but by me'."

Philip, earnest, loyal, but slow-witted, fastens upon Jesus' answer to Thomas (v. 7) and comes in with his request, v. 8. He wants some experience such as Moses had, Exod. 33: 18. This, after their long companionship together! With pained surprise Jesus answers, vs. 9-11. Here we reach the culminating point of the Gospel. Jesus is the revelation of the Father.

III. THE TRAVELLERS' TRIUMPH, 14: 12-14.

(a) In Works. Instead of his departure being the end of his activities for his disciples, it will be the beginning of a wider and a greater working. His followers will do greater things because, after his death, his Spirit will possess men more completely.

So has it happened. Having been lifted up, he has drawn toward him all who have looked upon him long enough. Peter's sermon at Pentecost had more converts, probably, than Jesus had during his whole ministry. His love for the unfortunate has touched not only the lone traveller on the Jericho Road, but, in hospitals, missions, rescue homes, has reclaimed millions of people. The brotherliness with which he tried to inspire his little group of followers has set whole races free from slavery.

(b) In Prayer. The responsibility for these greater works must have frightened these timid, confused men. Their Master, sensing it, assures them of help. He gives them that promise (v. 13) which has been so often misunderstood. To attach to the end of our petitions the formula "for Christ's sake" is no guarantee that our prayers will be answered. To pray "in Christ's name" is to pray according to his will. Only when our wills and desires are in harmony with God's, will our prayers be answered.

IV. THE TRAVELLERS' COMRADE, 14: 15-18.

All the Master's promises are conditioned upon obedience, but it is easy to obey the commands when one loves the commander.

As Generation Ages Death Rate Mounts

Good times for undertakers are promised by the League of Nations as soon as the present abnormal condition of world population caused by better sanitation has been rebalanced by everybody getting older. In past centuries, a recent study of the League's Health Section points out, the majority of people born into the world died young, thus establishing such a balance of births and deaths that the average age of the population in most countries was in the twenties or even younger. Old people were relatively rare. Recently this has been altered by improved sanitation and medical science so that a much larger fraction of the world's population now lives to be middle-aged or old. The change is shown in world statistics by marked falls in average death rates and rapid increases of total poulation, the latter being slowed up in some degree by considerable decreases of the birth rates. The chief change in the structure of poulation is a relatively great increase of older people. The present low death rates, the League points out, must be temporary. Within a few years present middle-aged people who have been kept alive by medical science will get so old that they must die, for modern science has not increased in the least the maximum length of life which man can expect. Accordingly the present low death rates all over the world soon must give place to greatly increased ones as these older people begin to die. World population then must adjust itself to a new equilibrium based on longer average lives but with birth rates and death rates again approximately equal.

Loose-Leaf Attire?

The Christian Science Monitor.—The "spare parts" idea has wonderful possibilities, it has been urged, if applied to clothes. You do not throw your new motorcar away or give it to the "old iron" man because a doodad in the machinery gets loose. You buy a new grimcrack to take the place of the old. Similarly, one might do with the family's clothes.

If Johnny puts a hole in the trousers of his new Sunday suit, mother need not bother. She would merely look in her files. There she would find the number of the perforated part and, stepping to the telephone, would ask the store to send out "No. X715492K." A few stitches the next day, and Johnny's best suit would be a little better than it was.

If the back of father's coat grew shiny, just look in his replacement book. If Mother's sleeves split, telephone for a new set. The scheme sounds simple and economical. However, it obviously would require a rebuilding of clothes. Suits and shirts and socks would have to be made on the detachable, loose-leaf system. But why not? it is asked.

Yet, great standardization would also be needed to carry through the spare parts system. And there comes in the problem of the new models of hats, dresses, and so forth—to say nothing of the little matters of matching colors and of making the armholes fit. So, altogether it is likely to be quite a little while before spare coats are sold in slot machines.

The Imperial Conference

Le Devoir, Montreal (Ind.).—One thing is certain, and the British authorities have loyally made this clear to us: at Ottawa nothing is going to be given for nothing. We are not going to sit in at a meeting of lovers, but at a real conference of business men. This is natural and proper, and it will be much better for everybody, for the cordiality of our future relations, that this is clearly understood by us before we start.

Fresh Grapes Year Round

Budapest. — Some months ago a grape grower in Kecskemet announced that he had perfected a method by whchi grapes could be kept fresh for many months, writes a correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor. His statement was received rather skeptically by the general public, but he appears to have justified his contention. Experts who in January examined the result of his experiment were presented with clusters of grapes which had been picked during October, 1931, and had lost none of their juice or flavor, after three months' preservation. M. Bernhardt, the grape grower, claims that preservation by his method costs 20 filler—4 cents—per kilo of grapes.

Should further investigations prove the value of this new preservation, it will prove a boon to grape growers throughout Hungary, who are now compelled to sell their produce at the very low prices obtaining during the vintage, or suffer heavy losses later. It will also mean that the Hungarian consumer, instead of paying 4 pengoe per kilo for imported Spanish grapes during the winter and spring, will now be able to buy home-grown grapes for about 50 filler—10 cents—a kilo.

The Beginning

All in a moment, years ago.
The boy I was became a man.
Suddenly my life began.
I saw the world before me—So
That plowman by his horses stand
Sweating on the first hill's brow,
Having left the riverlands
Furrowed in the vale below,
And sees a mountainside to plow,
Barren rock to blunt his share,
Thunder hanging in the air,
And the black peak above him bare,
Waiting now.
Let him plow it if he dare!

Norway Sets Coast Guard Against Fishing Outlaws

Hammerfest, Norway. — Following the example of the French government in rounding up Corsican bandits, the Norwegian government intends to drive out the fishing bandits, who are raiding the banks off northern Norway with dynamite and destroying thousands of tons of valuable food every season.

The Coast Guard and police forces are in charge of the campaign for protection of the industry on which more than 90 per cent. of the northern folk are dependent.

Since 1911 it as been illegal to kill fish by dynamite, but the practice always has been carried on. The extraordinary increase of the last few months, due to the money shortage, however, has caused the government alarm. For every kilogram of fish which are caught after dynamiting 15,000 are destroyed, it is estimated. The gocernment also is out to end the smuggling of dynamite, which has flourished on the demands of the fish bandits. Almost daily there are thefts of the explosive.

The outlaw fishermen do not always escape the danger of their trade, even if they elude the police, for almost daily there are accidents in handling the dynamite on a choppy sea.

Scientists Prepare to View Eclipse August 31st

Montreal.—According to a recent announcement made by Dean A. S. Eve, director of McGill Physics Building, two expeditions of British scientists, one of which will set up its apparatus on the roof of the Physics Building at McGill University, are coming to Canada to make observations during the total solar eclipse on August 31 next.

McGill scientists will co-operate with the members of both these expeditions as well as carry out independent research work, mainly in the realm of radio and astronomical observations. Anticipation of the coming opportunity for observation of a total solar eclipse has been heightened by the fact that Montrealers will not have such an opportunity again for more than 200 years.

All meteorological observations in connection with the total eclipse and with the polar year, which consits of national expeditions in the Arctic regions, are in the hands of John Patterson of the meteorological office at Toronto.

This Winter

Day by day the snow is making a dispirited attempt to establish itself on this section of Mother Earth; and the hockey player's reflection will be that whoever invented artificial ice did a good day's work.—Toronto Globe.

A Winter Day in '65

"Come, my boy, it is time to get up," called the voice of my father, one biting cold winter morning. For a few moments I remained warm and comfortable where I was, listening to the frost as it started the nails in the clapboards of the house, with the noise of pistol shots.

The twentieth century boy, living in a steam-heated house, has little idea of what a cold winter was in a house warmed by stoves. It is quite a different matter to sleep in a room in midwinter with the windows open, and step into a warm bathroom in the morning, from dressing in the frigid atmosphere and traversing the halls that have the sullen chill of an ice-house, and hover over a stove slowly recovering from a long night's sleep. In those days a boy's misery began with his waking. In a circle around the stove, according to the number of boys in a family, stood the boys' boots of tough sole and stiff leg, reaching nearly to the knee; some copper-toed, and all having a square red label on the upper face, marked with the name and address of the maker. In the absence of rubbers, as worn today, the boots have been "greased" the night before by a liberal application of tallow.

Kerosene oil was comparatively unknown; whale oil, fluid lamps and candles made the darkness visible fifty years ago. When the lard was tried out, housewives reserved a portion for running or dipping candles. We used a mould in my early boyhood, but Mrs. Carleton, where I sometimes went for extra milk in butter-making time, dipped hers, having a tub of fat in the back hall with lengths of wicking hanging on rods over it. Whenever she passed the tub and could spare the time she dipped a candle of two, thus inperceptibly increasing their size. Whenever I went to her back door, in candle-making time, she asked me in, and, going and coming through the hall, incidentally tipped a dozen candles, talking amiably to me all the while.

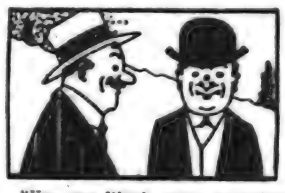
The fluid and oil lamps with their small round double wicks furnished half a candle-power of light, and ten candle-power of smoke. Their only redeeming quality was that sometimes the brass polished ones were of a shape pleasing to the eye, and are prized now by lovers and collectors of antiques.—From "Old Bradford School Days," by Arthur Howard Hall.

Ontario Leads Provinces In Population Increase

Ottawa.—Final figures of the population of Canada by provinces as shown by the 1931 census have now been made public by the Dominion Statistician.

The Dominion population is 10,374,196, compared with 8,788,483 in 1921, an increase of 1,585,713, or 18.04 per cent.

Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and the Northwest Territories decreased in population, and the other provinces increased.



Prince Edward Island dropped from 88,615 to 88,038, a decline of 65 per cent.; Nova Scotia from 528,837 to 512,846, a decline of 2.09 per cent.; Northwest Territories from 7,983 to 7,133, a decline of 10.7 per cent.

New Brunswick increased from 387,376 to 408,219, a growth of 5.25 per cent.; Quebec from 2,361,188 to 2,874,255, an increase of 21.72 per cent.; Ontario from 2,933,662 to 3,431,683, an increase of 16.98 per cent.; Manitoba, from 610,118 to 700,139, an increase of 14.75 per cent.; Saskatchewan from 757,510 to 921,785, an increase of 21.68 per cent.; Alberta from 588,454 to 731,605, an increase of 24.35 per cent.; British Columbia from 524,580 to 94,263, an increase of 32.24 per cent.; Yukon from 4,157 to 4,230, an increase of 1.76 per cent.

British Columbia during the last decade has increased in population at a greater rate than any other province.

Sugar and Water Mixture To Be Used As Lubricant?

Paris.—A mixture of sugar and water is making a name for itself as a substitute for lubricating oil. A Belgian representative at a meeting of the International Sugar Council recently held in Paris stated that a solution of sixty per cent. sugar and forty per cent. water had been used experimentally for a week at one of the factories of the Raffinerie Airlemontoise, in Belgium, and had proved adaptable as a lubricant. A research bureau in Berlin is making extensive studies of the use of sugar for industrial purposes. New means of employing sugar would be especially welcome at this time. World consumption of that commodity has greatly declined and there is a surplus of more than 2,000,000 tons. The council meeting was attended by delegates from Cuba, Java, Germany, Czecho-slovakia, Poland, Hungary, Belgium, Peru and Yugoslavia.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

TORONTO TP. COUNCIL

The much touted petition to be presented to the Toronto Township Council by ratepayers of the township asking for a municipal audit was handed in by a delegation of citizens on Saturday, and after considerable dispute, was tabled until the next regular meeting of the council.

The petition was entered by Frank Waterhouse, Cooksville, on behalf of a list of 109 petitioners. The request embodied in the petition was that a complete audit of the books of the township be made back to the year 1926.

L. H. Pallett, Reeve, warned the delegation that the cost of such an action would aproximate $5,000. Members of the deputation said they had obtained prices from firms of chartered acountants in the City of Toronto, and that the price set by these firms had ranged from $1,000 to $1,200.

Deputy-Reeve R. S. Whaley supported the idea very strongly, but with the petitioners, agreed with the Reeve's arguments that nothing could be gained by begining a new audit until the present special audit ordered by council last year had been reported. Recently the council engaged the firm of Ross, Robertson, McCannel and Dick, of Toronto, to take charge of the work in that department. A. S. Thomas, Brampton, handled the work last year, and for some years previously, but has not yet reported on the special audit he was commissioned to make.

A. Bailey, of the Lakeview Workers League, approached the council asking that street signs be erected in that locality. He was told that at present here was no prospect of having the work done, but that if the League approached the Provincial Government, signs might be erected at the entrance to and exit from the community.

He also asked that the council should secure information on the possibility of incorporating lots taken by the township for arrears of taxes, and incorporating them into industrial sites. Another request made by Mr. Bailey was that Lakeview golf clubs be induced as far as feasible to make use of local labor.

Frank Waterhouse asked that the petition which he had presented be returned to him for the addition of further names. This request was refused at the instance of the clerk J. H. Pinchin who said that the council had been accused of loose business methods, and that he could not allow the petition to leave his person, unless its presentation were struck from the minutes.

William Storrie, engineer in charge of the proposed construction of a water system in the Lakeview district, recommended that the tenders listed at the following prices be accepted: Sand Spun pipe, $11,860: Special castings, $651.52; Valves, $1,332.80; Hydrants, $1,179. Tenders presented to council dealt only with materials to be used. The Township will carry out construction under its own engineering department.

ISLINGTON

Overturning in Ditch School Principal Hurt

Islington, March 5.—When his car skidded into the ditch and overturned on St. George's Hill, just outside Islington on the Dundas Highway, shortly before 9 a.m., J .H. Beamish of Islington, suffered a broken rib and abrasions.

Mr. Beamish is principal of King George School, Annette St. and was on his way there when the accident occurred. He was attended by Dr. R. N. C. Richardson, of Islington, and then removed to his home. The accident was witnessed by Mr. Beamish's son, Frank, who was riding on the bus.

S.H.S. NOTES

Georgetown, Mimico, York Memorial and Stretsville High Schools, and Runnymede Collegiate Institute were represented in the district oratorical finals which were held at Runnymede Collegiate on Monday night. Lucy Scheid and Alex Dick represented Streetsville but unfortunately were not chosen as winners.

The winner in the boys' section was Colin Ogden of Runnymede. He delivered a wonderful address on "Friendliness." Dorothy Drury, also of Runnymede, was declared winner of the girls section. She spoke on "The Life and Work of Beethoven."

Although Streetsville's representative's were not successful in being picked as the winners, they must be complimented on their good showing in the face of such opposition as they encountered.

Village Council

Streetsville Council was faced with the resignation of A. B. Bruce, who had been appointed Acting Clerk of the municipality, following the resignation of Dr. S H. Smith, who had been clerk for many years. It was stated that Mr. Bruce found it impossible to handle the duties in view of affairs, and Gordon B. Jackson, former Treasurer of Toronto Township was named for the vacancy. Instructions were given to Fred Page Higgins & Company, auditors, of Toronto, to make further investigation into the affairs of the village, and their duties will go back until they arrive at a date when a reconciled balance is shown in the municipal accounts.

No Real Evidence That Reveals Origin of Golf

The only facts definitely established concerning the game of golf are that the game, in some primitive form, was played in Holland at an early date and that it was developed in Scotland before the middle of the Fifteenth century into a popular game. An act of the Scottish parliament in 1457 was directed against the playing of this sport, as interfering with the important practice of archery. Old Dutch paintings show that the Dutch used posts instead of holes in playing their "Kolf" or "Kolfje." This name is derived from a word signifying "small club." James IV of Scotland played the game about the year 1500 and made it a royal as well as ancient game. There are other claims about the origin of golf that are not so well substantiated. One is that it was played by the Chinese as early as 1100 B. C.; another is that it was played in Ireland in the time of St. Patrick. Another claims that the Roman game of "pagania," played with a crooked stick and a leather ball stuffed with feathers, resembled golf. A game called bandy-ball or cambuca, played in England since Edward III's reign, has also been mentioned in this connection, though it appears to be more like hockey. A legendary origin of the game is that a Scottish shepherd, tending sheep on a stony hillside, found amusement in striking the stones with his shepherd's crook.

Sadly Tarantula Easy Prey of "Killer" Wasp

Some insects are very ferocious. The tarantulas, as Rene Bache points out, spin no webs, but rely upon their strength and agility for the capture of their victims, the latter including an occasional mouse or ground-nesting bird; and their homes are burrows, usually in the side of a clay bank, lined with silk. The door of the tarantula's house is set on a strong silken spring, and shuts with a snap when the owner has entered or comes out.

At home the tarantula is perfectly safe; the entrance of the burrow being so camouflaged as to escape even scrutinizing observation, but on its walks abroad, the giant spider is always in danger of attack by the Killer, which is a species of wasp. Against the wasp it has no adequate means of defense. Constantly turning this way and that, to face the enemy, it is inevitably taken, sooner or later, and stabbed with the Killer's envenomed lance, and paralyzed. The duel invariably ends with the death or total disablement, of the tarantula, in whose body the Killer lays its eggs, in order that the baby wasps, when they are hatched, shall have food to eat.

Town of the Ugly Duckling

Lovers of the tales of Hans Christian Andersen will probably agree that his story of the "Ugly Duckling" is one of his finest. What more natural, therefore, when in Denmark, after you have visited his home at Odense, to journey to Kjoge, and when there seek out the old and interesting castle of Gisselfeld, where the story teller often stayed. Here the Ugly Duckling first saw the light and not far away is the castle of Bergentved, where the swan was hailed by the children. Although Kjoge is best known today for its bacon and sausage, the visitor will find it a splendid old town with a church of the Thirteenth century named for Santa Claus and everywhere old castle homesteads beside the sea which will make it a scenic memory for years.

Rises From the Water

For a short period each year the ancient ruins of Philae, in the Nile, are to be seen. It is in the early winter and many tourists visit the place at this time. Then the water rises and the Nile buries the lovely island of ruins and temples beneath its waters. Much ancient beauty has gone, but anyone who looks on its ruins today can see what a lovely spot it was in the days of ancient Egypt. The villages and palms have gone, as modern need has changed the flashing cataract into a reservoir, but the damage done to Philae is slight, its sculptures are still clear on the walls and columns in spite of their annual drenching.

Most Deadly Plant

Discovery of the most deadly plant in the world, a small quantity of which was said to be sufficient to kill thousands of persons, has been reported from Pretoria, South Africa. The discovery was made by a botanist, who named the plant Adenia. One ten-thousandth of a grain was reported as sufficient to kill an adult. The poison is not traceable after death. Railway workers in the interior died after they inadvertently tasted the plant. A botanist and two natives were overcome by the fumes of the plant when they sliced a bulb, reports said.

Land Bismarck Forgot

On your way to Austria, which should never be omitted from a European tour, stop a while at Liechtenstein, "the country that Bismarck forgot," in the reorganization of Europe. You can make a special trip there if you are staying near Lake Constance, by going to Brebens, thence to Feldkirch and Vadux. Its political life is almost play, for its prince pays nearly all its expenses and crime and poverty are almost unknown. Winter hardly touches it and spring comes early.—Boston Herald.

DRUMQUIN

Well, winter has come at last and Bruin will have an opportunity to have a second slumber ere spring weather prevails

The dairy men have become quite anxious about their ice supply but all good things come to those who wait.

Many of the folks here, as in other sections, are confined to the house with the flu.

Several consignments of baby chicks have arrived. With weather like this the babies would need warm drinks and something warm at their feet.

Much sympathy is felt for Mr. Ed Devlin in the loss of his fine barn and much of its contents by fire on Friday night. A cow which was being driven to another part of the stable, caught the lantern, causing it to upset, and soon the building was a roaring furnace.

The monthly meeting of the Ladies Aid of Bethel Church was held at the home of Mrs. Wm. H. Dawson last week, and was well attended. Much business was transacted.

Mr. Elmer Ford, 6th Line, is quite serious with the flu. We hope to hear of his speedy recovery

W. W. Featherston is having a brooding house built for his baby chicks. He is an enterprizing man.

We feel that if our Council goes ahead and builds the proposed sub way at Oakville, that their seats should be filled by others at the next election. Our tax load is too heavy now, but if this extra tax is added some people won't be able to pay their taxes at all.

For the first time in the history of the village, Streetsville could not pay its school teachers. Not because the municipality was short of funds but because the Treasurer's books were not available. And teachers had to wait. But the village is back on the "gold standard" now and everybody is smiling.

The Peel Juniors are holding more dramatics in the Oddfellows Hall Streetsville, next Monday evening March 14th, with Cheltenham, Caledon and Streetsville taking part. These dramatics are proving very interesting and are well attended all over the County. If you want to have an enjoyable evening, come out Monday night, and see what these young people can do. Mrs. Ardagh, Mrs. Caslor, Mrs Fred Maas, and Mrs. E. F. Redick were members of the delegation which appeared before the Peel County Council yesterday on behalf of Peel County Womens Institute to ask that august body to continue the usual grant to retain the office of the Home Demonstrator at Brampton. There were 36 ladies present, representing every section of the county. When the women put their heads together the men had better sit up and take notice. They control a lot of votes. Doing away with the said office would be taking a step backward.

Coast Guards Lost Atlantic City Gale

Storm Along Eastern U.S. Coast Does Heavy Damage

New York, March 6.—Wind, howling on land and sea at fifty miles or more an hour churned up waters today along the Eastern seaboard, caused sea fatalities, endangered small vessels, disrupted telephone and telegraph communication, and, in some instances, virtually halted motor traffic.

Two members of the crew of a Coast Guard patrol boat which capsized off Atlantic City were reported drowned. The crews of two other vessels reached shore safely when their vessel was beached at Ventnor, N.J. The auxiliary fishing sloop Anna was missing, and Coast Guard patrol boats were seeking it and its crew of five.

The fishing boat L-5538 was abandoned ten miles southeast of Absecon Light. The crew was taken aboard the gasoline launch Helen, which later beached at Ventnor, but both crews waded ashore safely.

A 28-foot boat which left Bayhead for Seaside Park, in New Jersey, was reported missing in Barnegat Bay. Coast Guard patrol boats searched for it.

All flying, both commercial and mail, came to a standstill.

The storm made automobile driving difficult, and traffic jams were reported repeatedly at inportant crossings in NewYork and nearby cities. The temperature slipped down to 36 degrees.

'Chute Dare-Devil

With a silken parachute as his magic carpet, Lieutenant Burgess of Illinois, floated 27 miles in 33 minutes after a 23,000-foot jump in a 100-mile wind.

Canada's Folk Lore Dates Back to Prehistoric Times

Toronto.—That much of Canada's folk lore dates from prehistoric times when primitive man peopled the country, while some has been brought to Canada by people of other countries, the two combined producing folk lore that is perhaps more colorful and varied than to be found anywhere else in the world, was the opinion of Mrs. Mabel Crews Ringland, well-known writer on Canadian folk lore, given during an address before the Women's Educational Association here.

"We would do well to remember that there in this humble lore of the people a fine cultural element which can enrich our national character as well as our creative arts in a distinctive and unique way," she said.

Italy Will Direct Manoeuvres by Radio

Rome—Orders by radio will direct simultaneous movements of land vehicles and air and sea craft in a demonstration Premier Mussolini has set for May 2.

This will be an expansion of the radio automobile rally, held in many countries. Heretofore only automobiles and motorcycles have competed in the radio manoeuvers. This year, as one of the events to celebrate Fascism's tenth year, the Duce has ordered the rally to go as far as far as science will permit.

India's Snake Killer Not Immune to Poison

It is not believed that any mongoose is immune to the venom of snakes. The ability of the mongoose to kill poisonous reptiles depends on its quickness. If a mongoose is bitten by a snake it is just as likely to die from the effects of the venom as any other animal.

Two Girls Found In Blazing Auto

One Shot in Forehead, Another's Skull Fractured

Turtle Lake, Minn., Mar. 6.—Bodies of two young women were found here early to-day in an automobile which was burning fiercely despite a snowstorm.

Two passersby attempted to quench the flames with snow, only to find the bodies slumped in the back seat. They were tentatively identified as those of Margaret and Marjorie Perrie, of Chicago.

One of the women had been shot in the forehead. The skull of the other had been fractured. Their faces had been seared with acid and, apparently, their clothing had been drenched with gasoline before the killers set the automobile afire. License plates of the car were missing, while the engine number had been changed, indicating that the machine was stolen.

Large Wheat Crops Helps Australian Business

Adelaide, S. Aust. — The largest wheat crop South Australia has ever reaped is substantially helping to restore the State's industry, which has been hard hit by low prices and prolonged dry seasons. The State is expected to garner about 50,000,000 bushels, which should yield at least £8,000,000, twice as much as last year. As the bounty of 4½d. a bushel will be paid by the Federal Government on all wheat produced this season, the restoration of the industry is assured.

New Novel Acclaimed By Norwegian Public

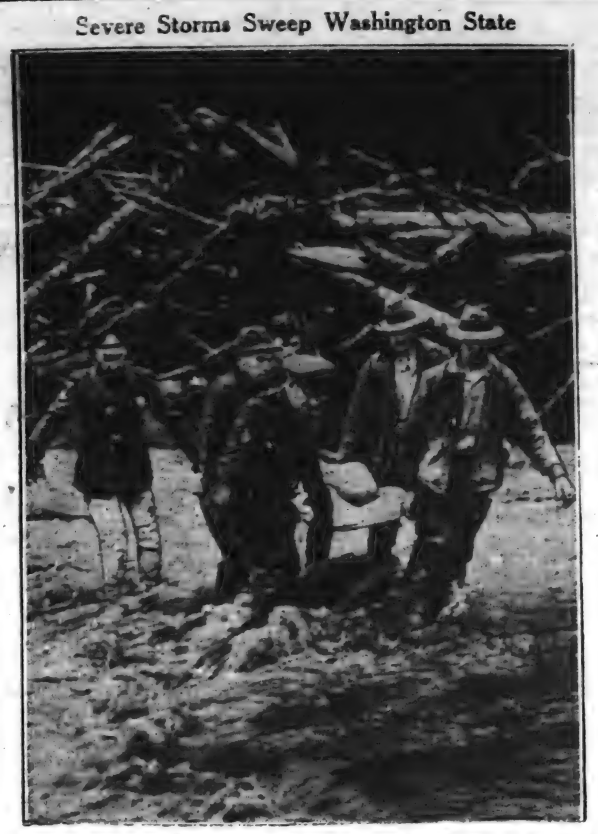
Oslo.—Fifty thousand copies of the novel "Visom gar kjokkenveien," or "We Who Enter by the Kitchen Door," by Mrs. Sigrid Boo, hove been sold in Norway, and some 30,000 in Sweden. It is translated into Finnish, German and French; and negotiations with England, Czechsdovakia and the United States are in progress. It has been dramatized by Gosta Stevens, a Sweden, and it has met with overwhelming success as a comedy first in Gothenberg, then in Bergen, having been translated into Norwegian by Mrs. Boo herself. The Swedish Film Industry has secured the right to film it.

Immigrants to Canada During 1931 Total 27,530

Ottawa—Immigrants to Canada in 1931 numbered 27,530, according to a statement made by W. A. Gordon, Minister of Immigration, in the House of Commons recently. Exportation of immigrants in that year totalled 6,582. The British Isles furnished 16,361 of the immigration total, of whom 9,417 were English, 3,825 Scottish, 2,748 Irish and 371 Welsh.

Girl Stowaways Found on Sealers

St. John, Nfld., March 6.— Numerous stowaways, including two girls, who sought the adventure of a trip north to the ice floes, were landed from the six sealing ships which make up this year's fleet, when dense fog and an ice jam held up the steamers outside the Narrows as they sailed from this port yesterday.



Swims for 25 Feet Under Ice to Safety

Ottawa, March 6.—A "human submarine," Thomas Ahearn, a civic worker, was forced to swim 25 feet under the ice in the Rideau River after he had fallen from the end of a boom yesterday.

As fellow-workers made frantic attempts to find him, Ahearn's head was seen to pop up through a hole in the ice and he was hauled to safety.

Severe Storms Sweep Washington State

Fourteen persons are known to be dead, railroad and motor traffic disrupted and villages inundated as the result of the worst floods western Washington has experienced in years. Police are shown rescuing a cripple from his flooded home.

Eagles Attack Plane and Emerge Victorious

Colorado Springs, March 6. — Two eagles fought a spectacular battle with an airplane to-day—and won.

Mrs. Griffith Lloyd, Colorado Springs aviatrix, and Stuart Wandell, veteran pilot, while flying near Pikes peak, sighted several eagles swooping on a small band of Rocky Mountain sheep.

Mrs. Lloyd, who was at the controls, dived the ship toward the ground in an effort to scare the birds away from the sheep.

Two of the birds refused to scare. Undaunted by the roar of the motor and the size of their opponent, they charged the ship.

Screaming harshly, the eagles attacked the plane with their beaks and wings.

Mrs. Lloyd gave the ship full gun, and attempted to regain the altitude she lost when she dived on the birds. The eagles followed, clawing the wings and fuselage with their talons.

At about 15,000 feet one of the birds knocked Mrs. Lloyd into the cockpit of the ship with its wings. The plane went into a nose dive and fell several hundred feet before she was able to regain control.

Slightly Wounded

Lima, Peru, March 6. — President Luis M. Sanchez Cerro was shot and slightly wounded shortly after noon to-day. He was shot in the shoulder by a member of the Aprista (Opposition) Party, it was charged, while attending Mass in a church in the suburb of Miraflores. He was accompanied by the chief of his military household and an aide at the time.

Ireland's Potato Shortage Acute

Dublin.—The shortage of potatoes all over the Free State has become so acute that Dublin's fish and chip wagons and Irish stew counters are finding it difficult to get supplies. Fish fryers here have asked the government to restrict exports, pointing out that they alone use 2,680 tons annually in catering to the Dublin appetite for potato chips.

Chicks Take to Water

Brothers Drowned In Cataraqui River

Watchers on Shore Helpless When Skaters Plunge to Death

Kingston, March 6.—While persons on share stood by, unable to aid, George and Edward Snowden, brothers, aged 22 and 8, respectively, were drowned late Saturday in the Cataraqui River, off Belle's Island. The brothers, local residents, were skating, when the ice gave way, and they plunged to death. Unusually mild weather had weakened the ice, and there was open water in places on the river. Spectators gave the alarm, and the bodies were both recovered within an hour. The Coroner investigated, and decided an inquest was unnecessary.

March King, Sousa is Dead

Passes Away From Heart Attack

Reading, Pa., March 6.—John Philip Sousa laid down his baton early today and the blare of brass bands faded forever from his ears.

The bandmaster who inspired two continents with his stirring composition died as he had wished—"still in harness."

Physicians said it was a heart attack that struck down the 77-year-old "March King" only a short while after he had led a local band through rehearsal.

The house physician was summoned, but Sousa died at 12.30 o'clock.

Italy Seeks Volunteers To Improve Her Army

Rome.—The Italian army has bid for volunters as a means of improving the quality of its rank and file, composed now almost exclusively of conscripts.

There are fewer than 2,000 enlisted men in the army of 250,000. All the others are serving under compulsion for anywhere from three to eighteen months.

Under a bill approved by the Chamber of Deputies, the enlistment term has been reduced from three to two years. Volunteers may choose their branch of the army and the garrison and they also become eligible to be made non-commissioned officers.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Good Turns—A New Idea

A new opportunity to perform that daily good turn has originated in Bedford, where it has won the praise of the community. The Scouts of the 66th Troop have developed a plan whereby they get into touch with the local physicians whereby the latter may call upon the services of the Scouts as messengers, furnace tenders, or other service in the homes of the sick The boys call this "Sick-Home Service."

Lone Scouts could very well do similar work and we suggest you get into touch with your local doctor and offer him your services for this purpose.

A Strange Birthday Coincidence

February 22nd again brought the strange coincidence of the common birthday of Lord and Lady Baden-Powell, World Chief Scout and Chief Girl Guide.

Liverpool's Lord Mayor on Scouting

That there is too much spoon-feeding to-day, and that Scouting "helps boys to fend for themselves," was given as one of his reasons for supporting the Scout Movement by the Lord Mayor of Liverpool, Mr. John H. Inskip. "Scouting taught boys to be independent, and to find their places in life, instead of drifting," he declared.

Awards For Gallantry

Lone Scouts will be very interested to know that ten awards were recently made to Scouts of this province for gallantry in saving life and property in many cases at very great risk. The highest award for gallantry is a bronze cross with a red ribbon. This is only given where exceptional heroism has been shown or extraordinary risks faced.

For gallant deeds where the risk is not so great, a Silver Cross with a blue ribbon is awarded, whilst those who do exceptionally well in case of emergency, though without any great risk to themselves, receive a Gilt Cross. In other cases deserving of recognition, Letters of Commendation are issued.

The following is a list of the awards which have recently been made and which all Lonies will agree are deserving of special mention:

Silver Crosses

To Scout Bert Bryan, age 12, 26th London Troop. Rescued a small boy who had fallen down a disused well.

To Scout Douglas Grantham, age 15, 13th London Troop. Saw a girl struggling in the water of the Thames River where the current, due to recent storms, was very swift. Went to her assistance and in spite of her struggles rescued her.

To Rover Scout Angus K. MacLeod, age 18, 1st Kincardine Crew.. Rescued three boys from drowning in the Harbour Channel at Kincardine. Two of the boys had gone to the rescue of a third, but were unequal to the task. The alarm reached MacLeod while he was several hundred yards away and his timely action undoubtedly prevented a tragedy.

Gilt Crosses—3

To Scout William Labute, age 17, 19th Border Cities Troop. Rescued a boy who had gone beyond his depth in the Detroit River at Walkerville.

To Scout William Murrall, age 12, 1st Parklands Troop. Jumped off the breakwater at the mouth of the Etobicoke River and rescued a young girl who had fallen in.

To Scout John Wodle, age 15, 1st Bridgeburg Troop. Ran into house where fire had started from a pan of grease, took the burning pan, rushed through the back kitchen, and got it into the open before much damage had been done.

Certificates of Merit—2

To Scout Elmer Schlievert, age 15, 1st Galetta Troop. Heard sounds as if someone was in difficulty in the Mississippi River, ran to the shore, saw small child struggling in the water and pulled her out.

To Scout Waldemar Hill, age 16, 1st Newburgh Troop. Rescued a girl who had lost her presence of mind when she realized she was in deep water and was in danger of drowning in the Napanee River.

Letters of Commendation—4

To Scout Jack O'Donohue, age 15, 1st Parklands Troop, and to Assistant Scoutmaster Ernest F. Ward, age 18, 1st Parklands Troop. Scout O'Donohue saw a boy in difficulties in the river at Eldorado Park, swam to his assistance and kept the boy's head above water until A.S.M. Ward was able to reach the scene and take the boy ashore.

Camp

It is under consideration that the Lone Scout Department organize another camp during 1932 for registered Lone Scouts under the direction of officials of the Lone Scout Department. Are you interested in this? If so, write to headquarters and register your name as a prospect for camp. You will have lots of fun, and learn a lot about Scouting, too.

Membership in the Lone Scouts of Ontario is open to all boys of this province who are between 12 and 18 years inclusive who are unable to become members of a regular troop. It is designed, particularly for Rural boys. If you would like further particulars, write to Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"Lone E."

The New Lambs

Keep them alive, so that they can grow into money. Clean up to-day. The dead lamb represents a loss on past operations and removes a chance of your making a dollar.

Joint Ill of Lambs.—Germs gain entrance into the circulation of the lamb, by way of the raw navel cord at the time of birth. Should a lamb lie on a dirty floor, the stump of the navel cord comes in contact with any germ laden filth that may be present. The germs causing Joint Ill are picked up in this way, to cause a swelling and a leaking of purulent fluid. The infected navel cord does not heal up or dry as it should, but remains raw, large and soft. Infected lambs lie around, do not suck, become dull, get stiff and their joints enlarge. Death overtakes them in a few days time.

To prevent such losses give the ewe a clean, well disinfected, freshly bedded pen in which to lamb. Before putting the ewe into the lambing pen, remove the wool tags from her flanks and thighs and wash off her udder and teats. When the lamb is born, saturate the stump of the attached piece of navel cord with a ten per cent. solution of carbolic acid or other disinfectant. Repeat daily until the cord dries up, when there is no danger of navel Ill. Lambs once infected are not likely to recover. Give the lamb a chance by providing a clean pen in which the ewe may be placed during labor.

Non-Flying Chicken Studied in Kansas College Experiment

Manhattan, Kan. — Smaller and weaker—instead of bigger and better—wings on chickens are the objective of experiments being carried out by Dr. D. C. Warren, geneticist of the poultry husbandry department of Kansas State College.

Using a "wingless" chicken from the flock of A. A. Robertson, of Kansas City, Warren is crossing the bird with others of another breed in order to study possibilities of its peculiar characteristic being inherited. The likelihood of such inheritance is strong, he said, when told the physical trait had persisted in Robertson's flock for nearly twenty years.

Although termed "wingless," the birds are really only flightless. Flight feathers break off close to the wing in the adult, making it impossible for the birds to fly over fences or gates and resulting in greater ease in handling and caring for flocks.

Camels Carry Aerials

Aden, Arabia.—The ship of the desert has been fitted with radio. Aerials have been fixed to the humps of camels crossing the Arabian desert so that the tedium of journeys may be lightened by listening in. The nomadic tribes who people the desert have installed receivers at the wells which form their habitual stopping paces.

A Very Nervous Child

Aileen Lee Credits Now Happy Girlhood To Benefits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Noise No Longer Bothers Her.

"I am not quite 14 years old," writes Aileen Lee, Dongola, Ont. "This summer I was thin and nervous. I would rave at night; even get up and walk all through the house in my sleep. Mother sent me away for a long holiday, but when I came back my nerves were just as bad. One day mother bought me three boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They worked like magic. I have gained 9 pounds since September, and it takes a lot of noise now to bother my nerves. And how the roses bloom in my cheeks again! It's a delight to tell other girls what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills effect such transformation as this because their remedial action is to enrich the blood, which restores the exhausted nerve forces and revitalizes the whole system. At your druggist's in the new glass container. 50c a package. 276

Rudyard Kipling And Others

In the early days of the automobile, Rudyard Kipling, proud possessor of a magnificent new car, motored over from Burwash one morning, with his wife, to call on his old friend Henry James, at Rye. Kipling, enthusiastic over the advent of the automobile, said it was "calculated to make the Englisman—think." He cordially invited James and his nephew, William James, to lunch at Burwash the following day, promising to send the car over to fetch them and take them back. Just then, there came a loud knocking at the door and in rushed Kipling's chauffeur to say that the car had broken down. So the Kiplings—much humiliated—had to return home by train.

• • •

Just as they were leaving the James house Ford Madox Ford—himself going to call on James—bumped into them and noticed they appeared to be perturbed. When ushered into James' presence he soon learned the cause from the Master. Its telling, in James' inimitable style, makes quite the best story in Ford's reminiscences ("Return to Yesterday") and must be read in full—it is too long to give here—to be fully enjoyed.

• • •

But you will get an idea of it from the ending:

'The consequence (of the breakdown) is that its master and mistress will return to Burwash, which should be pronounced Burridge, by train," chuckled James, 'and the magnificent one thousand two hundred guinea motor car will not devotedly return here at noon and will not in time for lunch convey me and my nephew William to Burwash and will not return hre in time for me to give tea to my friend Lady Maud Warrender, who is presence to-morrow beneath my roof honoring that humble meal with her or if the weather is fine in the garden . . . ."

"Which," concluded the Master, after subdued ho, ho, hos, of merriment, "is calculated to make Mr. Kipling—think."

• • •

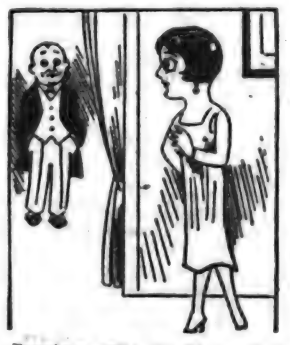
Apropos the sparkling wit for which the late Lord Rosebery was noted, Sir Ian Malcolm recalls (in "Vacant Thrones") that Lord Dufferin, a former Governor-General of Canada, once mentioned to Rosebery that he had lately met an old friend of his, a titled lady who, through some misfortune, had undergone a short term of imprisonment.

"I am now a perfect ruin" she moaned to Dufferin, who confessed himself at a loss for an adequate sympathetic rejoinder.

"I think I should have answered: 'So is the Colosseum' " said Rosebery.

• • •

Some years ago, F. N. Doubleday, the well-known publisher—known to friends as "Effendi," being so named by Rudyard Kipling—was invited by Edward W. Bok to lunch at the Curtis Building, Philadelphia, when it was still new. Mr. Bok was showing off his private office, and "Effendi" noticed a board on the wall by the desk, displaying forty electric buttons.



"What are these for?" he asked.

"Whenever I press one of these buttons," replied Mr. Bok, "a beautiful girl comes to take my instructions."

• • •

Without another word "Effendi" sprang up and, as fast as he could, before his host could stop him, pushed one button after another until he had touched all forty, chuckles Mrs. Alice M. Williamson, the novelist, telling the story in "The Inky Way," she having heard it from Mr. Bok himself, who evidently enjoyed the laugh at his expense.

"Mr. Bok, being a man of infinite and quick resourcefulness, thought fast," adds Mrs. Williamson. "For each maiden was invented on the spur of the moment some task which sent her away unsuspecting."

Daughter—"Did Mr. Sapp call on you to-day, father?"

Her Dad—"Yes, dear."

Daughter—"Well, what followed?"

Her Dad—"Two doctors and an ambulance."

PLEASURE

Pleasure is very seldom found where it is sought; our brightest blazes of gladness are commonly kindled by unexpected sparks. The flowers which scatter their odors from time to time in the path of life grow up without culture, from seeds scattered by chance.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 13

The informatory double is still an important factor in Auction and Contract, and presents some interesting and puzzling questions of bidding. For example, suppose the dealer bids one no trump and second hand doubles (informatory), with what type of hand should the dealer's partner make a bid? There is still considerable difference of opinion among the experts as to the proper procedure in this situation, but the writer has very definite ideas in regard to it. There are four distinct types of hands at either Auction or Contract which should be bid by the dealer's partner over an informatory double of one no trump. First: with a hand as good as an original no trump, dealer's partner should redouble. For example, with a hand of this type:

Hearts—A, 4, 2
Clubs—K, 7, 4
Diamonds—J, 10, 3, 2
Spades—K, 10, 9

The redouble is a powerful weapon when properly used and the source of many big penalties. After a redouble, partner should double any bid made and try for penalties.

Second: If the dealer's partner holds as good as an original bid in a suit, he should bid two in the suit over the double. For example, with a hand of this type, bid two clubs:

Hearts—10, 4, 3, 2
Clubs—A, K, J, 4, 2
Diamonds—10, 7
Spades—9, 2

By so doing, you give the exact information to your partner that you have as good as an original bid in that suit. It is the only way you can give this exact information and for that reason the opportunity should not be lost.

Third: If the dealer's partner holds a set-up minor suit, he should bid two no trump over the double. For example, with a hand of this type, bid two no trump:

Hearts—7, 6, 2
Clubs—10, 4, 3
Diamonds—A, K, Q, J, 7
Spades—J, 4

Here again you have the opportunity to give this exact information to partner and you can only do so by bidding the two no trump.

Fourth: If the dealer's partner holds a hand which justifies a major suit take-out of the no trump irrespective of the double, it should also be bid over the double. For example, with this type of hand, bid two spades:

Hearts—10, 7
Clubs—J, 9, 4
Diamonds—Q, 6
Spades—J, 10, 7, 6, 4, 2

When you hold six or more hearts or spades, it is obligatory for you to bid that suit over partner's no trump and the obligation is just as strong when the no trump has been doubled. Such a bid gives partner exact information that you have a justifiable take-out and that information may be very valuable.

Problem

Hearts—Q, J, 9, 8, 7, 5
Clubs—10, 9
Diamonds—9, 2
Spades—7, 6, 4

	Y
A		B
	Z

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump and A doubled. What should Y now bid at either Auction or Contract? In case Y passed, B passed and Z bid two spades, which A doubled, what should Y now bid?

From the foregoing discussion it should be obvious that Y should bid two hearts over the double. He has six hearts and therefore an obligatory take-out of the no trump. After making the mistake of passing, however, the right thing for him to do is not so obvious. When B. also passed the double, it was evident that he did so because he was certain of defeating Z's one no trump bid. In other words, both A and B have indicated strong hands. Z's subsequent bid of two spades merely indicated that he realized his no trump bid would probably be defeated and that he figured he had a better chance to get out of trouble by bidding spades.

A's double of two spades indicated he could defeat that bid; so Y was confronted with a difficult problem. The fact that he had three spades was an argument against bidding three hearts, but his outside hand was so weak that there was little or no chance for Z to make two spades. On the other hand, Y had a strong heart suit and, if his partner had high cards in the other suits, he would have a good chance to make his bid. For these reasons, the writer is of the opinion that Y should bid three hearts over the two spade bid at either Auction or Contract. It is a close question and shows the value of bidding such hands at once over the double. Then you don't get into trouble.

The Future of the Empire

Stephen Gwynn in the Fortnightly Review (London): There is no mistaking the symptoms of a general rally throughout the British Commonwealth to mutual support in the fight for solvency. This year's conference should mark an epoch in the Commonwealth's internal organization. For it must be dawning now on the Dominions that the greatest of all markets open to them is threatened with a loss of buying power. England can no longer count on beating all competitors even against the handicap of a hostile tariff; and this workshop of forty million people packed close in their island has a serious future to face. Its ruin would be hardly less ruinous to Ireland, to Australia, and to New Zealand than to itself. Canada is otherwise situated; but even for Canada the disaster would be little less. In a reorganization, with a fiscal bond, the prosperity of the Mother Country needs to be considered with more anxiety than ever before.

Steno—"I'm going to be married Saturday, and——"

Her Boss—"And so you're going to quit?"

Steno—'Oh, no! I'm just going to tell you that I'll be needing more money."

"I had a dream the other night, Casey, an' it taught me a great lesson."

"Bedad, an' what was the lisson, Pat?"

"'Twas like this: I dreamed I wus in Rome, an' I had a audience with the Pope—as great a gintleman as any in the district, an' that's no lie. Would I have a drink, he axed me. Thinks I, would a duck swim, an' seein' the whiskey an' lemons an' sugar on the sideboard, I told him I wouldn't mind if I had a wee drop of punch. 'Cold or hot?' asked Riv'rence. 'Hot, yer Holiness,' says I. Ah, what I mistake I made!"

"I don't see anything wrong."

"Ah, but listen, boy. His Holiness stepped toward the kitchin for the b'lilin' water; an' before he got back, I woke up. Nex' time, I'll say, I'll take it cold, yer holiness, while the water's a-gettin' hot!"

Restaurant Proprietor (belligerently)—"Listen, Mister, when you eat here you don't need to wipe off the plate, see?"

Mild-mannered Gentleman—"I beg your pardon. Force of habit, you know. I'm a baseball umpire."

Yes, When the Others Are Worn Out!

Hush, Christmas necktie,
Don't you cry.
Papa'll wear you
By and by.

The only time it pays to cry over spilled milk is when you can get the restaurant proprietor to pay for a new dress.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue sea,
Keep rolling on for all of me.
On you I cannot waste a glance
While bathing beauties 'round me prance.

"Miss Curley," said the office manager to his stenographer, "I would suggest that you do not write letters to your young men during office hours. Smith & Jones report that we sent them a shipment of love and kisses instead of the tar and axle grease that they ordered."

Madam (to Chinese man-servant)—"After this, when you enter my bedroom, please knock. I might be dressing."

Chinaman—"Me don't need knock. Me allays lookeee in kleehole first."

Millionaire (addressing meeting)—"I came to this country without a shirt on my back, and now I have accumulated two million."

Awed Voice—"Why, you'll never wear them out."

Some fail to recognize opportunity until they see her back. It is all right to dream, but wake up and give your dreams a chance. You see, by saving all you earn you will have money to share with the fellow thrown out of work by your saving. There is many a good thing lost by not asking for it. Men put off things they ought to do, and women put off things they ought to wear. Attention is attracted by what you do, not by what you think ought to be done.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go, get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 50c a bottle—any drug store. (Made in Canada.)

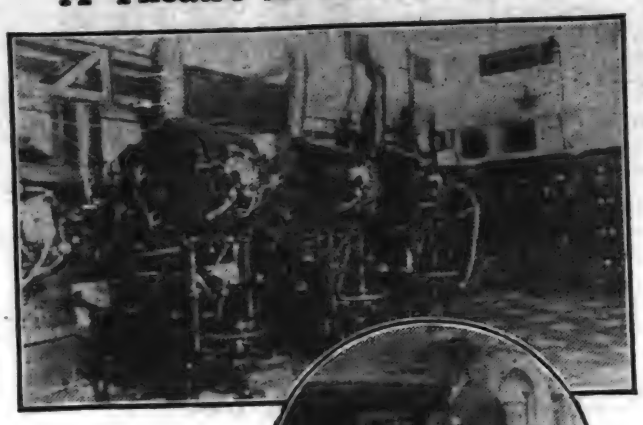
"He should be home by this time"

Mrs. Fowler was worried. Her husband had gone to town for the day but he was to be back in plenty of time to feed the stock. And now it was getting dark.



Then the telephone rang: "Sorry, Mary", came her husband's voice, "I can't get home till late. Better telephone George Bothwell and ask him to help us out."

So the stock was fed and Mrs. Fowler's worry was ended. No wonder she said: "It's lucky we have a telephone."

Scout Notes

It is some few weeks since this column last appeared, however, we have much good news to give out.

First, we wish a hasty recovery to all our scouts who are confined to their homes through illness. Your presence is greatly missed and we are looking forward to seeing you all soon.

Our investiture, as the many people who witnessed it, will admit, was a huge sucess. We all had a pleasant evening.

We are pleased to say that we are getting the hearty support of the village. To date, Mr. MacPherson has donated the Troops Flag; Reeve and Mrs. Hope are donating a Union Jack; Messrs. Dean and Johnston are supplying us with a kettle drum and bugle; and Mr. Wm. Hardy phoned in a request a few days ago, that he donate six scout hats.

We feel a well-equipped and well-disciplined troop will do much to advertise our community and that is our objective. Any citizen wishing to follow suit will receive a very hearty welcome.

We are making an attempt to furnish every scout with some part or parts of their uniform. A batch of hats, scarves or shirts would be appropriate. Anyone wishing to make any such donation, get in touch with a scout. Any donation, no matter how large or small, will be acceptable.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The last meeting of the Community club was held at the home of Mrs. J. A. Cooke, Streetsville. We were favored with a fine day and there was a large number present. The main feature of the afternoon was a debate. "Resolved, that a neat, cranky wife was preferable to a good natured, untidy one. Mrs. Morris Williamson and Mrs. W. Leslie supported the affirmative and Mrs. W. Cook and Mrs. W. Sanford, the negative. The result was a tie. So it is still left for the men to decide. Mrs. Cooke served a dainty lunch, assisted by Mrs. Pete Stephens and her daughter, Edna.

The next meeting will be held at Mrs. J. P. Beattie's, Tuesday afternoon, March 15th. Please note the change of day. Everybody come wearing the green, as it is our St. Patrick meeting.

OBITUARY

Angelina Kerney

Early Sunday morning at the Peel Memorial Hospital, there passed away Miss Angelina Kerney, of Streetsville, who had spent all of her 70 years on the fourth line west Toronto Township. She had suffered for several days with bronchial-pneumonia. She was formerly an Anglican, but of later years, we believe she was a follower of the International Bibal Students Association. She is survived by two sisters, at home. The funeral service was held at the Undertaking parlors of Woodruff and English and interment took place at Churchville cemetery, with Rev. R. J. W. Perry officiating.

BAD AUTO SMASH NEAR BRITANNIA

Miss Ina Gold, Deaborn Street Oshawa, was critically injured and six other people less severely hurt in a motor mix-up involving three cars on the Centre Road near Britannia shortly before noon Sunday.

Miss Gold was a passenger in a northbound car driven by Clarence Elliott, 189 Albert St., Oshawa, which was allegedly struck head-on by a car coming in the opposite direction, driven by T. H. Speight of Georgetown, who, police state, had suddenly applied his brakes to avoid crashing into a third car driven by C. E. Trought, which had stopped on the side of the pavement to give help in an acident which had occurred at the spot shortly before.

With severe face lacerations a fractured left arm and serious internal injuries, Miss Gold was rushed to Peel Memorial Hospital at Brampton, by Bert Stewart, of London, who was driving by at the time. Her condition was later reported as serious and her recovery is regarded doubtful.

Clarence Elliott and his father, H. T. Elliott, received facial cuts, while Mrs. Elliott Sr., had a deep scalp wound. Harry T. Elliott, 12, a brother of the driver, was found to have cuts on the nose. Speight, driver of the second car, who was thrown against his steering wheel, sustained serious internal injuries, while his wife had several facial cuts, her upper lip being almost severed.

All the injured were treated by Drs. J. E. Bromley, Colin Heggie, Frank Vanderlip and M. K. Gordon, and were later taken to Peel Memorial Hospital. Provincial Officers C. Hefferon and H. T. Owens investigated.

In the other accident, when a car driven by H. G. Heatley of Brampton went over into the ditch at the same spot; the driver, his wife and son Allan, sustained minor cuts and bruises.

Smile, Symbol That Has Never Changed Meaning

A mile seems a steady, dependable measure, 5,280 feet long as we learned in school, a fine old Latin word meaning the equivalent of a thousand paces. But a learned English colonel, writing in the Geographical Journal, points out that a mile means whatever it is held to mean, and very little more. In 1344 Dover was 12 miles from Canterbury; in 1633 the same Dover was 15¼ miles from the same Canterbury; the mile had changed. And a widely traveled Englishman, writing in 1617, noted that "five Italian miles, or three French, or two and a halfe English, make one Dutch mile, and that one Dutch mile and a halfe makes a mile of Sweitzerland. . . . Even in England the miles seeme, and indeed are more short, neere London, where the ways are faire and plaine . . . but towards the North and in some particular places of England, the miles are longer."

So when we read old English travel books a mile may be a mile, or two miles, or hardly a quarter of a mile. But then, as a matter of fact, almost all words are like that. They do not mean precisely the same thing in the Twentieth century as in the Sixteenth, or in England as in America. The only symbol which seems to survive the centuries and transoceanic transplantings without change is a smile. That is understood across all the boundaries of space and time.

Many and Varied Uses for Humble "Hen Fruit"

An egg, an albuminous egg, though to most of us just a filler or a spiller, is a whole day's work for the hen. Egged on by insistent demand for a market, the editor of the National Poultry Journal lists a surprising number of its uses, aside from its use as an interior decoration. Eggs, he points out, are used extensively in the manufacture of imitation ivory, drugs, ice cream, adhesives, pigment fixers, printer's ink and glue; for tanning, bookbinding, cleaning of fine leathers and gloves, sizing paper, varnishes for photographs, cards and paintings, dyeing textiles; and in addition to their use by bakers, makers of candy, pastries, mayonnaise and salad dressing, they are indispensable in the preparation of films for your camera. Even the antiques, though not extensively collected, are. Instead of being wasted, used for fertilizer. And they are used (we really ought not to tell you this) for—Listen!—clarifying wine. May the hen's son never set! He won't!—Pathfinder Magazine.

Saar Valley Mines

Under the terms of the peace treaty between Germany and the allies the mines of the Saar valley were given to France as compensation for the destruction of her northern mines during the World war and as part payment of her reparations. French occupation was to hold until reparations were completed. The districts containing the mines were detached from Germany and formed into the Saar territory. An international governing commission, responsible to the League of Nations, was formed for 15 years, consisting of five members—one French, one native (non-French), one British, one Czechoslovak one Finnish. In a few years a plebiscite vote is to be taken and final disposition made by decision of the League of Nations.

Big Map of Argentina

There has been recently placed on exhibition in the library of a Buenos Aires newspaper a giant relief map of Argentina, just completed after 20 years of work by Pablo Fonticalli, an Italian who emigrated to Argentina as a lad. Eight years were consumed in the preliminary work of laying out the map and 12 years were spent in exploration and study to revise it and make it accurate in every detail. The map is on a scale of 1 to 500,000 and is 24 feet by 12 and is complete in the most minute particulars. The maker of the map explored the foothills and ranges of the Andes in order to get accurate information of land which had never before been trodden by humans. In this rough work he was greatly aided by his wife, who accompanied him.

Scotch Cure for Witches

Fisherfolk of the little village of Burghead, on Moray Firth, Scotland, have again held the ceremony of "burning the claire," a holdover from medieval times. While some continue the old Scottish custom in a spirit of merry-making, the majority of the people are superstitious and believe that witches will refrain from sneaking down their chimneys for a whole year if the tar is burned. This ceremony is the pouring of casks of tar on the ruins of a Roman altar setting fire to it, then a dance by the villagers around the roaring flames.

Pianos on Their Heads

Pianos and similar articles are moved in the city of Pernambuco by a sextette of trained men who are all of the same height and powerfully built. They will lift a grand piano on their heads and then march along with a soldier-like precision. A misstep on the part of one would mean disaster. As they pass along the street they are preceded by their chief who clears the way for them and gives the orders to the porters. All pianos are moved in this manner and these same men take care of all such jobs.

BRITANNIA

The regular monthly meetings of the Britannia Young Musicians' Club, which had been discontinued for some months, have been resumed under the leadership of Mrs. W. C. Dennis. The February meeting was held at the home of Mr. H. Stephens, of Derry West, Friday evening. About twenty were present, including parents, pupils and friends. Plans were discussed for making the club better than ever this year. Club colors of gold and violet were chosen. Preparations were begun for a play to be given at the recital in July. Miss Florence Stephens was made secretary, and Pearl Fewster press reporter of the club. After the class in theory of music was held, a program of instrumental music was provided by the following pupils: Misses Betty Dunn, Helen Price, Florence Stephens, Isabel Elliott and Pearl Fewster. A dainty lunch was served by the hostess, and after a pleasant social hour, the meeting closed by singing the National Anthem. We are very grateful to Mrs. Dennis for thus spending her talent for the musical education of our young folks, and also to those who kindly lend their homes for the club meeting.

PEEL COUNTY COUNCIL

Peel county council created a new record when it completed the March session in three days.

The equalization of the assessment was carried out with very little discussion. The report was entered by T. H. Elliott, Reeve, of Chinguacousy. L. H. Pallett, Reeve, of Toronto township, protested the addition of $10,000 to the assessment of his township in view of the large increase made by Judge Justin last year in equalizing on the appeal of Albion township. Mr. Pallett, however, said that although he thought the addition unfair, he would not appeal against it unless forced to do so by vote of the Toronto township council.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

March 8th, 1932

348 Colony St., Winnepeg, Man.

Dear Editor;—

Cold, I should say so. March 1st was fine all day—then a real Manitoba blizzard set in, right away--as soon as Winnipeg got through welcoming her World Champion Hockey boys home. They were met at the Union Station at 7 p.m. by a large crowd. Then the parade started—came up Main, to City Hall, then back to Portage Ave, and up the Mall, to the Amphitheatre, where they were welcomed by a capacity filled house. Their relatives were there to meet them. The papers say it was the largest parade ever been in Winnipeg. I was fortunate enough to be in a position to see them. There were cars and more cars suitably decorated for the occasion. The Free Press gave their trucks for the Champion's Conveyance. Some of the most conspicuous trucks was one long one, with ice on the bottom, and boys playing hockey; an old fashioned stage coach drawn by horses; and the electric trucks were beautifully decorated with lights. When the parade was crossing Carlton Street, where The Free Press is printed, the Siren of The Free Press let out its welcome. It could be heard over the greater part of the city—and gave everyone a chance to get to the most advantageous position to watch their coming.

But some felt sore at all the fuss. One man said when he and his companions came back from the war, broken down men, no one was at the station to meet them. But I think it alright for young men and women to indulge in athletics; good for their health—if not overdone. And one must not think of just Winnipeg winning for themselves but for Canada as a whole, and I think it will take from now on to the next Olympics, to furnish just such a splendid lot of young men, to win another world Olympic. Even the United States gave them credit for being perfect gentlemen.

Work has started on the auditorium again, but unemployment seems to be worse and worse, and every day and night. It was only at night robberies and hold-ups occurred, but day time seems now better than night. I suppose not so much police watching as will be at night.

I was to see the exhibit of made-in-the-west, held in the Y.W.C.A. building. The work of the blind is most wonderful, knitting sewing,and baskets. There are not many could do so well, with their sight. The glass exhibit was lovely, candies, baking, jams and fruits, electric devices, which also are wonderful and a lovely lot of other things made in the west.

January was a lovely month just like spring. February came in very cold and stormy; highway's were blocked with snow, until the last four days, then there was a general thaw. The streets were just water and slush. but has been cold so far through march; and stormy.

PRAIRIE ROSE

Mrs. Bert Fullerton

The neighborhood and community club of North Trafalgar suffered a severe loss in the death of Mrs. Bert Fullerton.

In February, 1931, Mrs. Fullerton met with a severe accident when the fire fiend wrapped itself around her and left her for a year a cripple. During all that time she was a patient sufferer. During her illness she never lost consciousness. She spent her lonely hours in religious reading The kindness and hospitality of Mrs. Fullerton will always be remembered. No one ever asked a favour and was refused, but it was always given with a feeling of modesty and gratitude that she was able to do a kind act.

Her name and memory will dwell in the hearts of her neighbors and friends as a model neighbor and devoted mother and a gentle disposition that made her beloved.

The funeral services were held at her late home on Thursday afternoon and interment was made in Streetsville Cemetery. She was laid beside a baby daughter who left her many years ago.

The floral tributes were numerous and beautiful, showing the esteem in which she was held.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

The Ontario Lone Scout Department has now been in existence for three years and during that time a large number of boys in all parts of the province, who otherwise would not have had the chance, have availed themselves of the opportunity to take an active interest in the Boy Scout Movement.

In addition, the Lone Scouts have paved the way for some thirteen regular troops which have sprung into being as the direct result of the hard work and tenacity of individual boys or groups.

With an active membership of over three hundred Lonies, we look forward to our fourth year with optimism and hope for the opportunities to bring Scouting into the lives of a greater number of rural boys than ever before.

A CALL TO SCOUTS.

A call to Scouts for increased service during the national crisis was made by Lord Baden-Powell at the annual meeting of the council of the association in London. The Scouts, he said, were first in the field on the occasion of the Great War to render help behind the scenes, and the present move to service, as the Prince of Wales had said, was not meant to be a mere flash in the pan, but an undertaking "for the duration" of the nation's trouble.

The Duke of Connaught, president of the association, sent a message in which he referred to the fact that the world total of Boy Scouts was now more than 2,070,000.

The above paragraph was taken from an English newspaper published in February and would seem to indicate that there are greater difficulties in the Old Country than we in Canada appreciate. However, we know that the Scouts will do their best to help lighten the burden, and in this matter the Lone Scouts can help considerably right here in Ontario.

"Lone E" was visited a few days ago by a business man from Vienna, Austria, who in the course of conversation, stated that after a tour of the United States and Canada he found that the most advertised word on this side of the Atlantic is "Depression." As far as Canada is concerned, at any rate, this should not be as at this time Canadian business people have an opportunity at their finger tips which is greater than they ever before had. The opportunity to manufacture and sell Canadian merchandise and to use Canadian raw materials and resources.

Therefore Lone Scouts should keep a smile on their faces and talk not about the hard times, but rather about the great OPPORTUNITY and the good season that we are about to enter.

WHY IS SCOUTING SO POPULAR?

This question is easily answered and the two following paragraphs will illustrate the reason. Boy Scouts own no superiority of Race or Creed, Color or Tongue. Scouting is just as much designed for the humble boy from town or country as it is for the son of influential parents. Some people quibble about our uniform, but it is designed especially so that all boys, of whatever rank, shall look alike, and therefore all meet on equal footing.

WESTERN INDIAN BOY SCOUTS.

Authority from the Department of Indian Affairs has been granted for the organization of a Scout Troop at the Sarcee Indian School in Alberta. The Group Commictee includes Chief Jim Starlight and Chief Big Plume.

LATEST ROYAL BOY SCOUT.

The latest addition to "royal Boy Scouts" is H.R.H. Prince Gustav Adolf, eldest son of the Crown Prince of Sweden.

NEW BISHOP A SCOUTMASTER.

The recently elected Anglican Bishop of Ontario, Rt. Rev. John Lyons, is a Scout leader of some years' experience. He organized and for several years was Scoutmaster of a troop at Belleville. He participated in games and hikes and took the boys to camp.

CAMP. Do you intend to come to the Lone Scout Camp which will be held this summer? If so, start saving those nickels now, and let your Scoutmaster know that you wish to be enrolled as a Camp Prospect.

Canadian Pacific Liner Stages Thrilling Rescue

Wrecking Steamer Reindeer I Swamped on Mission of Relief —Terrific Gale Off Coast of Nova Scotia

Halifax, March 13.—A new and thrilling chapter in the record of rescues at sea was written off this coast on Saturday when the west-bound liner Montcalm took 28 men from the heaving deck of the wrecking steamer Reindeer I. The oil-driven Montcalm, superbly handled, poured oil on the mountainous seas and manoeuvred to create a lee in which the rescue was possible.

Whether the Reindeer, an abandoned derelict, lay low in the trough of marching seas, a menace to navigation, or whether she had gone to the bottom, was still a matter of conjecture. A note of irony was in her fate, for she was bound to assist the disabled Hamburg American steamer Harburg off Sable Island where her teak timbers could withstand no longer the battering of a turbulent sea.

Captain R. Featherstone and his men were safe at home to-day through the seamanship of the Montcalm's officers and a boat's crew which put off from the liner, took them aboard as rising water slothed over cold fires through the derelict's engine room and dropped down to leeward to put them safe aboard.

Meanwhile the Harburg, helpless with a broken rudder-post, was in tow of the New York tug Willett for Halifax, 150 miles south-southwest of Chebucto Head, according to wireless messages received here. She had lain off the coast since Wednesday, knocked hither and yon at the sea's whim, but not, apparently, in any imminent danger. On the ocean-going tug Foundation Franklin, which left Halifax on Wednesday afternoon, smashed her steering gear, made temporary repairs and was reported proceeding toward the Harburg "at all speed," nothing was heard to-day.

Gas Price Probe Opens at Ottawa

Form of Procedure Announced By Chairman R. C. Matthews

Ottawa.—Investigation into the price of gasoline in Canada, as compared with the price in the United States, was started by the banking and commerce committee of the House of Commons on March 8. The form of procedure was announced by the chairman, R. C. Matthews (Cons. Toronto East Centre) and the first speaker was Dr. Thomas Donnelly (Lib. Willow Bunch), who sponsored the resolution, calling for the investigation

Dr. Donnelly said he had asked for the inquiry in view of the difference in price on the two sides of the border. The problem was a large one as there was now more than 600,000,000 gallons used a year in Canada. There had been a difference of at least five cents at all times, and in view of the ranging difference from month to month he could not understand the reason.

C. E. Bothwell, (Liberal, Swift Current) corroborated Dr. Donnelly's remarks and said that while the difference appeared very marked there might be justification. For that reason an inquiry had been called.

Predicts Big Trade Throughout Empire

Consul-General to U.S. Says Britain May Grant Wide Preferences

New York—A prediction that the British Empire would soon evolve into one of the strongest economic units in the world, was made here by Gerald Campbell, British Consul-General, speaking before the Ulster Irish Society on British Affairs.

British subjects, he said, are no longer talking pessimistically as they did after the Imperial conference in 1926.

"As things have gone," he said, "As other countries have become wrapped up in themselves and as tariffs have been raised higher and higher against us, we have come back into the Imperial bosom and now we all are preparing to help one another at the conference which will assemble in Ottawa next Summer.

"We couldn't have come to such a position if Britain had not had a tariff. However, now that she does have one, she is in a position to grant preferences to the Dominions and the Dominions are in a position to grant preferences to Great Britain. For instance, take the canned fruit industry. For years a British vessel or two has come every week to California in ballast and has loaded a cargo of canned fruit for the Mother Country.

"At Ottawa, Great Britain, I believe, will work out some system whereby she can shift this business to South Africa and Australia. I would not say that all the California fruit business will go to those two Dominions—that will depend upon how they grow and grade and market their products. But it will be a step and the British ships that will go there for fruit will not have to go in ballast. They can take British goods out."

Nova Scotia To Put Miners on the Land

Bill to Aid Jobless Colliery Workers Introduced

Halifax.—Financial assistance for the establishment on vacant farms of unemployed coal miners who have had farming experience, and facilities for the placing on the land of miners who wish to gain agricultural experience, are provided for in a bill introduced in the Legislature by Premier Gordon S. Harrington. The measure provides that any male person of more than 21 years of age, who is a British subject and the head of a household, who has been a mining employee of the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation and a resident of Nova Scotia for five years, and who has had satisfactory experience in farming, may have his application for assistance considered by a board to be established.

It is proposed also that the board be granted authority to place men from mining communities with farmers to enable them to obtain practical experience. The board may grant certain allowances to such men during a period of training not to exceed one year.

The Premier had enunciated a policy of land settlement some months ago, and the possibility of placing miners on the land was reviewed recently in the report of the Duncan Commission, which declared that too many men were employed in the coalfields, and also recommended endorsement of the re-allocation proposals, involving closure of certain collieries, which would displace about 2,000 workers.

A United Mine Workers' delegation opposing such closing will meet the Government tomorrow.

The commission, during its sittings, heard evidence from several land settlement agents, and learned that vacant farms in Nova Scotia numbe more than 1,400.

Steamer Freed From Ice Fields

Fellowcraft Released After Food is Dropped From Aeroplane

Windsor, March 13.—Held for four days in the grip of a Lake Erie icefield, the freighter Fellowcraft finally broke free late Saturday and made her way to Loraine, O. She will remain in that port, 25 miles west of Cleveland, until the spring break-up. The Fellowcraft, Nicholson Transit Company vessel, with Captain Patterson in command and a crew of 19, had been locked in the ice since late Tuesday. Outbound from Cleveland for Detroit with a cargo of steel, she was stopped by heavy ice near Colchester light reef. Strong winds Wednesday drove the helpless freighter toward Pelee Island. Her position when she freed herself was, roughly, eight miles southeast of Kingsville.

Packed by high winds and prolonged cold, the ice frustrated two attempts to succor the Fellowcraft by water. Contact was made, however, when food supplies were dropped aboard from an aeroplane Friday, while a message on the hatch covers bore word that all was well. Breaks in the ice-field were appearing early Saturday, according to Captain Johnston of the Pelee Island air mail service. Later in the day open water showed east, and the icebound ship was able to free herself.

The first rescue attempt was made Wednesday, when the Aspen, United States Government craft, put out from Detroit, but was stopped at the mouth of the Detroit River. A blizzard combined with the close-packed ice to frustrate the second effort when a small boat was dragged over the ice part way to the ship from Colchester Thursday.

"Your husband is simply wild about you isn't he?" asked Phyllis. "Yes," replied Doris. "He raves about me in his sleep, but the absent-minded fellow nearly always calls me by the wrong name."

Urges Prohibition Of Export of Arms

Women Cable Message to Disarmament Conference

Toronto.—The executive of the Local Council of Women recently cabled to the World Disarmament Conference at Geneva the following resolution, adopted at its meeting: "This meeting expresses its regret at the situation that has arisen in the Far East. It is of the opinion that the said situation is not in harmony with the covenant of the League of Nations, the Nine-power Treaty or the Pact of Paris. It recommends that if other measures fail, steps be taken to apply such sanctions in co-operation with the United States of America as seem likely to bring the parties involved to a recognition of their International obligations, and in particular it recommends that every measure possible be taken to preserve confidence in the various treaties that are the basis of world peace. Further, it urges that the League of Nations and the Disarmament Conference should at once take steps to secure the immediate prohibition of sale or export of arms and war materials by any country."

Wed Less Than a Week Bride and Groom Dead

St. Catharines, March 13.—Less than one week divided the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Sibley, and their deaths. Sibley, a former member of the Port Dalhousie Board of Education,, was married last Saturday, March 5. Within a few days both were stricken with pneumonia. On Tuesday, March 8, his bride died. On Saturday, Sibley's name was added to hers on the death register.

"So you have been to France again, Mrs. Towson?" "Yes, seems that we can't keep away from Paris. Indeed, my daughter says w're regular parasites!"

Northern Ontario Air Crash Fatal

Godfrey W. Dean Killed When Junkers Craft Bursts into Flames

Winnipeg, March 13.—Godfrey W. Dean of Grand Mere, Que., crashed a Junkers plane and was instantly killed at Kagainagami Lake while flying from Tashota, Ont., according to an official statement of the Canadian Airways Limited (Western lines) here. He was unaccompanied on the flight.

A brief message to Airways offices at Sioux Lookout stated the plane burst into flames while flying over Kagainagami, one of the lakes that dot the country north of Tashota, and came down out of control.

Dean was engaged in flying general supplies to various trading posts in the north lake district and had taken off for his first trip of the day.

Godfrey Dean was well known throughout Canada as an experienced pilot, having accompanied the Trans-Canada air pageant last summer. He was the first pilot in Canada ever to loop the loop in an autogyro. He had only recently been transferred from the eastern division to the western division, in which the Lake Nipigon area is included.

Moscow Would Halt Munitions For Japan

Moscow.—Workers of all nations were called on to prevent shipments of munitions to the Far East and immediate evacuation of Manchuria and Shanghai was demanded in a manifesto issued recently by Communist leaders and left wing writers.

"In Manchuria, Japan is organizing White Guard regiments, increasing provocation against the Soviet Union, and preparing to attack the Soviets with the support of French imperialism and the consent of the United States and England," the manifesto said.

Signatories on behalf of the international anti-imperialistic league and the international workers aid included Maxim Gorki, Shapjuri Saklatvala, John Dos Passos, Henri Barbusse, and others.

Moscow to Build Artists' Homes

Moscow.—A novel painters and sculptors' campaign of building in the Soviet Capital, has been announced. Six houses of six storeys each, with accommodations for 1,500 artists, will be erected on the outskirts here. They will be constructed to provide a maximum of light in every studio, with various exhibition halls and special workshops.

Dr. Einstein Predicts Far Better Times

Pasadena, Calif.—Dr. Albert E. Einstein, eminent German physicist, who has been studying with natural scientists here, observed on his journey home that far better times appear to be ahead for both the Old World and the New.

"Whether the machine age has been a benefit or a detriment to humanity as a whole, one cannot say," he said, "but at the moment it appears that, in spite of present conditions, it can lead to better times than ever before."

Dr. Einstein said he expected to devote his time to improving upon his unified field theory, one which attempts a single law governing time, space, gravity and electromagnetism.

He has modified his theory that all space is curved, he said, but still is of the opinion that space in the vicinity of bodies of large mass is curved.

Planes Throw Food To Snowbound Deer

Moscow, Idaho.—More than 200 deer, snowbound in the picturesque wilds of north Idaho, with four feet of loose snow covering their customary fodder, have been fed from the skies. About 3,000 pounds of baled hay have been tossed from a cabin plane, hired by the Shoshone chapter of the Izaak Walton League of Wallace, Idaho, to feed the unfortunate animals along the upper North Fork of the Coeur d'Alene River.

The airplane has made three trips of more than 100 miles, in about 1½ hours each. Mr. N. A. Namer of Spokane, pilot of the famous Sun God nonstop refueling trip from coast to coast, flew the plane on the first two mercy errands, and Newton Wakefield, piloted it on the third. Mr. E. F. Hellmers, senior forest ranger of the Wallace district, directed the flight and dropped the bundles of hay, with long red streamers to attract attention of ground crews who were watching for the plane. Ranchers and woodsmen will store the hay, and feed it to the deer as they require it.

Amery Urges 33 1-3 p.c. Duty

London.—Right Hon. L. S. Amery in a speech in London recently declared that the Import Duties Committee were to build upon the Import Duties Act a real tariff super-structure. He did not think that anything less than 25 or 30 per cent. on finished manufactured goods would be useful.

While he did not think that the tariff should be so high as to be exclusive he thought experience showed that 33 and 1-3 per cent duty was about right for most manufactured goods.

Canadian National Steamship Strikes Reef Near Bermuda

Lady Somers Takes Passengers After They Abandon Ship —Vessel Feared Total Loss

Hamilton, Bermuda, March 13.—The Canadian National Steamship Prince David struck a reef two hours out of St. George's today, forced the evacuation of her 84 passengers and several hours later was sinking.

According to passengers, the vessel was making a speed of about 23 knots when the accident happened. The third officer was on the bridge at the time, passengers reported, and all were ordered immediately to don life preservers.

The life boats were lowered quickly while an S.O.S. was sent to the Lady Somers. When all the passengers had been taken off the Prince David was listing badly.

The Lady Somers, fearful of entering the channel, stood by three miles out while passengers and crew alike worked at the oars. They rowed for an hour and a half in rough sea before reaching the Lady Somers.

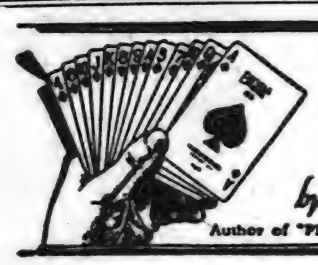
Chief Steward Kerr, of the Prince David, was praised highly by passengers for his work in the transfer of passengers. All were brought safely aboard the Lady Somers and then taken ashore.

The transfer was accomplished without any serious injury to any of the passengers or crew.

It was 11 a.m. when the 3,072-ton vessel bearing 87 vacation-minded passengers from Boston for St. George's was brought up sharply on the reef. Ship's officers calmly directed and assisted assengers in donning lifebelts and soon lifeboats were swung over the side and the long pull started to the Lady Somers. Later it was said by passengers that there was little commotion as the liner was abandoned.

True to the traditions of the sea, Capt. A. S. McKay was the last man to leave the ship. After the passengers and regular crew had quit the listing vessel, Capt. McKay and two engineers remained aboard surveying the situation. Late reports were that finally the captain and engineers were also taken from the sinking craft.

Immediate Help Brought From Afar



"My sister ill! Perhaps in actual need!" exclaimed the stay-at-home daughter as she glanced hurriedly through a letter written by a friend of her sister's, a nurse in the big city.

"I've no idea who can help me!" "I'll call the police on the long distance telephone."

In the telephone room at police headquarters a light flashed on the switchboard. It was a call from the distant town.

"My sister Elsie is ill at her home. Please send a policeman there," a voice said, adding the address. "It is a case for quick action. I didn't know whom to call but you!"

A patrolman and a trained nurse sent to investigate found the girl unconscious in her apartment. She was given immediate first aid treatment and removed to the hospital where she made a speedy recovery. Another serious situation saved by the magic of almost instantaneous long distance communication.

ARTICLE No 14

While playing with some very good players the other evening, the writer doubled four spades and defeated the contract by two tricks. It was a simple proposition but, much to the surprise of the writer, one of the players said, "How did you know when to double that bid? It may seem simple to you but I never seem to do the right thing at the right time. I always seem to double when they make their contract or I fail to double when I defeat them by several tricks If you can tell me when to double and why, you will not only help me but many others who are in the same fix." The writer thought this over very carefully and wrote the following summary on the subject for his friend's benefit, which applies equally to Auction or Contract:

A double made for the purpose of defeating the bid is a business double. Most business doubles are made, of course, after the bidding has reached such a point that it is evident they are made to defeat the contract. If your opponetns bid one heart, for example, and you double, it is only common sense that you are doubling for a bid and not to defeat the contract. Such a double is called an informatory double, made to give information to partner and not to defeat the contract. Suppose, however, your partner deals and bids one no trump, second hand bids two hearts and you have the following hand:

Hearts—K, J, 10, 7
Clubs—10, 4
Diamonds—K, 10, 9, 6
Spades—A, 4, 2

Do you think that second hand can make two hearts? No, of course, you don't. What are the reasons for your opinion? First, your partner has bid one no trump and, if he is a sound bidder, he has indicated at least two and one-half quick tricks; that is, tricks that will take if his opponents play the hand. Second, your own hand is worth at least two and possibly three tricks in hearts, one trick in diamonds and one trick in spades, a total of four and possibly five tricks. Add these tricks to the two you know your partner has by his no trump bid and you obtain six, possibly seven tricks against the two-heart bid If such is the case, shouldn't you double?

This example shows the process of thought that a player should follow in each instance before deciding to double an adverse bid. He never should double until he has added up the quick tricks in his own hand and those indicated in his partner's hand by the bidding. If the sum of these tricks is sufficient to defeat the contract, he should double, but not otherwise.

There is another point to consider. Learn to distinguish between free doubles and forced doubles. A free double is the double of a bid, which, if successful undoubled, would score game. For example: A double of four hearts is a free double, or a double of three diamonds when the opponent's score is nine or more at Auction or forty or more at Contract. A forced double, on the other hand, is a double which, if unsuccessful, would give the opponents a game they could not have scored except for the double. For example: A double of three clubs when there is no score and the opponents make their contract, gives them a game instead of only 18 points at Auction or 60 points at Contract.

Follow this rule: Take free doubles when you have a reasonable chance to defeat the contract, but make forced doubles only when absolutely certain to defeat the contract.

In case your partner hasn't made a bid, don't depend on him for tricks. Don't double, even if it's a free double, unless you can defeat the bid with your own tricks. So often one hears at the card table: "Well, partner, it's a free double." Such players double, very often without justification, merely because their opponents have a game anyhow and there's not a chance to beat them. This is particularly bad at Contract, for a redouble is very costly.

Another point to remember is this: Original bids always give exact information and, if sound, should always indicate at least two and one half quick tricks, irrespective of the suit or no trump bid. On the other hand, the cards of the remaining players are not, as a rule, subject to such exact valuation. For this reason, as between partners, it should be the duty of the partner of the original bidder to double, rather than vice versa. He knows what the original bidder has, whereas the original bidder can only guess as to his partner's holding.

The foregoing summary will give a fair basis for sound business doubles and, if properly applied, will produce many a big penalty.

RHEUMATISM IN HER BACK

"Took All the Life Out of Me"

KRUSCHEN BEAT IT!

This woman was tired of trying to find something that would rid her of rheumatism. But she made one more attempt. This time it was Kruschen she tried—and of course it did not fail her.

"For two or three years I was under treatment for rheumatism in my back, which took all the life out of me. I always had to go to bed until the pain had gone again. Friends told me of different things to take, till I was tired of trying, and none of them did me any good. About two years ago I started with Kruschen Salts, and I find they keep the bowels in splendid order, and that keeps me fine. I can say with all sincerity that nothing keeps me fitter than the little daily dose of your wonderful Kruschen Salts. You can make what use you like of this letter for the sake of fellow-sufferers."

—Mrs. W. G. L.

No remedy can bring permanent relief from rheumatism unless it performs three separate functions. These are (a) dissolution of the needle-pointed uric acid crystals which cause the pain; (b) the expulsion of these crystals from the system; (c) prevention of a further accumulation of uric acid.

Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts are the most effectual solvents of uric acid known to medical science. They swiftly dull the sharp edges of the painful crystals, then convert them into a harmless solution. Other ingredients of these Salts have a stimulating effect upon the kidneys, and assist them to expel the dissolved uratic needles through the natural channel. Combined with these solvents and eliminants of uric acid are still other salts which prevent food fermentation taking place in the intestine, and thereby check the further formation of mischievous uric acid.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

A group of Chinese boys were discussing the relative merits of the two bill boards, one advertising Carnation Milk and the other advertising Bull Durham.

One of the boys was explaining the signs to the other in this way: "In America they have he cows and she cows. The she cow give the milk and the he cow gives the tobacco."

A local man told a story the other day which is worth repeating. Two boys were returning from Sunday School and were discussing an important subject. "Do you think there's a devil?" asked one little fellow. "Naw," said the other, "It is just like Santa Claus; it's your dad."

God give me the strength of a pioneer,
And the faith of his hardy soul;

Best way to improve the postal service is to stop mailing bills. Opportunity knocks once—the installment collector ever after. Many a clever child turns into very ordinary grown-up. Miss Cutie Manyfaces, of Brushville, is now signing her love letters, "Yours Till Ice Skates." True charity should be more than just food for the hungry and raiment for the naked. It should provide new faith and hope for those who are helped to become the kind of charity described as the greatest of these three virtues. People do not marry as early as they used to. Comments preacher. No, but they marry a good deal oftener. Fitting the shoe. Lots of the things you laugh at in life are funny only because they happen to someone else. Even the people who aren't so "good" as you are may live up to their standards as well as you do. The man who is killing himself eating may be worried greatly about his neighbor whom he thinks is drinking too much.

Son—"Father, to what do you attribute your success?"

Dad—"Hod work, me lad, hod work."

Ed.—"Did you smile at your recent troubles, as I advised you?"

Ned—"Yes, darn you, and my wife hit me over the head with a broom and told me to wipe the silly grin off my face."

Jim—"Is Gertrude homely?"

Sam—"Well, if her face is her fortune, her husband didn't marry her for money."

Rimer—"Do you think I should put more fire into my poetry?"

Editor—"No, quite the reverse."

A lady was telling her doctor that her maid objected to going to the Isle of Wight again, as the climate "was not embracing" enough, and added, "What am I to do with such a woman?" The doctor replied: "You had better take her to the Isle of Man."

Reduce the Acid

SICK stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated.

Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour. Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. For 50 years the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Go, prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians in correcting excess acids.

Can't PLAY

Can't REST

—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

CHESLEY EDITOR WINS PRIZE OF $5,000.00

We congratulate Mr. Wm. McDonald of the Chesley Enterprize, on winning the prize of $5,000 offered by the Family Herald for the nearest guess as to the population of Canada by the census of 1931.

Seven guesses were given on every new renewal subscription sent in. Mr. McDonald went right after it, making a thorough canvass of the community last summer and sent in 294 new or renewal subscriptions to the Herald, which entitled him to 2.058 guesses. One of these guesses was the exact number which was announced as final about three weeks ago, 10,374,196. In these times of depression a present of $5,000 is certainly a lucky windfall.

INGLEWOOD

The Community Hall, at Inglewood, was filled to capacity last Friday night, when the play "Sonny Jane" was presented. Those taking part were: Miss Edith Wilson, Miss Joyce Maxwell, Miss Myrtle Fudge, Miss Lily Fudge, Miss Ethel McBride, Miss Marjorie McLeod, Miss Gertrude Ross, Mr. Ed. Walsh, Mr. Bill Wilson, Mr. Alec Garva, Mr. Ted McBride Mr. Jimmie, Ross. The director was Rev. Mr. Dyer.

At the close of the program, Miss Gertrude Ross spoke in behalf of the performers, expressing their thanks to the Rev. Mr. Ryer, for the able way he looked after the coaching of the players.

Mr. Dyer was presented with a lovely gift. This play has already been booked for Caledon, Caledon East and Campbell's Cross.

Mr. Jim Steen, president of the Y.P.S., of Streetsville United church, and Mr. Reg. Bruce were present.

PEEL MUSICAL FESTIVAL

There are just six weeks until the great musical event of the year for Peel County, when the Peel Musical Festival will be held in St. Paul's Sunday School Auditorium. The dates are April 28th, 29th and 30th.

The entries are coming in each day and the Committee would be pleased to have them as soon as possible to give them a chance to arrange the program.

A full program with lists of entries and donors will be published directly after April 11th.

This Festival promises to be the best yet. Has it your co-operation? There are 82 classes in the Syllabus, copies of which may be secured at the Dept. of Agriculture, Brampton.

Gains Seventeen Pounds

Anyone seeing Mary would find it hard to believe that this smiling young woman was a consumptive. Indeed, for Mary this word "was" is the best part of the whole story, for she fully believes that she is just about "cured" and ready to go back to work. "Why, in just three months they put nearly seventeen pounds weight on me," says she, with a hint of Irish brogue, "and me that weak when I came in that I had to be carried on a stretcher."

Mary has been in the Toronto Hospital for Consumptives for several months, but such is the skill of the doctors, such the result of good food, rest and careful nursing, that she again meets the world with a smile, and counts the days to the time when she will be able to work once more and help in her mother's support.

A great work this, that cares for many hundreds of the consumptive poor who otherwise would have to accept the hardships and uncertainties of being tended at home. Will you please help such as Mary to get well? Your subscription will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Mr. A. H. Ames, 123 College Street, Toronto.

REFORESTATION

The Ontario Government supplies FREE from its nurseries, 3,500 young forest trees to any Ontario Farmer who requires them for reforestation. This year, owing to the fact that the Forestry Branch has a surplus of trees on hand, this limit will not be adhered to, and no charge will be made for additional quantities over this number.

For windbreak planting 500 trees has been the limit and no increase in number for this work will be made. The applications for trees must be received by the end of March. The following trees may be secured for Forest Planting: Conifers—White pine, Red pine, Jack pine, Scotch pine, European larch, White spruce, White cedar; Cuttings — Carolina Poplar, White willow; Hardwoods—Walnut, Butternut, Elm, White ash, Soft maple, Red oak, Basswood. Trees for windbreaks—White spruce, Norway spruce, White cedar.

The purpose of this distribution is to assist farmers and landowners in the Province to improve their woodlots and to reforest waste portions of their holdings. The planting of trees increases the value of your property as well as being useful for timber and fuel.

The cost of shipping the trees must be paid by the person receiving them. All trees are shipped out during the latter part of April. You can profit by taking advantage of the Government's liberal offer. Why not replant that woodlot you have been cutting from for years? You have taken quantities of fuel and wood from it and now is the time to replant.

The landowner should look upon his woodlot as a crop and realize that it is necessary for him to handle it with this in mind if he wishes it to yield him the greatest returns.

Some people have the idea that the woodlot is a ready and convenient source of supply for small quantities of lumber and particularly for fire wood. It should be used for this purpose and also retained as a perpetual source of supply. The woodlot which is of greatest value on the farm, and will yield the most wood for general purposes, is one which is made up of trees of all ages and sizes.

Woodlots play an important part in the rural districts of our Province as windbreaks and shelterbelts, and as such protect buildings and fields in crop from winds, both summer and winter. They give shelter from the sun to cattle and provide nesting places for insectivorous birds. The presence of woodlots often decides the amount of water in springs and streams and has a direct influence on water supply and the amount of moisture in the soil.

The woodlot adds to the beauty and attractiveness of your home. Trees on the farm transform it from just a property to a home farm. Every farm should have a wooded area, even if it must be planted.

Here is your chance to secure trees for such planting from the Forestry Branch free of charge. Why not secure more information regarding tree planting?

Peel and Halton Jersey Breeders' Annual Meeting

Peter Dick, President of the Peel and Halton Jersey Breeders presided at the annual meeting of the Club, held in the Agricultural office, Brampton, on Saturday afternoon, March 12th.

Robt. Segsworth brought in the Secretary-Treasurer's report which showed the activities in 1931 in promoting the Jersey breed throughout the district.

Col. Bartley Bull stressed the importance of R.O.P. milk testing as a means of increasing the value of the herd and of the surplus stock. He also invited the breeders to Hawthorne lodge for the 1932 picnic.

Mr. R. W. Wade, Director of Ontario Livestock Branch, Toronto, was introduced by J. M. Dolson, and outlined in a masterly fashion the transmission of milk and butterfat qualities from mother to daughter by the use of proven sires. He congratulated the club on the work accomplished in the past and endorsed the fostering of a calf club to interest and educate the young people.

Watson, Wiggins, Frank Chapman, Ed. Harrop, Jas. Steen and Hunter Arnott spoke on ways and means to advertise and popularize the breed and mentioned particularly the encouragement to 'teen-age boys. motion was put through to sponsor a calf club in Peel and to donate cash prizes at the School Fairs in Halton this year.

The President announced the annual Jersey banquet in the St. Paul's Church, Milton, on March 29th ,with Dr. G. I. Christie, President of O.A.C. Guelph and Mr. Ed. Syer, Mayor of Milton as guest speakers. The feature of the programme to be the presentation of the One-Act play, "The Bishop's Candlesticks", put on by the Streetsville Juniors and coached by Mrs. Fred Maas. The guest of honour to be Martin Graham, 12 years old, of Britannia, who was the winner of the Hon. T. L. Kennedy Silver Trophy for the best animal in the Peel Calf Clubs in 1931.

The election of officers resulted in the following being elected: Hon. Presidents, D. O. Bull, Brampton; J. M. Dolson, Brampton R.R. 2; Jas. Steen, Meadowvale; President, Peter Dick, Georgetown R.R. 4; 1st Vice-President, Hunter Arnott, Streetsville R.R. 3; 2nd Vice-President, Edward Harrop, Milton; Sec.-Treas., Bob Segsworth, Brampton; Directors, Frank Chapman, Malton; Watson Wiggins, Caledon; Cyril Clark, Brampton R.R. 6; R. J. Graham, Georgetown; Ward Ruddell, Georgetown; Hugh Black, Milton.

Religions and Stories That Parallel

All the great religions have stories that parallel each other in some degree. For instance, Jephthah, one of the judges of Israel, made a remarkable vow before he marched against the Ammonites, that if he proved victorious he would offer to the Lord the first living thing which should come to meet him on his return. This happened to be his only daughter, whom he sacrificed to fulfill his rash vow. The history of Jephthah is contained in the second book of Judges. Idomeneus, in Homeric legend, king of Crete, succeeded his father Deucalion on the throne, and accompanied the Greeks to the Trojan war with a fleet of 90 ships. During this war he rendered himself famous by his valor. While returning, he made a vow to Neptune in a dangerous tempest that if he escaped he would offer to the god whatever living creature first presented itself to his eye on the Cretan shore. This was his son, who came to congratulate him on his safe return. Idomeneus redeemed his promise, but the inhumanity of this sacrifice rendered him so odious to his subjects that he was exiled from his country.—Montreal Family Herald.

Insignia of Royalty in Ancient Egyptian Tomb

A tomb discovered near Cairo, by Prof. Selim Hassan, containing a mummy adorned with a gold crown and a complete set of jewelry, is perhaps the only tomb in this area untouched by thieves. The gold crown was 24 inches in circumference. It was kept in position by two gold lotus flowers, joined by a chalcedony. Each flower was topped by a bird with a long beak, named in hieroglyphics "Yakhu." In the middle of the crown in front was a disk studded with colored stones set in another lotus flower. The large necklace was composed of 50 pieces of gold in the shape of some insects threaded on a gold string. Gold bracelets having the form of the hieroglyphic letter "N"; a number of silver bracelets—it is believed that this is the first time silver bracelets have been discovered in a tomb of the fourth dynasty—and two pure gold anklets also were found.

Curiosity From the Bog

Uncovering the bog at Ralnghan, in the county of Shercock, Ireland, a curious bit of wood carving was brought to light which is perplexing the archeologists and scientists of Ireland and England. The specimen is evidently of great age, 500 years at least, and probably much more. It is about 3 feet in length and represents a woman, but the arms are missing, and it is the work of a skilled carver. There are some curious inscriptions upon it which are legible. The specimen has been placed on exhibition at the Dublin museum with the hope that some student may offer some explanation of the origin and use.

No Tennessee Pygmies

The existence of a pygmy race in Tennessee is believed to be a fallacy by modern ethnologists. The story owes its origin to the discovery in the early half of the Nineteenth century of numerous small stone coffins containing skeletons, the largest of which measured 24 inches in length and 9 inches in depth. These were assumed to be the remains of a race of pygmies. However, they have proved to be in many cases the skeletons of children. Those of adults were deprived of flesh according to the common custom in the mound region, then disjointed and the bones packed into a very small space.

Hens Busy

The treasurer of the Ladies Aid society of a Greensburg church made a deposit for her organization in a Greensburg bank recently. At the deposit window she spoke to the teller, whom she knew.

The deposit was a considerable one for a church organization and as she passed in the money she said: "Here's the aid money."

The teller understood her to say, "Here's the egg money." Then came the break.

"Well, it looks as though the old hens have been laying pretty good lately," was his comment.—Indianapolis News.

Matching Shade

At a soiree Dumas was wearing the ribbon of a certain order, having recently been made a commandant, and an envious friend remarked upon it.

"My dear fellow," he said, "that cordon is a wretched color! One would think it was your woolen vest that was showing!"

"Oh, no, my dear d'E——," replied Duman with a smile, "you're mistaken; it's not a bad color; it is exactly the shade of the sour grapes in the fable."—Golden Book.

Houses Like Towns

One of those great dwelling houses which are like small towns has been opened in Vienna. It is built round grassy courtyards set with trees, and will house 5,000 people in 1,382 flats. It has cost $4,200,000. In the building are two electric laundries, two bathing establishments, two kindergartens, a dental clinic, a "mother's advice center," a library, a post office, a chemist's, and 25 other shops. The baths are heated by the steam which is electrically generated for the whole district.

Fire Scare

Last Thursday evening a spark from the chimney set fire to the roof of J. P. Dunn's house. A fire alarm was sounded and in a short time the fire brigade and a number of citizens were on the scene. The fire had not made much headway and was easily extinguished with chemicals. A small hole was burnt in the roof, but was repaired next day. For some reason the fire hose could not be attached to the hydrant and this proves that the fire brigade should have at least one practise between fires

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Dunn wish to thank all those who helped to put out the fire last Thursday night

DECISIONS RESPECTING NEWSPAPERS

Court decisions respecting newspaper subscriptions are very clear. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the post office, whether in his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for payment. If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrears or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and then collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken or not. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the post office or removing and leaving them unpaid, is prima facie evidence of intention of fraud.

THE

TULE MARSH MURDER

STORY OF A MISSING ACTRESS AND THE TAX WITS TO EXPLAIN HER FATE.

BY NANCY BARR MAVITY.

CHAPTER LII.—(Concluded.)

"I did not foresee that Barbara would find out. Barbara could not understand that crime was merely the logical response to an emergency. You see, when all's said and done, I couldn't pull out my thread quite to the end. That is my weakness."

The doctor paused and lighted a cigar. The match in his hand was trembling.

"You see?" He shrugged his massive shoulders. "But that's not your story. That, if you please, is the part you will leave out when you write it. It begins with the day I found Orme on the doorstep. That part is quite true. All that I said was true. I was far too clever to lie. Facts can be concealed, but they cannot be obliterated.

"Orme came to see me daily. When he talked with Mrs. Kane he told her that Sheila could reach him through me. And she did telephone me to arrange a meeting.

"Well, when Orme and Sheila left the Ellsworth house on the night of March 18, they came to my office for a conference. Orme really did suffer a retroactive amnesia for that interview. I was not sure of that until I examined him in jail. It did not matter to me greatly—my plan was complete without it—but I could readily adjust my arrangements to this new circumstance.

"Orme insisted that Sheila should acknowledge their marriage. He was willing to give her a divorce—but that wasn't what she wanted. She knew that if Ellsworth were subjected to the publicity of a divorce, her hold on him would be loosened. He would never re-marry her. And she wanted the status of his wife; she wanted his millions. She was approaching forty, you know. She was through with adventure, and wanted security. She told me that I would have to get Orme out of her way—if necessary, by having him committed to an asylum.

"You remember that I have never denied my previous acquaintance with Sheila O'Shay, in the days when she was on the stage. That was a number of years ago—before I had learned that the world cannot bear to face honesty, that its pretty words must be taken with mock seriousness.

"Sheila had a roommate then—a dancer just rising to fame. Her name was quickly forgotten—you would not remember it. I have never pretended that my passing attachment to her was more than—what it was. I certainly could not afford to have my name linked with her; a doctor must avoid scandal.

"When she lost her job because she was going to have a baby and could no longer dance, it was strictly her own business. But she let her emotions run away with her. In a fit of repression, she jumped into the Seine. But she left a letter behind her for Sheila, telling the whole story.

"Of course Sheila had kept that letter. She would! She was the kind of fool that keeps everything. But not quite a fool. For once in my life I had met a person like myself, one who let nothing stand in the way of what she wanted.

"She threatened me with exposure if I didn't dispose of Orme. And I knew what the silly world would think of that story. My carefully constructed mask would slip with a vengeance!

"The world shrieks for vengeance. And, once started on the track, it would find other incidents of the past to dig up. No, I couldn't afford to let Sheila O'Shay keep that weapon in her hands. I said very little; I was considering the problem, and how to meet it.

"Then Orme unexpectedly met it for me. The threat of railroading him to the asylum set him wild. It was her contempt more than her ruthlessness that made him see red. She was standing up, looking at me, presenting her ultimatum. Suddenly Orme seized the metal elephant from the desk and struck her with all his force on the point of her chin—a perfect uppercut. She fell backwards, striking her head against the corner of the desk. He stood looking at her for a moment.

"'I've killed her,' he said.

"I bent over her, and when I looked up he was gone.

"She was not dead, only stunned, but there was the answer to my problem. I could finish the job, and remove the danger of Sheila permanently from my path. I could conceal the body. In case Orme were found and connected with the case, he would believe that he was the murderer. He would either think that he himself had disposed of the body in a daze or that I had tried to protect him. Either way, he insured my own safety. If necessary I could get him off on a plea of insanity.

"So I put Sheila out of my way. I saw to it that the police should suggest that I search her boudoir. I found the letter in her desk, when I was rummaging through her papers, and slipped it into my pocket. Later I destroyed it.

"I took the body to the marsh in Barbara's car instead of my own, to avoid any chance of being recognized. The one thing I hadn't counted on was that I should meet Barbara in the hall when I was carrying out the body.

"She had been aroused by the sound of our voices, and had heard the crash of Sheila's fall. She stood there on the steps, her hand on her throat, and looked at me. She said absolutely nothing. But she knew. And she couldn't see it as I saw it, as merely the necessary adjustment to a problem.

"I saw the horror in her eyes. And yet, she said nothing. She would have gone through life in the shadow of that horror. I knew that I could trust Barbara."

"Yes," said Peter. "You would trust Barbara."

"Of course, the horror in her eyes should have meant nothing to me. Her loyalty should have been merely one of those useful weaknesses of humanity which I had learned to count upon. Pretty playthings!"

"Yes," Peter said again. "The useless, impractical virtues—incorruptible beauty. Barbara is like that."

"And I discovered my own weakness. It was hard to live with that horror in Barbara's eyes. I hope you can make it clear to Barbara that I loved her."

"Yes," said Peter, "I will make it clear."

"It won't matter to me, of course. I shall not know. And yet, somehow, it does seem to matter."

"I think it matters. You can count on me."

"I know I can count on you. You live by words—they mean something to you. Queer, isn't it? Honor, loyalty, trust—just words. And yet you live by them. They are your reality. And in the end, I have to count on them. And yet I am the master of them all. I could save myself. Only, if I carried it through, if I saved myself, I should be branded as a failure. I should have to admit that for the first time I had taken a case which I could not solve. You were right when you taunted me with that."

"I'm sorry," Peter said, painfully. "I'm sorry I put it to you like that."

"Oh, but I had already put it to myself! And if I let myself fail—there would always be the horror in Barbara's eyes."

"You see," Peter exclaimed. "You were not the complete egoist after all! There was a flaw in your crystal. Or perhaps the flaw was the other thing the thing that enslaved your intelligence to one narrow personal ambition. I don't know——"

"It's rather an academic point, isn't it?" the doctor smiled. "But it's nothings to make such a fuss about. And I rather fancy I've written a thing or two which will be remembered when all this has dropped into the limbo of forgotten news. After all, I've done some good work, Peter."

Dr. Cavanaugh methodically tamped out the stub of his cigar against the side of the ash tray and half drew another from his pocket. Then he slipped it back again.

"No," he murmured, "there isn't time. I don't suppose, Peter, you'd care to shake hands with me, for good-bye? Silly of me to care about a thing like that!"

Peter rose stiffly. His lips were pressed tightly together and his throat ached unbearably. The tears were on his cheeks as he held out his hand.

"Goodbye, my friend," he said. Then it came to him to add the words the doctor would most wish to take with him: "The world will remember you as a great man."

"Good-bye, Peter,' the doctor said cheerfully. "You'd better go and find Barbara. I don't want her to be startled by the shot."

CHAPTER LIII.

Barbara was drowsing in the big chair by the fire. Peter came gently behind her, and held both hands over her ears. She looked up at him dreamily, only half awake. A muffled report came from the doctor's office.

"What is that?" Barbara struggled to her feet, but Peter's arms were warm and close around her.

"It's all right, darling. It's all right," he crooned.

She put up her hand to his face, and looked wonderingly at her wet fingers.

Peter sat down in the big chair and held her close, as if she were a child.

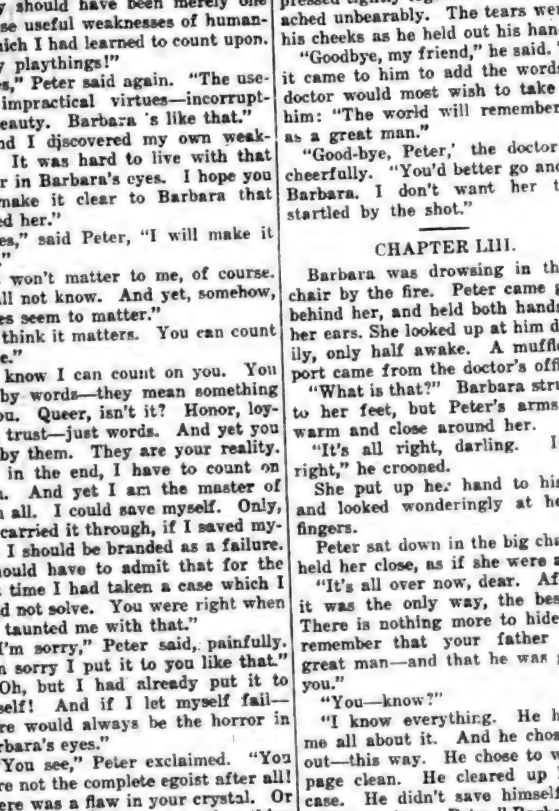
"It's all over now, dear. After all, it was the only way, the best way. There is nothing more to hide. Just remember that your father was a great man—and that he was good to you."

"You—know?"

"I know everything. He has told me all about it. And he chose to go out—this way. He chose to wipe the page clean. He cleared up his last case. He didn't save himself."

"Do you know, Peter," Barbara said, "I think I am rather proud of my father. I think I will marry you, Peter."

"Yes," Peter said.



"Will it have to come out? Couldn't it end—like this.

"But he wanted them to know that he hadn't really failed to solve the case. But I believe he would let you have it your way, Barbara."

Then Peter rang up Jimmy. "Jimmy, Dr. Cavanaugh has just committed suicide. Breakdown, due to overwork on the Ellsworth case. I was present. Yes, it's exclusive, absolutely. And, Jimmy, that's not all. I've another piece of front page news for you. I'm going to be married!"

"Hell!" said Jimmy. "That's not news."

(The End.)

John Vergez spears a high one during a practice game at Los Angeles. He will keep his third base position with the New York Giants this year.

Tara Birrell captured London and Berlin, hopes to make a hit at Hollywood. Her father was a cotton man of Lancashire, England, and her mother a Virginian.

The newly-appointed pastor of a Negro church faced a packed audience when he rose to deliver his maiden sermon on the burning question: "Is there a hell?" "Bredren," he said, "de Lord made de world round like a ball." "Amen," agreed the congregation. "And de Lord made two axles for de world to go round on, and He put one axle at de North Pole and de udder axle at de South Pole." "Amen," cried the congregation. "And de Lord put a lot of oil and grease in de centre of de world to keep de axles well greased and oiled." "Amen," said the congregation. "And then a lot of sinners dig wells in America, in Mexico, in Russia, and in Persia, and steal de Lord's oil and grease. And some day dey will have all de Lord's oil and grease, and dem axles is gonna git hot. And den, dat will be hell, bredren, dat will be hell!"

The talkative old man was delivering quite a lecture on speedy travel to the young man with whom he shared a compartment. "Yes, we travel fast these days," he said. "But have you ever thought of the flight of time—of the fleeting hours of youth, the golden days that swiftly pass away? Have you ever counted the minutes——?"

"Look here," said the young man, suspiciously, "I don't quite get the hang of this. Are you trying to sell me a watch?"

Cancer of the Mouth

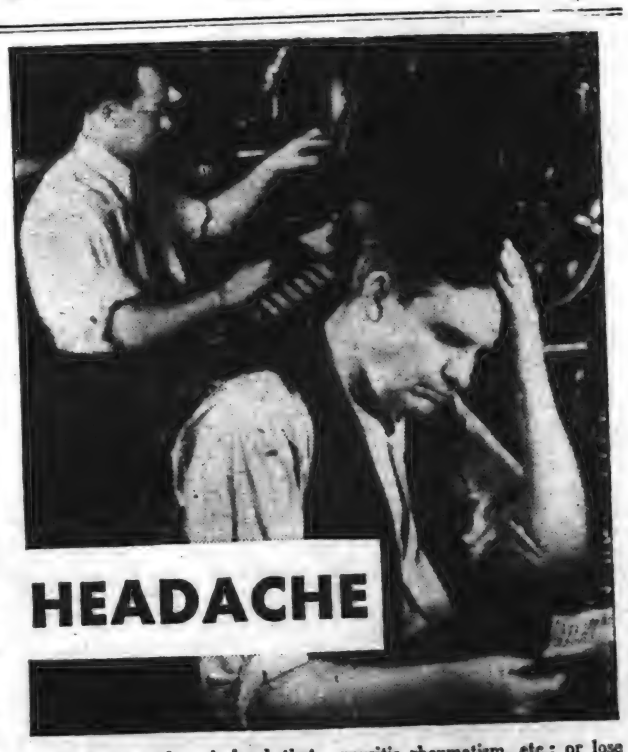
This is just as preventable a disease as cancer of the skin. The sore spot due to the irritation of a tooth or the white patch of leucoplakia the result of tobacco in any form, including snuff, is always present for some time before cancer develops. All one has to do when warned is stop tobacco or snuff and go to the dentist to have the teeth cleaned and smoothed, or the irritating plate changed. As a matter of fact a large number of people know and practice this today. In the last five years we had ample evidence of the protective value of such knowledge. The modern woman who uses tobacco, chiefly in the form of cigarettes, very rarely develops cancer of the mouth, because this modern woman keeps her teeth clean, smooth and in good order, while the man, just as modern in other ways, still neglects his teeth, and the incidence of cancer of the mouth to-day is very much larger in men than in women.

Women have demonstrated to men that it is possible to smoke with very little risk of suffering from cancer of the mouth. When men learn this, they will protect themselves from many other diseases that depend upon the neglect of the teeth. So few women to-day use snuff, and these are living in regions less accessible to messages of this kind through the public press. But I wish to warn them that snuff used in the mouth as they use it is a very dangerous habit. When used in the nose it seems less dangerous.

Men and women who use tobacco in moderation and know the added danger of cancer if the teeth are neglected, may ultimately be protected from other threatening diseases which are caused by neglect of the teeth and neglect of daily cleansing of the mouth.

A mother-in-law was in the habit of visiting her daughter just often enough to make her daughter's husband wish he had married an orphan. One day she arrived and found her daughter in tears. "What has happened?" she inquired. "Has George deserted you? Has he run away?" "Y-yes!" sobbed the wife. "Then there is a woman in the case; who is she?" "Y-you!" "Good heavens!" cried the woman. "And to think that I never encouraged him!"

"I want to buy a wireless set on the instalment plan." "Can you give any references, madam?" "Yes, indeed. The last dealer we bought one from will be glad to tell you that there wasn't a single scratch on the cabinet when he took it back!"



DRAPERIES MADE NEW

"When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found my draperies had become creased from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. Then I forgot them The result was they became badly faded and sun-spotted.

"I was heartsick until the happy thought struck me to dye them. I just dyed them a deeper green, and as I used Diamond Dyes they look gorgeous and new. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—when used either for tinting or dyeing—and never take the life out of cloth as other dyes do."

"And then a lot of sinners dig wells in America, in Mexico, in Russia, and in Persia, and steal de Lord's oil and grease. And some day dey will have all de Lord's oil and grease, and dem axles is gonna git hot. And den, dat will be hell, bredren, dat will be hell!"

The talkative old man was delivering quite a lecture on speedy travel to the young man with whom he shared a compartment. "Yes, we travel fast these days," he said. "But have you ever thought of the flight of time—of the fleeting hours of youth, the golden days that swiftly pass away? Have you ever counted the minutes——?" "Look here," said the young man, suspiciously, "I don't quite get the hang of this. Are you trying to sell me a watch?"

Cancer of the Mouth

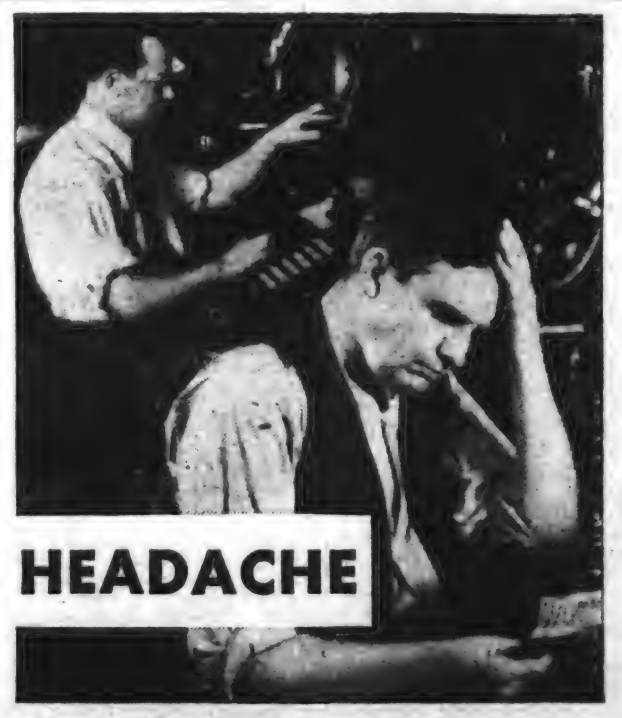
This is just as preventable a disease as cancer of the skin. The sore spot due to the irritation of a tooth or the white patch of leucoplakia the result of tobacco in any form, including snuff, is always present for some time before cancer develops. All one has to do when warned is stop tobacco or snuff and go to the dentist to have the teeth cleaned and smoothed, or the irritating plate changed. As a matter of fact a large number of people know and practice this today. In the last five years we had ample evidence of the protective value of such knowledge. The modern woman who uses tobacco, chiefly in the form of cigarettes, very rarely develops cancer of the mouth, because this modern woman keeps her teeth clean, smooth and in good order, while the man, just as modern in other ways, still neglects his teeth, and the incidence of cancer of the mouth to-day is very much larger in men than in women.

Women have demonstrated to men that it is possible to smoke with very little risk of suffering from cancer of the mouth. When men learn this, they will protect themselves from many other diseases that depend upon the neglect of the teeth. So few women to-day use snuff, and these are living in regions less accessible to messages of this kind through the public press. But I wish to warn them that snuff used in the mouth as they use it is a very dangerous habit. When used in the nose it seems less dangerous.

Men and women who use tobacco in moderation and know the added danger of cancer if the teeth are neglected, may ultimately be protected from other threatening diseases which are caused by neglect of the teeth and neglect of daily cleansing of the mouth.

A mother-in-law was in the habit of visiting her daughter just often enough to make her daughter's husband wish he had married an orphan. One day she arrived and found her daughter in tears. "What has happened?" she inquired. "Has George deserted you? Has he run away?" "Y-yes!" sobbed the wife. "Then there is a woman in the case; who is she?" "Y-you!" "Good heavens!" cried the woman. "And to think that I never encouraged him!"

"I want to buy a wireless set on the instalment plan." "Can you give any references, madam?" "Yes, indeed. The last dealer we bought one from will be glad to tell you that there wasn't a single scratch on the cabinet when he took it back!"



DRAPERIES MADE NEW

"When we resumed housekeeping a month ago I found my draperies had become creased from packing. I hung them out on the line, hoping to remove the creases. Then I forgot them. The result was they became badly faded and sun-spotted.

"I was heartsick until the happy thought struck me to dye them. I just dyed them a deeper green, and as I used Diamond Dyes they look gorgeous and new. I have never seen easier dyes to use than Diamond Dyes. They give the most beautiful colors—when used either for tinting or dyeing—and never take the life out of cloth as other dyes do."

Sunday School Lesson

March 20. Lesson XII—Jesus Dies on the Cross—John 19: 17-22, 28-30. Golden Text—Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures.—1 Corinthians 15: 3.

ANALYSIS.

I. GOLGOTHA, 19: 17-22.
II. MOTHER AND SON, 19: 25-27.
III. THE FINISHED TASK, 19: 28-30.

I. GOLGOTHA, 19: 17-22.

For the evangelist, everything that occurred on the day of the crucifixion was filled with solemn meaning. He has brooded long on the inner meaning of the Cross, and now into his story he crowded his rich symbolism.

He emphasizes the fact that Jesus carried his own cross, v. 17. This does not contradict the other accounts where Simon is commandeered to help. The procession started with Jesus carrying his cross although he was later helped with it. The incident suggests in symbol the voluntary nature of the sacrifice. Golgotha (v. 17) "the place of the skull," beyond the northern wall of the city, near where two ways cross (Mark 15: 29) took its name from its shape, possibly also from its grim associations.

Jesus was not the only victim that day. Two thieves had also been brought up. Jesus was hanged "in the midst." He was reckoned with the transgressors, Luke 22: 37. From Jordan side (John 1: 26) on to Golgotha, Jesus was "among" those whom he would redeem.

Their gruesome work completed, the soldiers nailed above Jesus' head the placard "written in Hebrew, Greek and Latin" (v. 20) as John is careful to point out. It was an unconscious prophecy of Christ as all the world's king. The Jews, their pride greatly irritated, as Pilate no doubt intended, tried to have the inscription changed, v. 21. Pilate, "by nature obstinate and stubborn" (Philo), haughtily replied, "What I have written, I have written."

Who crucified Jesus? (a) the orthodox religious leaders of his time—who believed that they had high reasons for what they did. Ordinary selfishness, cowardice, prejudice, dislike, such as characterize most of us, were enough when followed out to their logical conclusions, to put to death the Son of God. (b) the vested interests, represented by the Sadducees. They still crucify the Christ when he opposes them (c) the politicians, represented by Pilate. (d) the soldiers,—good fellows in themselves. Jesus spoke highly of some of them. It was a soldier who did him the last earthly kindness he received, 19: 29. But it was by men prepared for their task by military discipline that he was done to death on Golgotha. Our military systems are planned to depersonalize those whom they train. Soldiers are educated not to think for themselves, but to give unreasoning obedience to a command. "Such a system, while it has noble associations with courage, loyalty, honor and self-effacement, counteracts that which Christianity tries hardest to create—a reasoning conscience, Coffin, The Meaning of the Cross.

II. MOTHER AND SON, 19: 25-27.

We now come to the most touching scene of all. Reckless in her grief, Jesus' mother had pressed close to the cross. In his dying agony, his care for his widowed mother was his one earthly thought. "Woman, behold thy son," said he, looking at the disciple whom he loved. In the word translated "woman" there is no harshness such as the English suggests. Symbolically the incident is taken that Jesus commends his mother, the Jewish church, the ancient faith which gave birth to Christianity, into the keeping of the Christian believers. What was valuable and permanent in Judaism now passes over into Christianity: The "mother" of Jesus dwells in the house of his disciple.

III. THE FINISHED TASK, 19: 28-30.

Then comes the triumphant "It is finished." What did he accomplish in his finished work? He bore our sins. (a) he was the victim of sin's deadly hostilit. (b) he bore our sins on his conscience. He identified himself with men in their suffering, their need, their corporate guilt. He was undergoing the Cross long before he found himself on Calvary. (c) He bears our sin away, not in the sense that another shoulders a legal debt for another, but by demonstrating to us a love that swallows up sin and destroys it. In going the full length demanded by the situation, he showed us the yearning heart of God. That love wins from men an answering love, rendering distasteful the sin that once appealed to them, because it inures him. (d) He bears our sin in the sense that he is our substitute. He opened up the way that leads to God. That way, once opened, remains so for ever. No one need repeat the vicarious sacrifice of him who gave himself to discover the route. But we must climb it after him.

London-Capetown Linked

Another forge in the mighty chain of telephone exchanges, making London the world centre was recently completed when the Lord Mayor laid the cornerstone and spoke to the mayor of Capetown, 8,000 miles distant.

Comradeship

Come, I will make the continent indissoluble;
I will make the most splendid race the sun ever yet shone upon;
With the love of comrades,
With the life-long love of comrades.
I will plant companionship thick as trees along all the rivers of America, and along the shores of the great lakes, and all over the prairies;
I will make inseparable cities, with their arms about each other's necks;
For you; for you, I am trilling these songs,
In the love of comrades,
In the high-towering love of comrades."

—Walt Whitman. "Poems."

OTHERS

Doing nothing for others is the undoing of one's self. We must be purposely kind and generous, or we miss the best part of existence. The heart that goes out of itself gets large and full of joy. This is the great secret of the inner life. We do ourselves the most good doing something for others.—Horace Mann.

"Dearest, this kiss tells you all I have to say. Have you understood me?" "Oh, please say it again."

Fifty Years Hence

By Winston Churchill, in the Strand Magazine (December, 1931)

The great mass of human beings absorbed in the toils, cares and activities of life, are only dimly conscious of the pace at which mankind is travelling. Enormous changes have taken place in the last hundred years. The pace is ever quickening. Our century has witnessed an enormous revelation in material things, in scientific appliances, in political institutons, in manners and customs. The greatest change of all is the least perceptible by individuals—it is the far greater numbers which in every civilized country participate in the fuller life of man.

Disraeli wrote at the beginning of the nineteenth century that 'England was for the few, and the very few." Now millions have lifted themselves above the primary necessities, in Europe as well as in America. Culture is a possibility for people who, a century ago, would never have thought of it. Even Indian and China, who stood still for thousands of years, are also rapidly moving.

What is it that has produced this new prodigious speed in man? Science is the cause. Science cares nothing for man-made laws, time-honored customs, or cherished beliefs. Science has laid hold of us, conscripted us into regiments, set us to work upon its highways and in its arsenals; rewarded us for our services, healed us when we were young, pensioned us when we were worn out.

Man in his earliest stages lived alone and avoided his neighbors with as much anxiety and probably as much reason as he avoided the fierce flesh-eating beasts that shared his forests. Gradually, however, the advantages of co-operation became evident. For hundreds of years man worked together to utilize his own muscular efforts. But another era dawned when he learned how to harness the forces of Nature. Methods of production and communication were speeded up.

The most wonderful of all modern prophecies is found in Tennyson's "Locksley Hall."

For I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw a vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens filled with commerce, argosies magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens filled with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy armies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging thro' the thunderstorm;

Till the war-drum throbb's no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

Slowly comes a hungry people, as a lion, creeping nigher,
Glares at one that nods and winks behind a slowly dying fire.

These six stanzas of prediction, written eighty years ago, have already been fulfilled.

There are two processes which we adopt consciously or unconsciously when we try to prophesy. We can seek a period in the past whose conditions resemble as closely as possible those of our day, and presume that the sequel to that period, save for some minor alterations, will be similar. Secondly, we can survey the general course of development in our immediate past, and endeavor to prolong it into the near future. The first is the method of the historian; the second, that of the scientist. Only the second is open to us now, and that only is a partial sphere. But, obviously all that Science has achieved in modern times, and the knowledge and power now in her possession, we can predict with some assurance the inventions and discoveries which will govern our future. We can but guess what reactions these discoveries and their applications will produce upon the habits, outlook and spirit of men.

To-day man can control great forces. It is possible to control accurately from the bridge of a battle-cruiser all the power of hundreds of thousands of men. Or to set off with one finger a mine capable in an instant of destroying the work of thousands of manyears. These immense new sources of power, and the fact that they can be wielded by a single individual, have made possible novel methods of mining and metallurgy, new methods of transport, and undreamed of machinery. Undoubtedly the evolution of which they are the present outcome will continue at an increasing rate. Greater speed is assured. We are promised, too, new and greater sources of power. It may well be possible to change the face of the world to extents of which we have not yet dreamed.

Hitherto the production of food has been the prime struggle of man. That war is won. There is no doubt that civilized races can produce or procure all the food they require. Our problem to-day is that the white man produces more wheat than he needs, but the yellow men, brown men and black men have not yet learned to demand and become able to purchase a diet superior to rice. Synthetic food will, of course, be used in the future. But we shall not have to face an existence of tabloid food. Instead, our present food will be prepared, but in a synthetic manner. We shall hardly be able to detect any difference between the synthetic foods of the future and the natural foods of to-day.

Equally startling developments lie already just beyond our finger-tips in the breeding of human beings, and in the shaping of human nature. There seems little doubt that it will be possible to carry out the entire cycle which leads to the birth of a child in artificial surroundings. Interference with the mental development of such beings, expert suggestion and treatment in earlier years, would produce beings specialized to thought or toil. Our minds recoil from the creation of beings who are capable of tending a machine, but without other ambitions, and the laws of Christian civilization will prevent them. But lopsided creatures of this type might fit in well with the Communist doctrines of Russia. Future races may see new powers in the hands of altogether new and different men to those to which we of to-day are accustomed.

But while men have been gathering knowledge and power with ever-increasing and measureless speed, their virtues and their wisdoms have not shown any notable development as the centuries have passed. The brain of modern man does not differ in essentials from that of the human beings who lived and loved here millions of years ago. The nature of man has remained hitherto practically unchanged. Under sufficient stress — starvation, terror, warlike passion, or even cold intellectual frenzy—the modern man we know so well will do the most terrible deeds, and modern woman will back him up.

At the present the civilizations of many different ages coexist together in the world, and their representatives meet and converse. Englishmen, French and Americans, with ideas abreast of the twentieth century, do business with Chinese and Indians whose civilizations were crystallized several thousand years ago. We have the spectacle of powers and weapons of man far outstripping his intelligence; we have the march of his intelligence proceeding far more rapidly than the march of his nobility. We may well find ourselves in the presence of "the strength of civilization without its mercy."

Therefore, it is important above all other things, that the moral and spiritual conceptions of men and of nations hold their own amid these formidable scientific evolutions. Otherwise it would be better to call a halt in material progress.

To-day

Away with the flimsy idea that life with a past is attended,
There's Now—only Now—and no Past there's never a past; it has ended,
Away with its obsolete story and all of its yesterday's sorrow;
There's only to-day, almost gone, and in front of to-day stands to-morrow.

To endure and to pardon is the wisdom of life.—Koran.

Canada Guards Indians' Health

Department of Indian Affairs Maintains Health Service On All Reserve

In the care and training of Canada's Indian wards, the protection of their health is a matter of prime importance. In every province of the Dominion where reserves have been set aside for the benefit of the Indians, the Department of Indian Affairs maintains a health service whereby not only bodily ills are attended to, but the Indians are trained in personal hygiene and otherwise grounded in the fundamentals of preventive medicine.

The health service of the Department of Indian Affairs is carried out for the most part by local physicians and hospitals. About 325 such physicians are employed on part-time salaries or on the call system to attend bands of Indians living in their neighborhood. The number of local hospitals utilized in this manner is about 200.

The permanent full-time health service of the Department is carried out by 13 Medical Superintendents, 10 Field Nurses and 7 Hospitals, located as follows:

Doctors (Full-time Physicians).

Full-time physicians are located at the following reserves:

Quebec: Bersimis, Seven Islands and Caughnawaga.

Ontario: Six Nations Reserve (2)

Manitoba—Norway House.

Saskatchewan: File Hills and Qu 'Appelle Agencies combined, and at the Battleford Agency.

Alberta: Blackfoot Reserve, Sarcee Reserve and at Chipewyan.

Northwest Territories: Resolution and Simpson.

Field Nurses.

One field nurse is assigned to each of the following provinces: Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan.

Travelling Nurses.

Prairie Provinces (2); British Columbia (1); Northwest Territories (1).

Departmental Hospital.

Ontario: Lady Willingdon Hospital, Six Nations Rerserve Brantford, 20 beds.

Manitoba: Norway House Hospital, 20 beds.

Saskatchewan: File Hills Hospital, 25 beds.

Alberta: Blackfoot Hospital, 36 beds; Blood Hospital, 40 beds; Sarcee Hospital, 20 beds; Peigan Hospital, 8 beds.

The nursing staff of these hospitals numbers 21 graduate nurses. The Indians' fear of and prejudice against medical treatment have been almost wholly overcome and the hospital facilities are now made use of at all times.

In addition to providing the services outlined above, the Department co-operates with Church missionary organizations, in the operation of hospitals and with the Provincial Governments, and the Victorian Order of Nurses in the maintenance of district nurses in many places.

Black Outlook

She lived in a neighboring town and was the daughter of snibbish parents.

They met one night at the pictures and a friendship began. He told her he was an accountant.

One day, as she was passing his place of employment about noon, she lingered in the hope of seeing him.

That morning he had been engaged in cleaning out boilers, and presented a grimy appearance as he left the factory for his midday meal.

"Oh, John!" she exclaimed, catching sight of him as he tried to pass unnoticed. "I thought you told me you were an accountant."

"So I am," was his calm reply, "but this is my day for mixing the ink."

A man without decision can never be said to belong to himself He belongs to whatever can make captive of him.—John Foster.

"He should be home by this time"

Mrs. Fowler was worried. Her husband had gone to town for the day but he was to be back in plenty of time to feed the stock. And now it was getting dark.

Then the telephone rang: "Sorry, Mary", came her husband's voice, "I can't get home till late. Better telephone George Bothwell and ask him to help us out."

So the stock was fed and Mrs. Fowler's worry was ended. No wonder she said: "It's lucky we have a telephone."

PRACTICAL HINTS

It is a matter of general knowledge that the number of deaths from cancer continues to increase year by year. To a considerable extent, this is due to to the fact that the average expectancy of life has been considerably increased, with the result that a larger percentage of the population now reach the age when cancer most commonly occurs.

The exact cause of cancer is still unknown. What has been observed is that cancer develops in tissues which have been subjected to a chronic irritation. Cancer does not, for example, begin in a normal skin but in growths on the skin or in areas which are subjected to chronic irritation.

Cancer begins as a local disease, and the control of cancer depends upon its recognition while it is still a local disease, at which stage it can be treated successfully. It is because the early symptons of cancer are neglected or not recognized that the disease is allowed to progress, before treatment is sought, to the stage when it has become generalized.

Cancer of the breast begins as a local disease. Rarely does it cause pain at the beginning, and because it does not make itself felt, the condition is thought to be of no importance. A painless lump or tumour of the breast is more likely to be cancer than is one which is tender and painful. There should be no delay in securing treatment at the first sign of a lump or tumour of the breast.

In the mouth, cancer is associated with chronic irritation set up by broken teeth, badly-fitting dental plates, and the use of tobacco. Any white patches in the mouth, any ulcers which do not heal properly, or overgrowth of tissue should be regarded with suspicion.

Cancer of the uterus commonly begins at the cervix, or lower end of the organ. Irritation follows upon unrepaired tears which occur during childbirth. Cancer of the uterus is to be suspected in cases where there is irregular bleeding or unusual discharge. Bleeding after the menopause is particularly suggestive.

Blood in the urine suggests disease of the bladder. Cancer of the stomach is preceded by what the patient describes as indigestion, which indicates the importance of having the cause of indigestion properly ascertained, in all cases, and not to regard it as the inevitable result of indiscretions in eating or drinking.

These points are brought to your attention because of their practical value. It is by giving prompt attention to them that treatment may be secured at a stage of the disease when it is possible, in a large percentage of cases to effect a cure. The symptons mentioned do not always mean cancer --far from it, but attention to them is always necessary in case cancer is the cause.

PORT CREDIT

Playing with a tin can and hockey stick on the ice fringing the Credit river, Nelson Osborne, 13, had a narrow escape from drowning Saturday when he slipped into the open channel in the centre of the stream. Samuel Joyce, 12, dragged his playmate to safety and administered first aid.

The boys were just below the Toronto-Hamilton Highway bridge, and scores of cars whirled past unconscious that a near tragedy was taking place within a few yeards.

The ice at this point is several inches thick near the banks, Osborne was shooting the can up and down without out a thought of danger. Suddenly he hit it toward s the open channel, and in pursuing it went too far and plunged into the river.

Charles Joyce, 8, was near at hand, and shouted for his elder brother, some little distance away. Sam Joyce skated rapidly out to the edge of the water and lying flat extended his hockey stick to Osborne. After a desparate struggle he succeeded in bringing the other lad ashore.

Almost unconscious and numbed with cold, Osborne collapsed on the ice. His rescurer applied artificial respiration, brought hin round and then escorted him home, little harmed by his ducking.

Anoter lad, Alex Milne, fell through the ice not far away from the scene of the first mishap later in the day, but managed to reach the shore unassisted.

Five Port Credit youths wished to see the wrestling matches in the Clarke Memorial Hall on March 2. It cost money to get in the front door, however, so they tried the coal door round the side. Chief Telfer Wilson's eagle eye was on the job, however, and the quintette appeared before Magistrato L. J. C. Bull yesterday charged with trespass. They were remanded a week.

OBITUARY

Rev. T. W. Leggott

This community as well as many another throughout Ontario, was grieved to lern of the death of Rev. T. W Leggat, who passed away at his home in Stayner on Thursday, March 3rd, 1932 at the age of almost eighty two years. Mr. Leggott had been in failing health for the past three years, nevertheless his passing was sudden.

The funeral was held on Saturday, March 5th from Stayner United Church, in charge of Rev. D. R. Gray, with Revs. Halbert, Morton, Atton, Rintoul (the latter Chairman of the Presbytery) and the local clergyman assisting. During the service at the church Mrs. R. C. Shaver sang very sympathetically "Crossing the Bar."

In the course of their addresses both Mr. Halbert and Mr. Gray paid fitting tribute to the excellent qualities possessed by Mr. Leggott. One was always assured of a welcome at his house; none but were influenced by his cheery smile and encouraging voice; all who listened to his preaching felt that his words were inspirational. Even when suffering he was able to greet his visitors in a happy vein, and in dispending happiness he found his greatest satisfaction. Upon his retirement he readily adjusted himself and was ever prepared to help in the work of the Church in any manner possible—never officious, but always willing.

Mr. Leggott was born on October 25th, in 1850, in Rochester, N. Y. His boyhood days were spent in Stamford and Markham. Later he attended Albert College, Belleville, and Victoria University, Coburg. The active years of his life were spent as a Methodist minister; after his ordination he served in the Bay of Quinte and Toronto conferences. Some of his later charges included Maxwell, Seagrave, Brooklin, Claremont, Orono, Lakefield, Elmvale Streetsville, Mount Albert, Maple and Collingwood. He retired from active life in 1922, coming to reside in Stayner.

Surviving him are his wife, formerly Lydia Knight, three daughters. Miss E .M., of Toronto, Mrs. G. A. Clemence, of Stayner, Mrs. W. E. Collin of London; a sister, Mrs Thos. Noble, of Toronto, and three grandsons.

Mr.Leggott was a member of the Masonic Order, in which he held the rank of Past Master; the Oddfellows order, in which his rank was that of Past Grand. In the I.O.O.F. he also served as Grand Chaplain of Grand Lodge of Ontario in 1898 and 1899. He was, in addition, a member of the Orange Order. (The Sun, Stayner.)

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

Authorship of Poetic Gem Long Kept Secret

What a big niche in literature can be secured by a little poem is proved by the history of that exquisite ballad, "Auld Robin Gray," written by Lady Anne Barnard in 1771. The other half dozen or so pieces by Lady Anne are entirely negligible. For more than fifty years the authorship of "Auld Robin Gray" was a complete mystery. It was in 1823 that she revealed her secret to Sir Walter Scott.

When Lady Anne Lindsay (as she was before her marriage)—set about writing a new Scottish ballad to the tune of an old one that had "naughty words," she produced a song she never could have guessed would be celebrated for generations. In the letter to Scott in 1823 (given in "The Private Letter Book of Sir Walter Scott," edited by Wilfred Partington) in which Lady Anne confesses to the authorship of "Auld Robin Gray," she says:

"I was pleased in secret with the approbation it met with, but such was my dread of being suspected of writing anything, that I carefully kept my own secret."

It was considered daring, if not indelicate, for a lady to aspire to authorship in those days.—Kansas City Star.

Positively the Latest in "Simplified English"

What is described as "a scientific and practical method of simplifying English spelling" has been worked out by a Swedish professor, who calls his system "Anglic." It is designed especially for the use of foreign students. The professor apparently has the idea that "Anglic" may become a sort of universal language, because, he explains, in the "nue speling" he has devised, that he wants to "pne" our "langgwig the hiest kompliment possibl by endevering to mack it noen, uezd, luvd, and apreeshiaeted aul over the world." Such a language—which all may read—has been worked out between the British railways and a number of foreign lines. It consists of a series of picture labels, affixed to goods carried by rail, which are going from one country to another. The labels show the nature of the goods and, consequently, how they have to be treated. For instance, one design shows a fish, a flower, and a bunch of grapes. This means perishable traffic which would deteriorate if not delivered quickly.

Eyes for the Blind

In ever-increasing numbers German shepherd dogs, better known in this country as police dogs, are being employed as guides for the blind. The dogs used are generally females, for they are less easily distracted than males. They require only three or four months of training to lead a blind man safely through crowded streets and dangerous construction work. The commands, "right," "left," and "forward" are known and obeyed by the dogs but also they are trained to disobey if carrying out the order involves danger. The intelligence of these dogs is beyond belief unless one sees them in action.

Unbreakable Glass

Glass used for the "hull panes"—not portholes now—of a new liner is of a special kind that has withstood a pressure of twenty tons. In one test of this glass, a piece of it weighing fifty-six pounds was dropped eighteen feet on to a steel plate. It came through this ordeal without showing even a crack. But glass nowadays can be wonderfully resistant. In certain tests of a bullet-proof glass recently, a .303 bullet was fired at it at a range of five yards. The glass plate under test was about an inch and a half thick and was made up of three layers. The bullet starred the first layer, but made no impression on the second.

Find Elephants at Bath

On a world cruise you may be disappointed at not seeing elephants in Ceylon, unless you plan to make your trip with knowledge of where they may be found. Ceylon has been the great home of elephants from earliest history, yet many who visit Colombo or Kandy never see one, though they search the streets of those cities for days. So, when in Kandy, get a rickshn and go down to the Katagastota river, about three miles away, in the afternoon, and you will find the river crowded with magnificent animals taking their bath.—Exchange.

Powdered Eggs

Ten million dozen eggs will be cracked and either frozen or powdered by a Kansas City concern in the next few months. The company, one of the few of its kind in the country, sells the liquid and powdered eggs to bakers, candy makers and manufacturers of ice cream, noodles and macaroni. Eggs from Missouri and Kansas are preferred because the yolks are a deeper yellow and the whites of thicker consistency. The eggs are packed in 30-gallon cans and then frozen before being shipped.

With volume about one-half "on," move station-finder slowly across the entire dial. Then—

1. Count the stations.
2. Notice how "sharply" each one comes in; no interference of one station with another; no "cross talk."
3. Listen to the quality of the tone, a weakness in some superheterodyne receivers.

If reception conditions are at all normal, you will be amazed at Rogers sharper selectivity; finer tone fidelity.

ERINDALE

Garage Mechanic Fights Robbers

Shortly after 2 o'clock Sunday morning, Robert Murphy, aged 23, an employee of Barker's garage, who slept on the premises, was awakened by the sound of intruders. Jumping to his feet, he found that a window in the rear of the building had been broken, and that two men were at the cash register. When Murphy approached them, the younger of the two made a hurried exit through the broken window, and the second man, after a tussle with Murphy, also escaped.

Murphy immediately telephoned his employer, Delmar Barker, who arrived at the garage a few minutes later, and, along with Murphy, set in pursuit of the two men, who, according to the police, had a companion driving a car up and down the Dundas Highway near the scene of the affair.

Soon after Barker and his assistant located a man who was crouching in an orchard some 600 yards from the garage. He was bleeding profusely, and appeared to have bad cuts on his face and knee. Provincial Officer Joseph Allen of Cooksville was immediately summoned and arrested the man, who gave his name as John Charles Wright, aged 21, of Haig Avenue, Long Branch. According to the police, he made a statement in which he admitted taking part in the break-in. Owing to his injuries, caused, it is said, by broken glass, he was taken to Brampton and held under guard at the Peel Memorial Hospital.

With the aid of Provincial Officer T. H. Owens, of Brampton, a search was then conducted for the second man. Following up the information secured from Wright, the officers then visited the Jockey Club Farm at Long Branch, and there took into custody Fred Reck, 23, of 148 Fifth Street, New Toronto, and his brother, William Reck, 21, who lives at the farm. Both were found asleep in bed.

They are held without bail in Brampton Jail pending their appearance along with Wright in the Peel County Police Court before Magistrate L. J. C. Bull on charges of breaking into and entering.

Examination of the premises by the officers and proprietor revealed that only $1.10 had been secured by the visitors before their presence was detected by Murphy.

COOKSVILLE

William Verrage, Cooksville, narrowly escaped death when, the Chateau Clair, in connection with an historic winery of the village, took fire from an unknown cause.

Verrage was sleeping in the office of the residence, which at one time belonged to the Princess Chimay, a French notable. With Verrage was his dog "Pal," a big Alsatian.

Verrage said that the dog jumped on his chest, barking and growling, and wakened him.

Dashing to the door into the hall, Verrage found the hall so full of smoke that it would have been impossible for him to have approached the door of the residence. He slammed the office door, broke through a window and leaped to the lawn in front of the chateau, and ran across the Dundas Highway to the home of William Dulmage, where he phoned for the Port Credit Fire Department.

The fire engine arrived promptly, but was unable to save the residence. The brigade devoted its efforts to saving the building formerly used as the winery, which lies at an angle to the residence and only 12 feet from it.

The winery was saved, and with it a large stock of rabbits, which Verrage and Alfred DeSautels, his partner, were raising for the fur market.

Verrage was alone at the time of the blaze. His wife was in Montreal, and his partner, DeSautels, with Verrage's son, Peter, were in Chicago.

Loss is estimated at above $15,000, with little insurance carried.

The chateau was built in 1864 by Count Justin de Courtenay. Until a few years ago, the winery was known throughout the province for its products, made at that time by A. Roumegous. Due to litigation concerning the rightful ownership of the premises and to ill-health, Mr. Roumegous gave up the business, and the buildings were idle for some time until Verrage and DeSautels took them over.

Verrage said that he and his partner were negotiating for possession of the place, and that a settlement of the claims and counter-claims was expected in July.

5,000 FACTS ABOUT CANADA

The new edition of "5,000 Facts About Canada," for 1932, will be welcomed by the public, as it contains a wealth of new data, including the latest census returns of cities and towns over 10,000 population. The compiler, Frank Yeigh, the well known Canadian author and publicist, meets a long felt want in this annual compendium of Canadian facts, truly "the Dominion in a Nutshell," that has a world-wide circulation. Fifty chapters deal with every phase of our national life in the most concrete form, giving a vivid impression of the progress or otherwise of the country. There is much to hearten the reader in its contents, in the striking contrasts made with previous years and chiefly when measured by 1900, showing a marked degree of progress in spite of seasonal fluctuations. The Facts in fact act as a wholesome tonic. Copies may be had at 35 cents each, or three for a dollar, from the Canadian Facts Pub. Co., 588 Huron St., Toronto, or through newsdealers.

STREETSVILLE CAN. LEGION EUCHRE AND DRAW A BIG SUCCESS

The Veterans of the local Legion Post are to be congratulated on the splendid St. Patrick entertainment provided in the Odd Fellow's Hall last week. They wish to express their appreciation to the people of Streetsville and district for their splendid co-operation in making the euchre and draw a real success. The net proceeds realized amounted to over seventy dollars. In addition to the progressive euchre a programme was provided by the veterans. A male quartette consisting of Messrs. L. Pope, F. Elderfield, Thompson and McArthur rendered several selections. C. Dick received great applause for his humorous readings. Constable Elderfield was well received in wartime songs. The chief item was a short address by Capt. Innis of Port Credit, Commander of Zone 13 of the Canadian Legion. He explained the work and scope of this worthy organization. Roy Elderfield delighted all with some pleasing Irish melodies on the saxaphone. The Streetsville orchestra, under the able leadership of Mr. Heck Graydon, provided music during lunch and for the short dance that followed. The president of the Club, C. P. McArthur, acted as chairman of the evening. The wives of the veterans provided a very tasty lunch upon the shamrock-decked tables. The hall too was decorated appropriately with flags and emerald green. Following lunch Capt. Innis was asked to draw the lucky draw tickets from the big box containing about 1000 names. Number 574 was the winner of the first prize, the beautiful cedar chest, and this went to Mr. A. B. Bruce of Streetsville. Next came number 113 a medicine chest for Mr. B. Nevils. The third prize a flower stand and jardinere went to Mr. M. Williamson with number 663.

The euchre prizes were then announced and Reeve H. Hope presented these: Ladies', first, set of dishes to Mrs. W. Arch; ladies second, fancy tray to Mrs. Fitzpatrick; Lucky, shamrock set salt and peppers to Miss Alice Steen; Men's first, military brushes and case to Mr. M. Hole; Men's second, smoking to A. E. Graydon.

The Veterans' Club is co-operating with the Central Relief Committee in alleviating distress. They have a live organization and look for the wholehearted membership of all war veterans in the district.

The next regular meeting will be held in Church's Hall the third Monday night of April. All veterans not yet associated with the club are invited and urged to turn out.

The Legion is a Canadian-wide organization and is doing great work for veterans and their families. The local post aims at 100% membership in the district.

To all who assisted in making the St. Patrick's night event such a great local success the Streetsville Post of the Legion express their appreciation.

C.G.I.T. HOLDS SUCCESSFUL MEETING

The Canadian Girls in Training group of the United Church, held a very successful meeting at the home of Miss Blanche Hisey, on Monday evening. This group, which was organized last fall, has fully justified its existence. The large number of girls are keenly interested and under the wise competent leadership of Miss Blanche Hisey, are proving themselves valuable contributors to the life of the church. At one of their meetings in the near future they will be fortunate to have as their guest speaker M. J. Sanderson, M.A., associate librarian of the City of Toronto. They are planning to make this a "Book Night" and will give an opportunity to all book lovers to hear this outstanding authority.

Dominion and Ontario Nearing Agreement on St. Lawrence Seaway

Agreement May Be Definite Before Legislature Prorogues—Power Costs Cut—Ontario to Bear More Than Half Expense of Joint Works, Report

Ottawa.—That the Province of Ontario and the Federal Government are nearing agreement regarding the joint development of the international section of the St. Lawrence seaway was reported to be no more than a few weeks away following a two-hour conference here Saturday between Premier Henry and the Bennett cabinet.

When the conference ended, the one point outstanding between the two parties was said to be the division of the costs of the extensive joint works which are equally necessary for the Dominion's navigation projects and the province's power development.

Moreover, an understanding had been reached on this matter. Premier Henry left Saturday night for Toronto to submit the Dominion's views on cost division to his own cabinet. His ministerial colleagues' acquiescence to the terms tentatively discussed by Mr. Henry and the Federal cabinet will presage an early announcement of a complete accord.

Hon. W. D. Herridge, Canadian Minister to Washington, sat in at the conference and presented the views of the United States Government on points where the interests of the republic may be affected by the Provincial-Federal plans. Nearly all the Ministers of the Federal Cabinet were present at the discussion in the old council room in the east block, where every Canadian Cabinet has held its meetings since Sir John A. Macdonald's time.

HENRY HIGHLY CONFIDENT.

Premier Henry had little to say to the newspapers, but he appeared highly confident. "We are making very good progress toward an agreement," he declared.

Ontario, it is understood, will have to bear more than half the cost of the joint works. This is because the development of power is more costly than the provision of navigation facilities. Nevertheless, even at payment of more than half the cost, the province will be able to develop about 900,000 horsepower at a cost of not more than $125 a horsepower. This figure obviously compares very favorably with the $138 per horsepower cost of the Chippewa development at Niagara.

It is conceded that it will be some years before power can be delivered from the international section. Due, however, to the province's foresight in anticipating the power needs of the province, this delay in getting the St. Lawrence power does not involve any danger of a power shortage. The Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission will receive delivery within the next two years of 500,000 horsepower on its Beauharnois and other contracts. This amount, it is considered, is ample to take care of the province's consumption for some time to come.

AGREEMENT NOT FAR OFF.

Opinion here is that an agreement between the Dominion and the United States is not very far off. The order-in-Council recently passed by the Federal Government to make the Beauharnois canal an integral part of Canada's share of the seaway construction was an important step forward.

In many quarters it is held that the solitary point outstanding between the two nations has to do with Chicago's water diversion. Division of costs and other such matters, including the engineering end, have all been the subject of tentative agreement.

Meanwhile, Quebec's opposition to the waterway is understood to have cooled somewhat. The United States threat of an all-American route through New York State is said to have thrust upon Quebec the stern realization that delay now may mean the ultimate removal of a large part of the traffic handled by the port of Montreal. Should an all-American canal be built much shipping which now goes through Montreal would be diverted through the United States.

1932 Outstanding Year in Empire

Sir William Clark Says History Likely to Mark It So

Montreal—"I feel that our children may look back to Ottawa and the year 1932 as an epoch in the relations within the Empire," Sir William Clark, British High Commissioner to Canada, stated in an recent interview here. He was much impressed with the list of delegates the British Government was sending to the forthcoming economic conference.

The enthusiasm with which British goods were being bought in the United Kingdom was most impressive, Sir William said. It showed a real desire on the part of every member of the public to help the cause.

"England is now on a tariff basis and can deal more easily with the other units of the Empire. We all look forward to a lowering of tariff walls as things tend to improve. This may well be one effect of the Conference within the bounds of the Empire, and any such move would have its result on the rest of the world. This, I think, is likely to be the trend of the next few years," Sir William concluded.

Invention By Dane Speeds Typewriting

Copenhagen.—An electric typewriter, claimed to be twice as fast as the ordinary mechanical models, has been invented by Mr. Hans Reinholdtsen of this city, a ship's machine master.

The inventor says that the machine can make 20 touches per second, as against the present maximum of 11 touches. The explanation of this added speed is that the type bar on the new Danish machine travels only 3 mm. whereas the average typebar has to travel 15 mm. It is claimed that the machine can type a speech as quickly as it is spoken, thus eliminating the use of shorthand.

Old Scottish Iron Works Visited by Prince of Wales

Falkirk, Scot.—Part of a castiron steam cylinder, made at Carron in 1766 for James Watt, inventor of the first complete steam engine, was shown to Prince George during his recent inspection of the Carron Co. Iron Works at Falkirk.

Cannons and naval guns manufactured by Carron from 1773, were also shown to the Prince. The molding of letter pillar boxes, was another item of interest shown to Prince George on his tour of inspection.

Advantage

A man may have a legal right to take advantage of another. But he can never have a moral right to do it, and the moral law will decide against him every time with no appeal. Human law has a limited range. Moral law conditions the universe, and no one, in the end, can escape from its decisions.

Swedish Farm Produce Shows Continued Expansion

Stockholm.—Sweden's total agricultural production has been more than doubled in the last 60 years despite a remarkable movement cityward of the agricultural population which has been reduced by 40 per cent. since 1870, it was revealed here in a report of the Scandinavian Credit Company.

Wheat cultivation has increased considerably in the last 10 years, the report shows, while less rye and oats have been sown. The most successful branch of Swedish agriculture is animal produce. More than 40 per cent. of the entire cultivated area of Sweden is grass land, the yield from which is abundant and profitable. Only one-eighth of the vegetable output of the country is used for human consumption, while four-fifths are used for feeding domestic animals.

Although the actual stock of cattle has not increased in the last 20 years, improved methods and better feeding have increased the productivity of the animals. The breeding of pigs has developed rapidly. Milk production has reached 4,500,000 tons a year. Most of the agricultural products of Sweden are home consumed, exports being comparatively small.

British Geologists To Explore Andes

Lima, Peru.—A British expedition, headed by Dr. J. W. Gregory, professor of geology at Glasgow University, has arrived in Peruvian territory on a journey through Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Chile, to study the geological formations of the mid-Andean range.

Miss M. McKinnon, a London natural scientist, is the only woman member of the expedition. She said that the party would eventually leave the Andes mountains by way of the tributaries of the Amazon River, traveling afoot and by canoe. At least six months will be required to complete the geological survey and to reach the Atlantic coast.

Balanced Budget Now In Sight

Current Statement of British Budget Will Not Show Deficit, Baldwin Says

BORROWINGS STOPPED

Denies Ottawa Conference Caused Dissension in Cabinet

Ilford, Essex, Eng.—Stanley Baldwin, Lord President of the Council, announced last week that the current budget would balance.

In his first public political speech since he joined the National Government's Cabinet, the Conservative leader said:

"Today we are in a position when we know that the budget will balance. We know that borrowing on current accounts has been stopped, and I hope stopped forever. We are in a position to look with observant sympathy on those great countries which have not yet succeeded in balancing their current budget."

Strength of Sterling.

Mr. Baldwin continued: "To-day we are looking to sterling in many parts of the world as the one safe and national anchorage. Six months ago foreign money was pouring out of the country. Today it is pouring in, which shows we have regained the confidence which was very nearly shattered six months ago."

The fact that Great Britain's export trade showed a slight improvement during the last quarter of 1931 was a hopeful sign, he said and one which meant the country, in very bad times, was holding its own. In the last quarter of last year, he recalled, there was an improvement in the volume of production in the manufacturing industries which had been continuously trending downward during the previous twenty months.

That, he maintained, looked as though the country were beginning to turn the corner and coupled with a reduction in imports, showed Great Britain had reasonable grounds for renewed hope.

The National Government, to the best of his knowledge, was pretty sound, and it was not going to break if he could help it, he declared. In conclusion, he expressed the hope that before the government surrendered its charge into the hands of the people, the country would again be busy, and thriving as it led the world into a new age of prosperity.

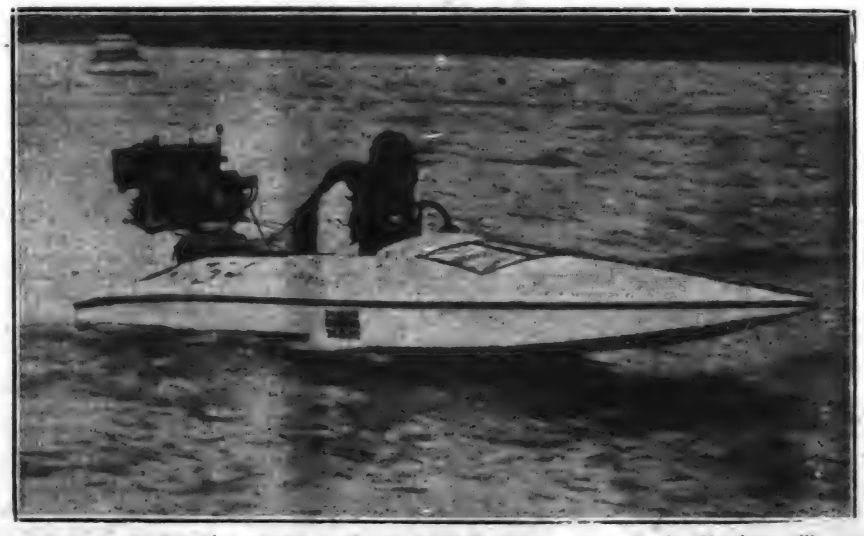
Mr. Baldwin branded as fictitious reports that a Cabinet crisis had arisen concerning the composition of the British delegation to the Imperial Conference at Ottawa next July.

The difficulty, he said, was to name delegates for three conferences, Geneva disarmament, Lausanne international finance, and the Ottawa parley, which would be in session simultaneously.

"Until we know whether the House of Commons can rise in time to allow as many Ministers as we desire to send to Ottawa to get away, it is difficult to say who can be spared for Ottawa, Lausanne and Geneva," he concluded.

Japan Seeks Market For Fish Products

Though the Japanese themselves are great consumers of fish, their industrial interests are seeking to develop markets for the sale of fish abroad. At Tokyo the government maintains a fishery institute which offers several courses designed to promote the fishing industry.



There are five fishery and marine products organizations engaged in the export trade. Salmon and crab are two of the most important items exported. In their efforts to increase exports the Japanese fishery products companies receive every aid from the banks as well as support from the government. The latter has in recent years been obliged to take a hand in political questions which have arisen in Kamchatka and elsewhere between Japanese fisheries and the Soviet Government. During the last two or three years considerable reckless fishing has been done in those waters.

Healthy Future Seen For Western Cattle Trade

Winnipeg, Mon.—Livestock shipments from Western Canada showed a large increase during 1931, according to a report prepared by the Canadian National Railways.

During the year, 7,501 cars of stock were delivered to Winnipeg as compared with 5,961 in 1930, the increase being 540 carloads. A great part of the increase is attributed to the heavier demand from Great Britain.

Britain Seeking New Speed Records

Britain is out to beat America's record for outboard motor racing. Charles Harrison will compete at Miami soon in "Non Sequitor XI.", which means "does not follow".

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Greetings From Austria.

Mr. L. G. O. Sobotka of Vienna, Austria, who is a friend of "Lone E", recently paid a visit to Toronto and expressed his great interest in the Canadian Boy Scouts, and in particular the "Lonies."

Mr. Sobotka travels extensively all over Europe, and frequently visits this side of the Atlantic, and he stated that the people in practically all of the countries that he visits have great faith in the Boy Scout Movement, believing it to be one of the most instrumental factors which will lead to a better world understanding and a permament peace in the days to come.

Mr. Sobotka sent his very best wishes to all Canadian Scouts, this being his first trip to Canada, and expressed the hope that a goodly number of Canadian representatives would visit the Jamboree in Hungary next year.

World Scout Jamboree Will Be Held.

The statement in a Budapest despatch to a Toronto paper that finances will prevent the holding in Hungary of the projected 1933 world gathering of Boy Scouts has been specifically denied by Dr. Vali, Hungarian International Scout Secretary. Conditions are not as bad as painted, and the Jamboree will be held as planned, Dr. Vali declares.

Bird Houses For Spring.

"Lone E" hopes that the Lone Scouts have been busy during the past months in the making of more bird houses for the convenience of their feathered friends. You know the birds are very loyal, and if you can induce them to build in your vicinity they will come back year after year to the same nesting place.

Unfortunately, with the expansion of civilization, the natural haunts and surroundings of the birds have been destroyed, and they find it increasing difficult to find nesting places near to the vicinity of humans.

Every Lonie, therefore, should make a special point of building three or four Bird Houses to encourage the birds to stay in the vicinity of his home. You still have time for this year's tenants if you get busy at once.

A Scout Bird Sanctuary.

With the consent of the Quebec Government, the Minister of the Interior has by proclamation made Mystery Island the permanent Boy Scout camp near Ottawa, a bird sanctuary. There are several such Scout wild life sanctuaries in various parts of Canada.

"Mystery Island" on the Map.

The name "Mystery Island," given the permanent Scout camp being developed near Ottawa, has been officially confirmed by the Geographical Board of Canada, and the island will be so designated on a new map to be published by the Topographical Survey.

Things Lone Scouts Can Do During March and April.

For Easter and the Easter Holidays: Arrange an Easter Egg Good Turn. This consists in making a collection of New Laid Eggs from all your friends and neighbors and donating them to your nearest local hospital for the benefit of the patients therein.

Plan out your 1932 garden. Try to have a continuity of flowers and vegetables all the season.

Spring Clean-up. During the first few weeks in April arrange to clean up around the house and barn. Collect all that old rubbish which has been lying around all winter and which has been hidden under the snow. Take it to a convenient place and burn it, and have things looking neat and tidy for the commencement of spring operations.

Endeavor to earn at least one proficiency badge or make some progress towards higher Scout rank.

Boys Training As Firemen.

Last year 673 Canadian Scouts received fire prevention training and qualified for the Scout Fireman's Badge. The training in most cases is given by fire chiefs or firemen. Since the training was started 19,698 boys have qualified as Scout Firemen.

If you would like to become a Lone Scout write for particulars to The Boy Scouts' Association, Lone Scout Dept., 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.

Predicts Return To Gold Standard

Sir Campbell Stuart Says He Thinks Britain Will Act Soon

Montreal. Conditions in England are definitely on the up-grade, and its position, viewed as a whole, is better than in probably any other country in the world, sair Sir Campbell Stuart, a director of the Times Publishing Company, of London, in a recent interview here.

"England had, against its will, to go off the gold standard" he continued, "and I think that in the not very distant future, it will return to it. The qualities that have gone to make up splendidly in the present crisis. Baldwin's standing down in favor of Macdonald was a great gesture, and he now stands higher in public opinion than ever before.

"Great interest is being taken throughout the length and breadth of the land on the subject of the coming Ottawa conference, and particularly does this apply to the position of Australia. Premier Bennett is going to preside over one of the most momentous parleys in the history of the British Empire. One result of it will be, we hope, to make Canada less economically dependent upon her southern neighbor. Canada, of course, has to balance her budget, and will be obliged to undergo certain hardships, but I have no use for those without faith in their country."

Canadian Naval Ship Skeena Back at Base

Victoria.—Returning from her annual Winter cruise to southern waters, H.M.C.S. Skeena, with Commander Victor G. Brodeur, R.C.N., in charge, steamed into Esquimalt Harbor on Saturday. She had been absent since shortly after Christmas.

The trim destroyer enjoyed perfect weather during a long cruise. The feature of her trip was the call into El Salvador where there was an uprising late in January. The Skeena and the Vancouver remained there seven days and took aboard a number of British refugees and cared for them until conditions calmed on shore.

Stamp Issue Suggested For Imperial Conference

Montreal.—The suggestion that Canada issue a set of postage stamps to commemorate the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference to be held at Ottawa is contained in a resolution adopted by the St. Lawrence Stamp Collectors Club of Montreal and forwarded to Arthur Sauve, postmaster-General

Seven Lose Lives In Plane Crash

Machine Strikes High Tension Wires and Falls in Flames

Redlands, Cal.—Flying low through dense fog that obliterated vision, an American Airways plane, carrying five passengers and two pilots, struck a high tension wire and crashed into an apple orchard, ten miles east of here Saturday night. Six of the occupants were killed instantly or burned to death. The seventh died Sunday in a Redlands hospital.

The large plane burst into flames when it struck the ground near a highway. Witnesses dragged the only living passenger out of the wreckage before the flames reached him. He was Arthur R. Thomas of Tucson, Ariz., so badly injured he died on Sunday.

Bodies of the other victims were burned beyond recognition. Only one was definitely identified. The passenger list carried, besides Thomas the following names:

Hugh A. McKellar, Los Angeles, district sales manager for the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. (Identified by a charred business card), C. M. Goldsmith of St. Louis, R. L. Robinson of Yonkers, N.Y., Albert Coburn, 21, son of Fred Coburn, former president of American Airways, Inc.

The pilot was Harold J. Kelsey of Los Angeles former veteran of the Canadian Royal Air Force. The co-pilot was H. H. Campbell of Los Angeles.

Was Flying In Fog

The tri-motored Fokker, carrying the seven men from Phoenix en route to Glendale, was an hour behind schedule as it roared low over the fog-blanketed Yucaipa Valley. Witnesses said it appeared that a mistake in judgment, or momentary loss of control, caused the accident.

When the ship hit the wire, plunged to the ground and burst into flames, six of its occupants were trapped before they could attempt to escape, even if they had not been killed or badly hurt in the crash.

J. A. Lemay, a rancher; Russell Bevans, state registrar of motor vehicles and Dr. A. C. Brennan, who were among the witnesses, hurried to the flaming wreckage and dragged Thomas away. They could not reach the other victims.

Disputation

I will do what I can to let what light I have shine; but disputation is smoke, and serves only to obscure the light. It is to no profit; and I do like to give and to get the good of things.—Dr. George Macdonald.

Desert Balks Australians Seeking Fabled Gold Cave

Adelaide, Australia.—The great central Australian desert once more has vanquished party seeking the cave of gold said to exist somewhere in its vastness. Returning prospectors said they barely escaped with their lives, although sent out well equipped and armed by Central Australia Gold Mines, Ltd.

To reach the legendary cavern they had to penetrate a country inhabited by aborgines, who trailed the party day after day, remaining in the darkness outside the light of the campfires at night, awaiting an opportunity to attack.

The gold hunters were within sixty miles of the supposed cave when they ran short of water. They will try again next winter.

The cave was discovered by C. A. Lasseter, a famous prospector, who lost his life in trying to return to it.

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 15

Many times in these articles the writer has strongly urged the necessity of making original bids mean something.

There are certain definite requirements of bidding that should be complied with at all times, if the player wants to become a sound bidder. These requirements are more or less arbitrary and vary with the position of the bidder. For example, if you hold five hearts to the ace, king, it is a sound heart bid as dealer but if three players have passed, it is not a sound bid by fourth hand. In the same way a bid may not be sound on the first round of bidding but may be perfectly justified on the second round.

The real reason for these so-called conventions of bidding is the fact that all sound bidding is part of an harmonious whole. Each bid, if it be sound, should consider not only the bid itself but also its effect upon and interpretation by one's partner. If it tells him the truth, it is a sound bid; but if it deceives him or may be misconstrued, it is not sound. When ever you make a bid, think not only of your own cards but also of your partner and what he may do after he hears your bid. You should also consider your own course of action if the bid you intend to make should be overbid by your opponents. Have you started something that either you or your partner can carry to a logical conclusion? If so, it is a sound bid but not otherwise.

When you are dealer and bid one no trump or one of a suit, you should convey the exact information to your partner: First: In case of a no trump bid, that you have at least two and one-half quick tricks, distributed in at least thre suits; Second, in case of a suit bid, that you have a suit of at least four cards and two and one-half quick tricks in the hand, one of which is in the suit bid. Original bids should always give exact information for they are the first bids of the hand and have the chance to start partner off on the right foot by telling him what you have. This is the time you should tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. If you don't tell the truth, you are laying up trouble for yourself.

Lay a firm foundation for the partnership and you will get good results; but, if you build your house on the sand of untruth or misinformation, look out, for trouble is sure to result.

There are no trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win all the tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the king of clubs and A must discard. He cannot discard the king of diamonds or Y's jack will be good, so is forced to discard the four of spades. Y should now discard the jack of diamonds and B must also discard. He cannot discard the jack of hearts or Z's eight will be good, so is forced to discard the seven of spades. Z now leads the jack of spades, Y overtakes with the king and makes the balance of the tricks.

This forcing of discards is the so-called "squeeze" play and, as both A and B were forced to discard, it is a good example of the "double squeeze."

Hearts are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can Y Z win six of the seven tricks against any defense?

Solution: Z should lead the queen of diamonds and trump in Y's hand with the jack of hearts. A should discard the four of spades and B follows suit. Y should now lead the six of hearts, B should play the seven and Z the ten. A should discard the nine of clubs. Z should now lead the king of hearts and A is again forced to discard. He cannot discard a club or Z will lead a low club, place A in the lead and thus force him to lead a spade. Y will win two spade tricks, on which Z will discard one diamond and one club. Y will then lead a club, which Z will win. On the third trick, therefore, A is forced to discard the nine of spades. Y should discard a club. Z should now lead the six of diamonds. A's discard is immaterial. Y should discard his last club and B must win the trick. As B has nothing but spades left in his hand he must lead spades up to Y, who thus wins the rest of the tricks.

Atoms Weighed In 2-Ton Scales

New Scientific Instrument Records Minute Particles

New York, N.Y.—Completion of a two-ton scales which weighs single atoms at the Bartol Foundation, Swarthmore, Penn., is announced by the American Institution of Physics. An atom weighs about one sextillionth of an ounce. Yet this invisible bit of matter swings the pointer of the new scientific instrument about half an inch, as much as flopping a pound or more of meat upon a butcher's scales.

The pointer is a stream of electrified atoms, called ions, shot out of a vacuum tube into a magnetic field between two immense magnets, whose size accounts for the great weight of the scales. It works like the spray of a fountain. The atoms rise into the magnetic field, curve over to one side and fall straight down. They are caught on a photographic plate.

The heavier particles shoot higher and curve wider, so that they fall farther out. Thus a "fat" atom will land farther out on the sensitized plate than a "lean" one. Each one will leave a black mark where he strikes. The distances between these black marks shows the varying atom weights just like the lines on the butcher's scales.

Whether there are "fat" and "lean" atoms is not certain, but the differences in weight have been proven beyond a doubt. The latest was discovery of hydrogen twice as heavy as ordinary. Several kinds of gold atoms have been found. The scientific term for the weight differences is isotopes. The fat and lean weights all are due to differences in the composition of the nucleus of the atom. The discovery of these differences and their actual weighing is one of the world-wide scientific plans for breaking into this baffling nucleus. Out of it is expected a pandora's box of tricks, useful rather than pesky. One is hope for power to operate engines, another more and better synthetic products, and the oldest dream of all—alchemy.

London Fog Eats Stone In Cleopatra Monument

London—Cleopatra's Needle, famed landmark on the Thames embankment is crumbling away. The monument stood 3,000 years in Egypt's sunshine, where Cleopatra saw it and Moses may have known it, but fifty years of London's fog and damp have been too much.

Sulphuric acid, which forms in the air when chimney smoke mixes with fog, eats into the stone. Plans to save it include a suggestion that it be given a monthly bath with fresh water.

The greatest evils are from within us, and from ourselves also we must look for our greatest good.—Jeremy Taylor.

Soviet Peasants Reported In Need in Grain Shortage

Riga, Latvia Reports from Moscow say that 40,000,000 Russian peasants, affected by a failure of the harvest in various parts of Russia last fall, will require food relief, with a resulting interference to the Soviet government's spring grain program.

In the Ukraine in particular the backwardness of preparations for the spring sowing is causing anxiety, the reports said, with not more than half of the grain required for sowing now read. Joseph Stalin ordered 1,000,000 tons of grain sent to the distressed regions last month, the reports added.

101 Towns Back 5-Year Plan To Landscape Western Texas

Dallas, Tex.—With a "five-year plan" all its own, west Texas has undertaken an ambitious landscaping plan involving 160,000 of the state's 262,117 square miles.

The West Texas Chamber of Commerce, enlisting the assistance of 101 affiliated towns, has retained a landscape architect to direct the work of transformation. Plants and trees will be ordered jointly by the cities at wholesale prices. Five varieties of shade trees have been recommended by the Texas forestry service as suitable for planting—the Chinese elm, green ash, American elm, silvery maple and honey locust.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful .... of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

May Day Celebrations
Custom of Pagan Times

May day was first dedicated to the Goddess Maie—the godess of fertility—many, many years ago. It was originally a pagan custom celebrating the return of spring. The Romans, too, as early as 238 B. C., because of a bad harvest instituted a similar custom of worship dedicated to their goddess Flora. The Roman festivities extended from April 28 to May 3 every year. This celebration was called Floralia or Floral Games.

In England during the Middle ages we find literary allusions to their May day celebrations. Very early on May day morning the girls and boys went to the woods "to fetch the flowers fresh." The expedition was called "going a-Maying."

They picked armfuls of flowers and flowering branches and returned to the village with them about sunrise with great spirit and accompaniments of horn and tabor. The windows and doors were hung with the branches and bushes were planted in the streets. A young suitor could so honor the residence of his lady love. In addition, the fairest maid of the village was crowned queen. She was throned under a floral arch and presided over the jubilation. This custom of selecting a May queen was also a relic of the Roman days.

Professor Would Take Laurels From Ericsson

Another patriotic myth has been forced to lower its colors in the face of careful historical research, writes William E. Rae in a Boston paper. The popular conceit that the United states led the rest of the world in the introduction of ironclad warships and that the dramatic combat between the Monitor and the Merrimac began this revolution in naval architecture which transformed navies the world over, receives no countenance from Prof. James Phinney Baxter, assistant professor of history at Harvard and master of the seventh house to be built under Harvard's new house plan.

"The dramatic qualities of this first fight between ironclads have led Americans ever since to exaggerate the effects of the battles of Hampton Roads," Professor Baxter says. "An examination of manuscript material in Paris, London and Washington shows clearly that France, not the United States, played the leading role in the introduction of ironclads."—Detroit News.

Governors' Conferences

The factors which brought about the establishment of the governors' conference were the growing centralization of power at Washington, the shifting, uncertain status of state's rights, and the lack of uniform laws. The first meeting was held at the White House in 1908. It was called by President Roosevelt, and the principal subject considered was the conservation of natural resources. The functions of the governors' conference are officially declared to be: Exchange of views and experiences on subjects of general importance to the people of the several states, the promotion of greater uniformity in state legislation, and the attainment of greater efficiency in state administration.

Contractor's Luck

One Nevada contractor now believes in the old saying, "Gold is where you find it." He took a job for removing old timbers from an abandoned mine; the work proved more difficult than expected and it appeared he was going to lose money on the contract. Removing a section of logging from an old drift, two sacks of ore tumbled out, apparently concealed there by a "high-grader" in the boom days. The ore was some of the richest found in the region and the contractor says his contract turned out to be one of the most profitable he ever had.

Sunshine All Day

At Aix-les-Bains there is to be seen a strange-looking building which has somewhat the appearance of a rather substantially constructed pagoda with an airplane perched upon its top. It is a scheme for the benefit of invalids who visit the place for its health-restoring qualities. The upper part of the building revolves in order that the persons in it may secure the greatest possible amount of sunshine. If the sun shines, the invalids occupying the rooms are enabled to get the benefit of its rays for the entire day.

Flares Keep Off Poachers

At the fish hatcheries of the West "mother" fish, kept in the rearing ponds are caught and stripped of their eggs during spawning season. The eggs, millions of them, are placed in glass jars, about 8,000 to the quart, and water at an even temperature runs through these constantly for from 90 to 120 days. The infant fish are returned to the pools and carefully reared to planting size. The pools are watched night and day, often by "bomb" or flare lights, to guard against poachers and to attract insects.

No Time to Waste

The insurance office was rung up by a very excited woman.

"I want to insure my house," she said. "Can I do it over the 'phone?"

"I'm afraid not. Perhaps we'd better send a man along."

"You've got to do it immediately, I tell you," came the frantic voice. "The place is on fire!"

Mrs. Bond Lived for 109 Years

Spent Early Days on Farm Near Streetsville

Barrie, March 18—The last of a family of centenarians, Mrs. Jane Bond, believed to be 109, died at the home of her nephew, Harry Cole, six miles from Barrie, yesterday, after a short illness. Mrs. Bond had told her family she came to Canada in the year of the Mackenzie rebellion in 1837, when, as far as she could recall, she was a young girl in her teens There was no record of the date of her birth, but it is calculated by her family she was at least 109.

For the greater part of her life Mrs. Bond was a resident of Oakville moving to her nephew's home some years ago. Until a month ago she was active in spite of her great age.

Her father, John Cole, lived to be 110 years of age, a brother 102, and her sister, Mrs. Catherine Coventry died in Oakville in 1923 at the age of 104. Another brother, Harry Cole Sr., died at the age of 86.

Mrs. Bond was born in County Limerick, and lived first in Canada near Streetsville. She is survived by a number of grandchildren and great grandchildren

Although surviving relatives have no check on Mrs. Bond's age, William Cole, a nephew, told a reporter that his aunt was "quite a chunk of a girl" when her family came to Canada in 1838. At that time Mr. Coles father was a year old. He died ten years ago, aged 85. When Mrs. Catherine Coventry, Mrs. Bond's sister, died at Oakville in 1923, Mrs. Bond had passed the century mark.

One day this week some person poisoned Mr. Geo. Duller's collie dog. It will be quite a loss to Mr Duller, as it was a first class cattle dog and was always kept under control. We didn't think there was anybody in the village mean enough to do that trick.

A number of our citizens attended a banquet in Brampton on Monday evening given by the Lions Club to the Peel County Juniors and the staff of the Department of Agriculture office. A lengthy program was given and speeches and songs were indulged in. Presentations were made to Mr. J. C. Citizen Robbed

Two men went to the home of Mr Robert Bond, who lives about one mile south of Streetsville, one night this week. One man held him while the other went through his pockets and relieved him of $4 05,all he had. These highwaymen have been operating extensively in the larger places but we haven't heard of much of this kind of work around the village.

Ratepayers' Com, Meet

The Ratepayers Association met Tuesday night and passed the following resolution.

Moved by R. H. Greig and Harry Lepofsky, That this Ratepayers Association advise the Council that we are opposed to them spending any money on the Town Hall and that the Council be asked to call a public meeting to discuss present state of village finances before proceeding with any work on the said building.

The meeting was called after a report had been circulated to effect that the Council intended to spend $1500.00 on the Town Hall by way of fitting it up for Council chamber and Clerk's office, with expensive furnishings, hot water heating, rest rooms, vault etc.

The resolution was virtually a vote of censure, and was carried unanimously. The meeting felt that this is no time to be wasting public money on such schemes, especially when so many are out of work and thousands of dollars of taxes outstanding. The town hall has served the purpose for fifty years and would do a long time yet.

No public meeting has been called yet, and the repairs are going on. One Councillor said "We were elected to do the business for the village for the year, then why not let us do it ?"

A Successful Tea

The W.M.S. held their St.Patrick meeting and tea on March 16th. The chair was ably filled by Rev. Geo.H. Purchase. Mrs. C. H. Falconer and Mrs. C.P. MacArthur rendered a duet, Mrs. Lindsay gave a reading. Mrs. Butt of High Park United Church, Toronto, gave pictures of her trip across the continent and also gave solos in French and Latin

Mrs. Butt was presented with a bouquet of daffodills and ferns by Mrs. Rogerson and Mrs. Gould on behalf of the society. Edith Rogerson and Mildred Quennell gave a piano duett, which was much appreciated. Lunch was served in keeping with St. Patrick and so closed a very successful St. Patrick 's tea.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The North Trafalgar Community Club held its last meeting at the home of Mrs. J. P. Beattie, Tenth Line. It was our St. Patricks meeting and the program consisted of Irish pieces. Mrs. W. G. Cook gave a reading in two parts, Miss Alice Steen sang a solo, and Mrs. Henry Campbell told an Irish story, Mrs. John A. Cook was requested to stand up. Mrs. W. Cook then read an address and Mrs. Hy. Campbell presented her with a linen luncheon set. Mrs. Cook, though taken by surprise, made a very fitting reply. Mrs. Cook is leaving our neighborhood and this was just a small remembrance from the Club.

We then had a sing song of old Irish pieces. We sang our closing song. The hostess served the Club lunch, assisted by her daughter Lillian and Mrs. Clarence Hall.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. W. Leslie, Wed. March 30. An instructive program on first aid is being arranged. Every member please try to be there on time.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

The sun went down over the mountains as the stagecoach rattled over the pass toward Moleville. A sudden coolness descended immediately. Before the light had faded completely away the breaths of the horses were already showing misty in the chill. The girl in the stage shivered and drew her coat more closely about her and rearranged the laprobe her companion had somewhat officiously adjusted.

The driver turned his head and spat. "You fellers," he observed acidly to a pair of lounging figures in the back of the stage, "y'might get that artillery of yours unlimbered. Make a show o' earnin' yuh pay, anyhow."

A match glowed as a cigarette was lighted. There was the creaking of leather as if hosters were being eased into position. Inside the coach the girl stirred uneasily.

"Mr. Tilford, are those men guards?"

"Of course," said the man beside her, easily. "Just a precaution of course. There's no real danger."

The girl frowned. "But is the state of things really so bad?"

"Just a precaution," repeated Tilford easily. Then he added with belated gallantry. "The stage has a valuable cargo tonight."

"I know," said the girl, her frown persisting, "the mine pay-roll."

Tilford murmured in her ear. "I'll go into details later. It isn't wise to talk just now." Then in his natural voice, he added. "There's Moleville ahead. You can see the lights about the mine."

He pointed, and very far away and far below there were little glowing yellow pinpoints of light, with brighter ones of a different color bunched together.

"We're a good ten miles away by road—"

The explanation was cut short. The leaders of the team abruptly shied, slowed and came to a stop.

"Dawggone!" said a plaintive voice from the box.

A boulder had been dislodged from the hillside above and now effectually barred the way. The narrowness of the road and the drop to the left and the steepness of the hillside to the right ruled out any idea of a detour.

A soft voice came from the boulder strewn hill. "Put 'em up, Jake. It's me."

The driver jerked his arms skyward with a pained expression. "Dawggone yuh, Sonny! Yuh make me tired!"

"Who's with yuh?" asked the drawling voice from the boulders.

"Tilford, an' a lady, an' a coupla fellers."

The stage lurched quietly as if a weight had been removed, as if someone had dropped noiselessly to the road. It lurched again. Inside, Tilford's teeth chattered suddenly. The girl bit her lip and searched the hillside with her eyes. Tumbled rocks showed vaguely in the deepening dusk, though the sky was bright with the clear, unilluminating light of the sunset afterglow.

There was a curious, deadly stillness. The drawling voice came once more. "I'm after the mine payroll. Tilford can chuck it out. Sorry t' discommode the lady!"

BANG! A heavy calibre pump gun went off beneath the stage. It went off again. Then there were two guns at work, pouring in a deadly, raking fire of .45-70 bullets at the clump of rocks from which the voice seemed to have come. The two repeaters set up a roaring that was deafening.

From the hillside there was no reply. No flash of flame. No shot. Not even a cry.

Below the stage the stabbing flashes of light spat out. The curious reek of burn powder drifted upward in strangling thickness. The roll of rifle fire rattled on and on—then suddenly it slackened. One gun was empty. The rifles clattered in the stone road as they were dropped and six-guns took their places in the hands of the guards. The cocking of the six-guns sounded strangely loud in the stillness that fell about the stage.

And yet there was silence. No sound or movement from the hill.

The stage driver sat like a statue with his hands held aloft. The girl in the stage bit her lip again. Tilford's teeth chattered on in the stillness for a moment and stopped.

Then the driver said in a peculiar bitterness. "It kinda looks like yuh got him this time, Tilford."

Tilford stirred. He opened his mouth and swallowed, and courage returned with a rush. "You men go up and make sure," he ordered loudly. "If he stirs when you reach him, don't hesitate to shoot! To kill!"

There was another cautious pause. A movement below the stage. Then another. The two guards moved carefully forward. Their six-guns ready. They reached the first of the boulders—and two shots sounded as one. One of the guards spun half way around and dropped his six-gun. The other reeled and fell.

Silence again. The girl gasped in horror now, and the chattering of Tilford's teeth was pronounced. Then a voice said quietly. "Don't be scared, lady. Neither of 'em ain't dead. I got one in the shoulder an' creased the other. They was kinda outlined against the sky."

A figure materialized suddenly among the stones and came confidently down to the road. It was a young man, quite unmasked, in chaps and shirt of orthodox cowpuncher style.

"That there," he drawled, "it was a right good idea, Tilford, but yuh forgot I got brains, too, an' yuh forgot there's some light still left. Pass out the payroll."

Tilford's knees crooked automatically, but a small hand was laid on his arm. The girl made a quick movement. A tiny, toy-sized revolver bore more or less steadily upon the highwayman's breast. He was no more than three feet away.

"Now," said the girl crisply, "now you put your hands up!"

The highwayman did not obey. Instead, he looked straight in her eyes and smiled, and then deliberately placed his cupped hand over the muzzle of her weapon. "I ain't just certain, ma'am," he drawled pleasantly, "just how t' handle a situation like this. If yuh pull that there trigger, yuh' goin' to mess me all up. But I hope yuh ain't got the nerve t' pull it."

He was making no move to wrest the revolver away. He was smiling at her as he pressed his hand against the muzzle. But the flare of triumph in the girl's eyes faded to a look of horror as she looked involuntarily at her own weapon. An explosion—

She gasped in horror at the thought of firing it, pressed close against his flesh. She jerked her hand away in a panic lest it go off. And the highwayman tossed the little weapon in the air and caught it.

"Thank you, ma'am," he said gravely. "I'd 'a' known how to handle a gunman, but a gunlady is kinda new out thisaway." His voice changed. "Tilford, hand me that there payroll."

Trembling, Tilford obeyed. The highwayman tucked the satchel under his arm. "I'm right sorry to've held yuh up like this, ma'am," he said apologetically. "I'll leave yuh gun on the boulder wonder. On' I'd kinda like to compliment yuh, ma'am, on tryin' to stick me up, if yuh wouldn't mind."

The girl had recovered from the horror that had made her drop the gun. Now she seemed angry at her own weakness. "You needn't," she said angrily. "I'm sorry I was too startled!"

"I'm glad you was, ma'am," said the outlaw, with the beginning of a smile hovering about him lips. "That there was my gun hand."

"I've heard of it," the girl flared suddenly. "You're Sonny Holman, and you've killed enough men with that gun hand! You claim to own the Aztec mine. You rob its payrolls and its shipments of ore. You've nearly bankrupted it, all with your gun hand! I can see you'd miss it!"

The outlaw grinned deprecatingly. "Somethin' like that, ma'am, all but the killin's. I deny them right emphatic. But y'see I do own the mine an' this here is the only way I can collect what's due me."

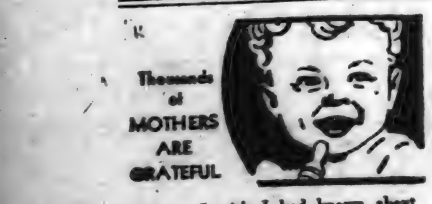
The girl's fists clenched. "I'll hope to be present when you do collect what's due you!"

"Shucks," protested Sonny, "yuh wishin' a jinx on me, ma'am! But I'll promise yuh to reform, ma'am, just as soon as I'm settled with that son of a gun that claims t' own the Aztec."

"Laurier, of course!" said the girl scornfully.

"Yes'm," said Sonny politely. "J. H. Laurier, ma'am. From your tone, ma'am, I kinda gather yuh don't enjoy my society. I'm sorry to've bothered yuh. I didn't expec' to see yuh, ma'am. I'd kinda hoped to find Laurier on board tonight. I rec'n that'll have to be my excuse for upsettin' yuh." He started to back away.

"I see," said the girl coldly, "you're not only out as a thief tonight, but as a murderer."



Sonny stopped. For an instant his jaw clenched. "If you was a man, ma'am," he began unsteadily.

Jake interrupted from the driver's seat. "Yuh're goin' to make me mad yet, Sonny," he said venomously. "Shut up an' git that stone outer the way. This is four times yuh held me up an' one day I'm goin' to get real fretted an' blow hell outer yuh."

The highwayman seemed to be struggling to control his temper. He grinned suddenly and swept off his hat. "Ma'am," he drawled, "I pay yuh the compliment of sayin' yuh made me madder than any man I ever saw. But Laurier murdered my uncle when he stole the Aztec, even if he hired it done. An' I won't murder him if I get him. I'll give him a gun, ma'am, an' I'll give him a fair show, but I'll kill him as sure as Gawd made li'l green apples."

The girl shrank back. The outlaw turned on his heel and went to the boulder. He laid her little weapon down and rounded a curve in the road. A moment later a horse's hoofs were heard, clattering away along the rocky road. They dwindled in the distance and ceased.

Soviet Levies Special Tax For Cultural Development

Mosow.—Soviet citizens, heretofore paying only one general tax on their incomes, must now meet a special new tax for cultural purposes. The levy is being collected to help achieve the government's five-year plan for cultural and economic development in the villages, the schedule contemplating erection of schools, clubs and theatres.

Workers who receive less than $37.50 monthly are exempt from the new tax. For others it runs from $4 to $65.

"Kulaks" or peasant farm owners, and other "declassed" sections of the population, already taxed heavily on their property holdings, must pay 100 per cent. more in cultural taxes.

Swiss Flier, Without Oxygen, Rises to 24,606 Feet Oltitude

Geneva.—Without the use of oxygen, the Swiss aviator, Nyfenegger, piloting the 200-horsepower monoplane Comte of the Schroeder Swissair Company, attained an altitude of 24,606 feet last week. The temperature recorded was 36 degrees below zero Centrigrade (approximately 33 degrees below zero Fahrenheit).

At an altitude of 18,000 feet, M. Nyfenegger reported, he began to experience an almost unbearable headache and was unable to utter a word, but he continued upward.

M. Nyfenegger said he will try to rise to 28,000 feet in another attempt to be made shortly, this time using oxygen.

Against Clocks

By Amanda Benjamin Hall in "Troubadour."

Put not your trust in clocks, I say
For clocks are faithless fellows,
Begrudging further stint of day
Poor lads before the gallows!

Such tedious talkers, tick on tick,
Their discourse is the bane
Of persons lying parched and sick,
For they inform the pain.

How long it's pulse, how long 'twill run
Before it finds surcease
At last. When fevered nights are done,
When there is light and peace.

They set a swift, impatient pace
With a beguiling chime,
I've known one wear the straightest face
And tell the falsest time.

Once on a hill-top wreathed with flower,
In thyme and sun-sweet clover,
A clock's face, leaning from a tower,
Espied me and my lover:

Two, having neither dials nor charts
To count the minutes by,
With but the beating of their hearts
To gauge eternity.

Affronted, then it told the town,
It drove its engines hard
And fast—It would not throttle down
Their fury, nor retard

Their haste. When love lay like a seed
Sown deeply, silently,
It still ticked on—nor seemed to heed
That time had stopped for me.

Roman Treasures Found in Algeria

Algiers, Algeria. — Important discoveries have been made in the ruins of a former Roman town near Sauk-Ahras, south of Bona in the Department of Constantine, Algeria.

It is evident that the excavated area was the necropolis of the ancient town, for a large vault has been unearthed containing several niches for lamps, and gold and silver ornaments. Hidden in a deep well that has not yet been sounded were three marble statues. One probably represents the Roman god Silvanus, similar to a statute in the Louvre.

Cut Flowers

Amid the clangour of the city's street,
The busy plying of industry's loom,
There is a spot where noise and nature meet,
A spot whence comes the soft sweet scent of bloom.

Fresh as the morn, the fragrant flowers lend
A touch of colour to the drab and grey;
And heavy-laden toilers as they wend
Look on them, and are spirit-borne away

To some far, lonely garden, where the sun
Is shadowed by the tree-tops all day long.
Where harmony and happiness are one,
And naught is heard save all the birds' sweet sound.

—Rnddick Millar.

Wisdom of Content

Who would not be covetous, and with reason, if health could be purchased with gold? Who not ambitious, if it were at the command of power, or restored by honor? But alas! a white staff will not help gouty feet to walk better than a common cane; nor a blue riband bind up a wound so well as a fillet; the glitter of gold or of diamonds will but hurt sore eyes, instead of curing them; and on aching head will be no more eased by wearing a crown instead of a common nightcap.—Sir W. Temple.

Happiness

Every attempt to make others happy, every sin left behind, every temptation trampled under foot, every step forward in the cause of what is good, is a step nearer the cause of Christ.—Dean Stanley.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green voile—an imported dress—lost colors so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it asked me why I wasn't wearing it any more. On hearing the reason, she advised dyeing it and recommended Diamond Dyes. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress that really cost just 15 cents—the price of one package of Diamond Dyes.

"I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They do either equally well. I am not an expert dyer but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to be made so they always go on smoothly and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends never know the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are redyed at all!"

Soviet To Stage Own Fashion Revue This Spring

Moscow.—The Soviet capital will soon witness its first "fashion show." It will be so different from similar shows in the outside world that it scarcely deserves the name.

An exhibition of sartorial models submitted by designers, artists, scientists and ordinary mortals is being organized, with prizes for those adjudged most suitable for Soviet conditions. Practical and sanitary considerations, it is pointed out here, rather than "fashion" or "style," will determine the winners

The exhibition, under the auspices of the clothing trust, raises an interesting question about the future of Soviet clothes. Will the new Russia follow the dictates of Paris and other foreign style centers? Or will it develop styles of its own? As yet the question is somewhat academic. There are not enough clothes to go around and no margin to spare for style.

Women in Moscow, Leningrad and other large cities, who are interested in clothes, do not think twice in answering the question. They definitely want to follow European styles. They watch carefully foreign motion pictures, the few foreign fashion magazines that are smuggled into the country and the dress of foreign visitors for guidance.

The clothing trust, however, is not so sure about this issue. Its officials talk about the "socialistic aims" of their industry rather than its fashion side. A spokesman of the trust said that capitalistic countries spent millions of dollars in producing new styles and discarding old ones. This was a form of waste, he said, which the Soviets would avoid.

The "fashion show" is one of the methods for interesting the public in this undertaking. Every one has been invited to submit sartorial ideas. The prize-winning models will become standards for mass production.

Egyptian Cotton for Hungary

The Egyptian Government has made an offer to the Hungarian Textile Works for supplying them with cotton, according to "Hungary of To-day." The proposition has not been accepted yet, especially because the Egyptians wish to fix their prices only some six months later and give as reasons that the prices of to-day may not be regarded as real ones. As the Hungarian works do not wish to undertake such a risk it is probable that no business will be entered into with the Egyptians.

Sunday School Lesson

March 27. Lesson XIII—Jesus Rises From the Dead (Easter Lesson)—John 20: 11-20. Golden Text—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept.—1 Corinthians 15: 20.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE APPEARANCE TO MARY, 20: 11-18.
II. THE APPEARANCE TO THE DISCIPLES, 20: 19-20.

INTRODUCTION—John's aim in this chapter is to show the gradual dawning of faith in the resurrection among the disciples, until it blazed into full light in the confession of Thomas, v. 28. He is concerned mainly in bringing out its spiritual meaning for the church.

The church was built on the faith that Christ was still alive and active in the world. That faith was based on the experience of those who were convinced that they had seen the Lord, and upon the evidence that he was alive in power among his followers in this very world whence his foes thought they had banished him, and going on with the work which Calvary had interrupted. The resurrection faith was, in the first place therefore, based upon the resurrection appearances.

I. THE APPEARANCE TO MARY, 20: 11-18.

The body of Jesus, having received only temorary burial on Friday evening, was to be properly embalmed as soon as the Sabbath was past. Mary Magdalene it was when went early, as the grey dawn was breaking, to the tomb (v. 1) to find the stone which had been laid against the face of it removed. Something told her that her Lord was no longer there. Raising a cue and cry, she soon had others at the tomb, v. 2. Upon "the disciple whom Jesus loved" flashed that the Lord was risen. But both he and Peter were still uncertain. Had they thought the body had been stolen they would have informed Joseph of Arimathæa. Had they been convinced that Jesus had come to life again, they would certainly have sought him out and arranged a lodging. As it was, they were perplexed, and they went home to ponder over it all.

But Mary lingered near. Through her tears she saw a vision of angels, but from them she learned nothing. Becoming conscious of some one, the gardener (who else would be abroad so early?), she asked, "Tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away," v. 15—with her weak arms—but eager love knew no weakness. Then came the greatest recognition scen in all literature—"Mary."—"Rabonni!" Two words, but they changed her world for her, and for us all.

In the first flush of her joy, she started forward to embrace him. "Touch me not," he said, or "cease clinging to me."—Dr. Moffatt. Mary must now learn another and a higher way of knowing her Lord. This higher way will not, however, begin until he has ascended, v. 17. This is John's way of teaching that the true proof of the resurrection and the true possession of the Risen Christ are not to be found in a "resurrection appearance" or physical contacts. They are to be realized in the normal experience of the believer.

He sends her immediately to tell the brethren, not his blood-relations, but his spiritual brethren, his disciples. The receiving of the Good News is always followed by the sharing of it with others.

II. THE APPEARANCE TO THE DISCIPLES, 20: 19-20.

That same evening, the first Christian Sunday evening, the eleven were together, locked in for fear of the Jews, v. 19. When the news would reach the authorities that the body of Jesus was gone, suspicion would most likely fall upon his disciples of stealing it. Hence the locked door.

Christians are still living behind the closed doors of fear, afraid to be considered enthusiastic, afraid of public opinion, and thereby render their lives largely useless. We often close the door on Christ unwittingly. Sometimes our friendships close the door on many noble things, among them, the beauty of Jesus Christ. But he comes through our closed door. Suddenly the Master was in the room with them, v. 19. Coming, he brought peace to his own. Inner peace—in the midst of outer conflict, such is the Christian's heritage. What difference does religion make in a man's life? For one thing, it can keep him cool and brave when others are faltering, enable him to live through life's hazards and confusions with a bigness and a courage which are the wonder of those who have not the secret. "Fear not," he says to all, "I am with you."

The essential thing about the Resurrection is the continued life and presence of Jesus Christ. Had there not been something more than a bodily appearance, nothing much would have happened. It is the "something more" that has made all the difference. The thing that matters is not "how" the still living Lord made himself known to a few people nineteen hundred years ago, but that, since his death on Calvary, he has been touching men with the same quickening and renewing power that he always had.

Reminiscences

One of the stories told by Elsie Janis in her breezy reminiscences "So Far, So Good," is of her first meeting with Mary Pickford. It was in the 1890's when, as child prodigies, both appeared on the same "bill" at Shea's Theatre, Toronto. Mary Pickford—then known as "Baby Gladys Smith"—was playing in a sketch, while Elsie Janis—as "Little Elsie"—did "an act" all by herself. She was seven and something as a "star" already, having been on the stage for two years. Mary was younger, for, Elsie recalls, "they had to carry her on."

* * * *

The two "kiddies" became great friends—as did their mothers, by the way, for they had much in common—and have remained so ever since. Elsie remembers that "Mary would gaze wide-eyed at my array of dresses, hanging on the dressing-room wall, a different one for each performance, and two performances a day.

"'Mother,' she would say plaintively, 'do you suppose I will ever have pretty dresses like those?'"

* * * *

There are lots of chuckles—and just a few sighs—in the Janis book, beginning with the title itself "So Far, So Good!" As all the world knows, Elsie was married recently. This is how she started reminiscing:

"There can be no doubt that I have reached the years of indiscretion.

"For the first time in my life I have lost my sense of humor over a man!"

* * * *

PEEPS AT CELEBRITIES.

Caruso (at dinner in the Janis apartment): "Singing his requests for more potatoes, and ah-ah-ah-ah-ing right up to high C for another piece of bread, then drawing caricatures of us all on the 'company' tablecloth! What a good, bad little boy he was!"

Irving Berlin: "Irving became like a son to Mother. He reminded her of Perce (Elsie's dead brother). He didn't remind me of anyone, but I loved him! I still do, and I'll slap his face if he ever says he felt like a brother toward me!"

* * * *

MORE PEEPS.

Queen Alexandra (in the Royal box at a London thatre where Elsie Janis, in her make-up, had been presented to her): "As I was leaving, Queen Alexandra pulled one of my curls and said: 'Ah! They don't come off!' I murmured something to the effect that if they came off for anyone they would for her, shook her hand again and saying, 'Good-bye, Your Majesty,' I ran out."

Michael Arlen (the novelist—born an Armenian): "I met Michael Arlen, whose answer to my inquiry as to what nationality he was, is typical: 'I'm the last of the Armenian atrocities,' he said!"

* * * *

Elsie Janis tells an amusing story about one of her youthful admirers—the grandson of a wealthy brewer—who was a constant visitor at the Janis home, and whom she nicknamed "Happy," because of his smile. He it was (she chuckles) who, when the San Francisco earthquake occurred, and his grandfather donated $100,000 to the relief fund, telegraphed that distinguished philanthropist, "Remember, Governor, charity begins at home!"

To which Happy, "who was busy cutting classes at Yale and capers in New York," replied, "If you were where I am, you would never go home!"

* * * *

The utter inability to recognize photographs of themselves, or of their surroundings, is characteristic of all savages, says Martin Johnson (in "Congorilla: Adventures with Pygmies and Gorillas in Africa...) He tells of taking pictures of the Pygmies who accompanied him on a camera hunt for gorillas in the Congo, and afterwards showing them prints.

"They would take these pictures," he says, "turn them upside down and all around without the slightest conception as to what they were."

* * * *

"I would display a perfect likeness of one or more of a group, but not a Pygmy would recognize a person in the picture," he adds. "It was exactly the same with scenes. I could take a reproduction of a native hut, show the scene of a Pygmy and also the picture. He would have no idea of what the photograph meant and could not associate it with the original."

Richard Landry, Ottawa valley boy, winner of the Kiwanis junior dog derby at Pembroke a few days ago, with his dog and sleigh.

Curiously enough, some are able to grasp motion pictures, but show little interest in them. Mr. Johnson instances a special show he gave the "boys" who had accompanied the expedition. After watching the motion picture—in which most of them appeared—silently, they talked together in low tones. Finally, one of them walked up to Johnson.

"When do we get paid?" he asked.

"Paid!" shouted Johnson. "What do you mean paid?"

"Well, you told us to come here."

"That was the native reaction to my efforts to entertain these African black," comments Johnson.

The publication of a book by Beau Brummell ("Male and Female Costume"), written over one hundred years ago when the "King of the Dandies" was at the height of his glory, recalls that it was said of him that "women admired him, but men almost reverenced him." The Beau never married, but that he was not indifferent to the companionship and charm of the ladies, there is ample evidence. Lewis Melville (in his "Life and Letters" of Brummell) tells of an occasion when the Beau was staying at a country house.

"I must leave here this morning," he said unexpectedly to his host.

"But," the other expostulated, "you were not going until the end of the week."

"True; quite true," the Beau concurred, "but I really must be off."

* * * *

His host, however, was not satisfied, and plied him with questions, until at last Brummell, in desperation blurted out:

"Well, the fact is, I am in love with your wife."

"Why, my dear fellow, so was I twenty years ago," remarked the lady's husband, hoping to put his guest at his ease. Then a thought struck him and he inquired:

"Is she in love with you?"

"I—I believe she is."

"That alters the case," the host said with decision. "I will send for your post-horses immediately."

U.S. Leads in Telephones

The United States continued in the first rank of countries using the telephone. Statistics compiled by the Canadian government show that the United States has one phone for every eight inhabitants; Canada, one for every seven; New Zealand, one for every five, and Denmark, one for every four and a half persons.

Paderewski

1912—1932

A cabin door
And the slow dropping of golden notes
Upon the boy and girl sitting on the steps outside.
The great ship heaves upon the waters;
And up above the while gulls are flying,
Dipping, circling and floating upon a tropic sea;
And the golden notes are dropping
Slowly upon the boy and the girl.

You have forgotten the ship, Paderewski;
You have forgotten the boy and the girl;
But the music you have not forgotten,
And I who sit here to-day have forgotten nothing.

Like a great orchestra you are beating against the bronze doors of time;
The white gulls are no longer flying;
The page that was not written has been written;
France has taken and Poland has spoken;
But above the wild beating the notes of liquid gold remain.

—A. Jacqueline Shaw, in The Christian Science Monitor.

Dorothy—"Why do people use the expression, 'In the dead of winter'?"

Dick—"Because it is usually shortly after the holidays when everyone is broke."

Russian Grows Hybrid Grain

Crossing Wheat With Rye Said to Produce Better Quality

Moscow.—New foodstuffs which are expected to alter radically the character of Russia's crops and which may revolutionize the world's food supply have been discovered here.

These discoveries are the result of experiments in breeding hybrid grains, composed of wheat and rye, carried out during the last decade by Prof. G. K. Meister in Saratov.

Professor Meister has succeeded in obtaining two hybrid grains, one of which is called "erythros-pemum," the other "lutescens."

An area of about 250 acres has been sown with these hybrid grains. Comparative tests carried out over a three-year period show that "erythros-permum" affords a yield of more than 33 per cent. in excess of that of the best grade wheat, while the yield of "lutescens" is between 20 and 25 per cent. in excess of that of wheat.

A baking test, based on the amounts of protein, starch and moisture, the amount of flour obtained and the rising of the bread, resulted in the following evaluations: "Erythros-permum" 83; "utescens," 82; best grade wheat, 78. Although the hybrid grains represent a crossbreeding of wheat and rye, they yield pure white bread.

The new grain has proved tougher and more resistant than wheat and consequently can be planted in regions where rye has hitherto been the chief grain crop. This, it is believed, makes possible a great extension of the Russian wheat belt.

Similar experiments in the crossing of wheat and rye are being conducted in other countries. They were made available to the English-speaking nations last year in papers published by the Imperial Bureau of Plant Genetics, School of Agriculture, Cambridge, England.

Russian agricultural investigators profess to have discovered that corn grows best when nights are long and consequently believe that by making artificial darkness in regions where nights are short, corn could be successfully cultivated.

The hot climate which is naturally required for cotton plantations is found in the Soviet Union, in central Asia and, to a lesser extent, in the Trans-Caucasus.

But the Soviet Union is not satisfied with the present acreage under cotton cultivation and looks for new fields to develop. So a campaign of active experimentation is being carried on for the purpose of discovering just what cotton needs for its successful growth.

A Road Ocross Europe

Eight countries are combining in a scheme for making an international highway across Europe for motorists.

The road is to run direct from London to Constantinople, a distance of nearly 2,000 miles, and in each country the authorities are being urged to make it a uniform width.

It is probable that a 24-hour customs service will be arranged in each of the eight countries, and new customs officers established by the roadside if the scheme is carried out.

All this is good news. The more we see of our neighbors the more we should understand them, and understanding is one of the most powerful peace makers in the world.—The War Cry (London).

Anti-Noise in the Station

In the big Paris railway station, the station master used to wave his flag, the guard blew his whistle, the driver let off a little steam, and the train slowly moved out. If, as you reached the platform, you heard the guard's whistle, you knew you had better be quick. But the activities of the anti-noise campaign have changed all this. Trains now whistle only when it is strictly necessary. If the station is equipped with loudspeakers, all is well, for these warn you when the train is going to start, but if there are no loudspeakers, you must be alert or else before you realize it the train will have slipped silently away.

A man may know his own mind and still not be very wise.

"Quick . . . the barn's on fire"

Dick Johnson's wife was making pies when she glanced out the window and saw smoke curling up from the barn. And Dick was over at the Blay's helping with a load of hogs!

She ran to the telephone. Dick rushed home with Fred Blay and in a few minutes they had stamped out the smouldering hay before the fire got really started.

"That was a close shave", Dick said. "We might have lost everything. It's lucky we've kept our telephone."

ORAL HYGIENE

The health of the teeth and of the tissues surrounding the teeth is important. It is now generally recognized that serious conditions may arise in other parts of the body as a result of infections about the teeth.

By infection we mean the presence of living germs, and when these are confined or limited to one spot, we refer to that spot as a focus of infection and to the condition as that of a focal infection. Focal infections occur in various parts, the teeth being a common location.

Focal infections are serious, not because of what happens at the focus, but because the germs at the focus may be carried by the blood stream of other parts of the body. Reaching other parts, the germs may cause disease in such parts, and so we find disease of the heart, kidneys, nerves, joints and other organs, as a result of some focus of infection in the teeth, tonsils, or other part.

It is quite true that many people have infected teeth, and yet they do not show any ill results of such infection. They are, however, living with a constant threat hanging over their heads. No one can venture an opinion as to when or for what reason there may occur a spread of germs, with the possibility of the ill results we have indicated. It is for that reason that it is sound advice, as a matter of precaution, to tell you to keep the teeth in a healthy condition.

In order to have healthy teeth, and to avoid those conditions which arise out of diseased teeth, it is necessary that some care be given to them. At the present time, it is unfortunately the case that care usually begins in the later years as an effort to preserve teeth which are already damaged. The reverse should be practised. Care is needed throughout life, but care of the teeth in childhood will prevent much of the dental trouble that now occurs in adult life. In any case, the child's health demands a healthy mouth just as much as does the health of the adult.

The foundation for sound, healthy teeth is diet. Proper building foods must be provided if a good structure is to be built, and it must not be forgotten that most of the building is done during the early years of life. So it is that milk and green vegetables, which supply calcium and phosphorus—two essential minerals—must be included in the diet. If the teeth are to be kept healthy, they must be exercised through use, and kept clean.

Some coarse foods, and such foods as hard, dry toast, give the teeth an opportunity for exercise, and these should be eaten. The teeth should be brushed after every meal, but the most important time for doing this is before retiring so that the mouth may be clean during the hours of sleep. Regular visits to the dentist will permit of the detection and correction of any evidence of disease before extensive damage or harm can result.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Early History at Wom. Institute

The March meeting of the Woman's Institute was held at the home of Miss Nellie Rutledge, on Thursday, March 17th. Pres., Mrs. Caslor in the chair. The meeting was opened by singing our ode and after the business part of the meeting, the roll call was answered by, where were your Grandparents born, which proved most interesting. Mr. John Atkinson, with his violin and King Hollingshead, with his guitar, favoured the meeting with several beautiful numbers and King also accompanied Mrs. Wm. Falconer, Mrs. Greig, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. McClintock, who sang lovely Irish songs so fitting for the day.

Mrs. David Ross gave a paper on Barbertown, the coming of the Barber family and the business ability that built up the little town to be a heehive of industry. To have these early days recalled was more than enjoyed by the older members of our meeting.

Miss M. Graydon gave a paper on the Industrial age in Streetsville in the '70's. The 1st village council met in 1857, one member is still left, Mr. John Rutledge, who also gave some details of the older days.

Mr. John Atkinson spoke on pioneer days and reminded us of the noble heritage handed to us by our forefathers. Mrs. Wm. Couse read a letter written by a Mrs. Kerr in Streetsville in 1860. Many of the members remembering names mentioned.

Mr. John Wylie spoke of the old Streetsville Band and Mr. Geo. McClintock, who was present reminded Mr. Wylie that Streetsville beat Brampton in a contest in 1884. A dainty lunch was then served and the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

STRAW STACKS

By J. H. Beamish

Who would imagine this to be the first day of spring? And yet the almanac says it's Monday, March 21st. Today there is an east wind mixed with snow and it is much snappier than it was a month ago—two months ago, yes, or three months ago. However, the winter just closed has inflicted very little snow shovelling on us, nor has it wasted much time with our rubbing our frost-bitten ears with snow.

In the olden days on the farm before the advent of the bank barns, about this time of the year, farmers would be comparing notes as to how the stock had wintered. There were the young cattle that eked out an existence tunnnelling the straw stack. Then there were the more favored members of the herd that enjoyed "reserved" stalls in the shed under the hay-loft.

But the old-fashioned carefully built straw stack is a thing of the past! Yes, they're gone forever, the kind that were constructed in Trafalgar forty years ago. What a pride some of the boss-stackers of those days took in producing "a thing of beauty," which was the admiration of all the "hands" at the close of the day. Yes, the kind that Charles O'Connor or James Fullerton or Joynes Stephens would engineer. How they would go, round after round, carefully treaded, and the heart kept well filled as the pattern grew! Frequently they took the trouble to descend to the barnyard to view the symmetry of the picture. When finished it was nicely topped off—symmetrically and architecturally completed.

Today the straw is "blown" into the yard where it finds a resting place in an unrecognizable mess, or else it is left in the field—an aftermath of stook-threshing.

Errors That Got Away From the Proofreader

Under the heading of typographical errors, in "The Handy Book of Literary Curiosities," written by William S. Walsh and published by J. B. Lippincott company in 1893, there are some facts which might be labeled "In extenuation of Larry the Linotyper." They apparently prove that Larry's sins of nowadays are venial compared with some of those of former times.

Here are some examples, with what should have been printed indicated in some cases:

"The distinguished traveler died in the richness of sin." (In the interior of Asia.)

"She was a lady whose manners would alarm a drowning man." (Adorn a drawing room.)

"Links, bonds and stripes for the violent kind of specters." (Lines, bands and striae in the violet part of spectra.)

"Drunkenness is jolly." (Drunkenness is folly.)

"Sir Robert Peel and a party of fiends were shooting pheasants in Ireland."

"Woman—without her man—is a brute."

"He enters on his head, his helmet on his feet, sandals on his brow, there was a cloud in his right hand, his faithful sword in his eye, and angry glare he sat down."

"The body was taken to Hell for interment." (Hull for interment.)

Part of a woman's complaint to a Buffalo newspaper read: "Wherever I refer to my honored countrymen as 'white males' I am reported as having addressed them as 'white mules.' All these are very good jokes if credited to the printer's devil, but not to those who represent an unpopular idea and carefully weigh their words."

Efficacy of Prayers Measured by Numbers

The devout people of Tibet, and that is almost the entire population, spend much time and ingenuity in their prayers. Their prayers, to the glorification of Buddha, seem to be a race to work off the greatest possible number of prayers, and the one who has the largest number to his credit has prospects of the greatest reward. One man has the supplication carved on a board which is secured to a long pole. He spends hours every day dipping the board into the water. Every dip is a prayer. Another has a whirling windmill, which he holds aloft with the proper inscription upon it, and every revolution is a prayer. Women moving about in their ordinary pursuits carry little whirligigs which they keep in motion constantly. Every whirl is a prayer. The shoulder blades of the yak present a broad surface. These are properly inscribed and hung in groups of a dozen, from the branches of a tree overhanging a footpath. Travelers cannot get by without brushing them aside and this disturbance means several prayers. Sturdy ones climb to the mountain top and plant prayer flags at the summit.

Parade Into Fields

Bulgaria is 5,000 red-roofed villages strewn along streams, scattered in clusters over plains, straggling along the crest of hills, and all the work, order, love and sacrifice, song and prayer that fill them.

On May mornings Bulgaria is a stream of grandparents, parents and children, flocks of sheep, herds of cattle, droves of pigs and geese, all pouring forth from their appointed places. Mother carry babies in tiny hammocks on their backs, and on reaching the fields hang them to the flowering branches of leafy trees or to shaded tripods. If the journey is long, donkeys carry the swaddled infants in saddlebags.

Old and New

In Europe modernism and medievalism have a way of living side by side in the same city, each unconscious and uncomprehending of the other. This is seen to the best advantage at Mentone on the Riviera. The centuries have not changed this medieval city. Time seems to have woven it into a tapestry of venerable cathedrals, moss-covered houses and primitive little pathways, they unknowingly or generously call streets, and all that Old Mentone knows of Young Mentone is that she comes at certain times of the year with her manifestations of wealth and gayety to live in the luxurious hotels and spacious villas, a terra incognito to her neighbor.

Reason for Postmarks

Postmarks were first placed on envelopes as an official marking. Later they were used to cancel the postage stamps and give place and time of mailing. The post office department says that the records of the department do not show when the postmark was first used. As early as 1798 the postal laws and regulations required the postmasters to mark letters deposited in their offices for mailing with the name of the office. This mark might be either stamped or written. Up to 1840 in some cases written postmarks were still in use.

Conceit

No matter how good you may think you are, it is the judgment of others that establishes your value. It is right to be selfconfident to a degree, but not beyond that degree. In the long run it pays to take your job—not yourself—seriously.—Grit.

County Women Want to Know

Are Still Fighting to Keep the Home Demonstrator in Peel

To the Editor:

About two weeks ago a delegation from the Women's Institute representing every part of Peel County waited on the County Council to ask them to reconsider the withdrawal of the grant towards Home Demonstration work. We felt that the Council did not realize the educational value of the work carried on among the young people in improving rural conditions, and, above all, in giving our young people an incentive for remaining on the farms of Peel County. We asked the Council to discuss the matter in our presence. Instead of a discussion, we were entertained to an oration, entirely aside from the question of the Home Demonstrator. We came away with the feeling that our efforts had fallen on deaf ears. Before we approached the Council, I was told that we were wasting our time as it was the desire of the Government to withdraw these services from our County. The evening following, I was informed by several members of the Council that they had been in touch with the Minister of Agriculture, and, as a result of the contact, were reaffirmed in their decision to dispense with Home Demonstration services.

The following letter from the Hon. T. L. Kennedy speaks for itself:

Dear Mrs. Wilson:

On May 1st, 1918, the County of Peel was fortunate in having a Home Demonstrator appointed to take charge of the Junior activities with the rural girls of the County. Since then many Counties have asked that they be allowed to have a Home Demonstrator but up to the present time every County, with the exception of Peel, has been refused. We have felt that the agreement we entered into with the County should be carried out by us, especially as the work done in the County of Peel has proved so profitable to the County. Owing to the fact that you have had a Home Demonstrator in Peel, your County stands at the head of the list in activities to help the farm girls and farm women of the County. I have often wondered how long it will be possible for us to refuse to give other Counties the same privilege that we have extended to the County of Peel.

We have always arranged that our work with the County shall be year by year and shall be carried on to the end of that year unless previous notice has been given that the service is not required. I was not notified during the year 1931 that the Home Demonstrator would not be needed in 1932. I was much surprised to receive my first intimation from a newspaper clipping. On February 3rd I wrote the following letter to Mr. Wilson, the County Clerk, Brampton:

"I saw by this morning's paper that the Council had refused to pay the grant of $500.00 promised for the Home Demonstrator. This means that we shall have to move her from the County of Peel as the conditions regarding her staying there were the same as govern the Agricultural Representative, namely, that you contribute $500.00 towards the expenses of the Home Demonstrator. You will realize that she has already started on her second month of this year and I cannot let her out without a month's notice so it will be April 1st before her services can be discontinued. You will therefore be liable for three months of this grant.

"I feel sorry that you have broken the partnership without advising me beforehand as it is almost impossible on a minute's notice to discontinue any activity that we are carrying on in the Province. Owing to your cancellation of the grant, it will be impossible for me to keep the Home Demonstrator in Peel County after April 1st."

I felt it very keenly that they did not consult me personally before discontinuing the Home Demonstrator because in the past I have been able to render some services to the County Council through co-operation and consultation with them and something might have been done in this case. However, owing to their method of discontinuing the work of the Home Demonstrator, nothing remains for me except to discontinue her work after April 1st unless the County Council agrees to give the required $500. I regret this exceedingly because from the Departmental point of view the work done in Peel County has been excellent. If there is any likelihood of the County Council changing its mind, I shall be pleased to leave the Home Demonstrator in the County.

Yours sincerely,
THOMAS L. KENNEDY,
Minister of Agriculture.

What we ask now is: Why was this discourtesy shown our Minister of Agriculture by not consulting him in the matter? Why are the County Council placing the onus of their decision upon the Government? Why did they not co-operate with the Department of Agriculture so that this matter might have been adjusted satisfactorily to both County Council and to the women and girls of Peel?

M. S. WILSON,
President Peel W.I.

United Church Has Successful Communion Service

One of the largest communion services in several years was held at the United Church on Easter Sunday morning. The message given by the minister was appropriate for Easter and Communion. Mr. Purchase urged his listeners to remember Jesus Christ, specially to remember His death and resurrection. The choir, under the able leadership of Mr. Len. Pope, rendered an anthem, "The Risen Christ," in a most effective way.

At the Communion Service a goodly number was received into the church as members, some on Profession of Faith and some by letter from other churches. We feel that this service was an encouragement to the minister as well as other services which show a growing congregation.

GORDON GRAYDON,
B.A., LLB.
Elected President of Peel County Conservative Association last Saturdry

BRAMPTON

The Peel County Conservative Association held its annual meeting at the Orange Hall here Saturday, and elected the following officers for the current year: President, Gordon Graydon, Brampton; Vice-Presidents, T. R. Evans, Caledon East; Mrs. M. Broddy, Brampton, and Roy Cook, Huttonville; Secretary, J. W. Drennan, Streetsville; and Treasurer, J. B. Guthrie, Dixie. The meeting was addressed by Hon. W. G. Martin, Minister of Welfare; Hon. T. L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture, and Sam Charters, M.P.

Official announcement was made at Ottawa today of the appointment of Trevor H. Grout, K.C., of Arnprior, to be Judge of the County Court of Peel. He succeeds Judge B. F. Justin, who, attaining his seventy-fifth birthday last March, became eligible for retirement after serving in that office since 1917. Crown Attorney R. W. Lent, who had not heard of the appointment until spoken to by The Globe Monday night, could not state when the new Judge would assume his duties. Judge Justin, was also unaware of the choice. "I have enjoyed every hour I have been in office," the retiring Judge said.

PEEL MUSICAL FESTIVAL

At a meeting of the Peel Musical Festival Committee on Wednesday, March 23rd, it was decided to change Class 75—Boys' Choir—"Fineen the Rover" to "Own Selection", as there has been difficulty in securing the music. The Syllabus and Entry form may be secured from the Department of Agriculture, Brampton, upon request. There are eighty-two classes in the Syllabus this year. Have you sent in your entry yet? The Committee will be pleased to receive it to-day.

The Peel Musical Festival will be held in St. Paul's S.S. Auditorium, Brampton, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 28th, 29th and 30th. The Syllabus has been enlarged this year making eighty-two classes—fifty-seven of which are Open to Peel County residents. The Festival is only five weeks away. Is your entry in?

Arthur B. Harris

In the death Saturday of Arthur Beveridge Harris, Toronto Township loses one of its oldest and most prominent residents, whose span of 90 years went back to pioneer days, when Peel was still part of York County. The late Mr. Harris was born on the old homestead "Benares," on Feb. 4, 1843, being the fourth son of the late Captain James Beveridge Harris, J.P., who came to Upper Canada after the Rebellion of 1837, with his regiment, the 24th Foot. When the regiment was subsequently ordered to India, Captain Harris sold his Commission and bought the land still owned by the family. His son, Arthur, was brought up and lived his whole life in Clarkson. In 1881 he married Mary, daughter of William Magrath of Erindale, whose father came from the north of Ireland as a missionary under the late Bishop Strachan in the twenties, and settling in what was then known as Springfield-on-the-Credit, which is now Erindale, so named in honor of the pioneer's homeland. Mr. Harris is survived by his widow and two daughters, Mrs. Beverley Sayers and Miss Naomi, both at Clarkson. The funeral took place from "Benares" to St. Peter's Church at Erindale, where the service was in charge of Rev. H. B. Thompson of Niagara-on-the-Lake, rector of St. Peter's for 25 years, assisted by the present incumbent, Rev. S. Banks.

Toronto Constable Returning Fire Of Car Thieves, Kills One

Four Attempt Escape Following Street Chase, One is Captured by Officer, Two Others Make Getaway After Being Bottled Up in Trinity Square —Fatal Shot Hit Lung

Toronto.—Bottled up in Trinity Square after a running gunfight through the downtown section, a quartet of youthful car thieves brought swift death to their ringleader when they attempted to abandon their stolen auto under cover of a volley of revolver fire upon Motorcycle Officer Peter Thornton (680), who had doggedly pursued them in the face of frequent bullets by a tortuous route from College and St. George Streets, Sunday night.

One of the officer's bullets pierced the left shoulder of Albert Heward, age 17, of 618A Shaw Street. P.C. Thornton, with another of the gang handcuffed to his wrist, phoned for the police ambulance, and pending its arrival did what he could to staunch the bleeding from the unconscious boy's wound. Heward died at 8.10, five minutes after reaching St. Michael's Hospital, from hemmorrhage of the left lung.

ONE IS CAPTURED.

All four of the lads had been inmates of the Working Boys' Home, Church and Gould Streets. The other three were Arthur Thurston, age 17, an orphan; Thomas Sheppard, age 18, and Harold Schlunsky, age 19, of Kitchener.

Thurston was captured by P.C. Thornton and was charged with auto theft. The other two were still at large despite an intensive police search. This pair was involved in a car theft several months ago, according to T. Hope Morgan, superintendent of the Working Boys' Home.

The auto in which the quartet attempted to elude the constable was stolen from the curb on Bond Street, a stone's throw from the home, where it had been parked by its owner, Edward Lawranson, of 108 Waverley Rd. Mr. Lawranson was at the Christian Convention service in Massey Hall. Afterwards when the auto was missing he reported the theft. It was not locked, he stated. P.C. Thornton had the license number on his list when he started on his regular nightly rounds at 7 o'clock.

NARROWLY MISS OFFICER.

Officer Thornton picked up the scent on College Street at St. George where, just as he was about to cross the intersection with a great signal, the quartet in their car careened down upon him from the north, missed him narrowly as he wheeled his motorcycle sharply to the left, and tore across into Beverley Street against a red light.

Taking chase immediately as a matter of principle, P.C. Thornton soon perceived by the number that the auto was one of the night's regular grist of thefts. He overhauled them as rapidly as possible and shouted at them to stop. That was at about 7.30 p.m.

P.C. Thornton took his life in his hands time after time when he pulled up alongside the speeding car only to be forced on the sidewalk as his quarry, dodging like a jackrabbit, lurched around corner after corner in a frantic effort to shake him off.

Three times round the parking station of Albert and Bay as the chase got dizzier and dizzier. Then north on Bay. East on Louisa. Sharp to the right and through the archway into Trinity Square. Then a grinding stop with a shriek of brakes as the car came to the fence at the top end of the lane where the turn was too narrow and too sharp to make.

More shots whined past Thornton's ears as he pulled his motorcycle up short. Firing into the air again, and then in the direction of the car as its occupants threw open the doors to make a dash on foot, Thornton hopped off his machine, ran up and grappled with the last of the quartet to get out of the sedan. The captive was quickly overpowered and handcuffed to the constable.

It was then Thornton noticed the victim of his last bullet, lying between one wheel of the car and the fence where he had dropped apparently just as he was about to jump over to safety. He was unconscious and bleeding at the shoulder. Forgetting the other two, Thornton turned his attention to the wounded Heward.

TWO OTHERS SOUGHT.

Up to a late hour last night no trace had been found of the two youths who escaped, Thomas Sheppard and Thomas Schlumsky. Police were told by Thurston, the arrested youth, that Sheppard was driving the car and Schlumsky was beside him on the front seat.

According to the police, all four of the youths had juvenile court records and both Shepherd and Schlumsky had been sent for varying periods to the Victoria Industrial School at Mimico. Since their last release from the school, the two have been living with Thurston at the Working Boys' Home on Gould St.

A SPLENDID BOY.

Albert Heward, the youth who met his death, was "a splendid boy," T. Hope Morgan, superintendent of the Working Boys' Home, 63 Gould St. The youth had stayed there for a year prior to the time of his departure about seven months ago.

Heward's body was identified at the morgue by his mother, Mrs. Lydia Skene, of 618A Shaw St., and a sister, Lillian, aged 20, of the same address.

Motorcycle Officer Thornton is 37 years of age. He was born in Canada and joined the Toronto police force in 1921 after returning from overseas, where he served for four and a half years. He is married and lives at 227 Silverbirch Avenue.

Five Perish in Flinton Fire Father Forced Back By Heat

Napanee—Five persons were burned to death in a combined store and dwelling at Flinton, 50 miles north of here, at 5 o'clock Sunday morning.

The victims are:

Mrs. Almeda Beckworth, aged 82.
Mrs. Marguerite Cassibo, 32.
Raymond Cassibo, 7.
Rudolph Cassibo, 5.
Elmira Cassibo, 2.

Only Leo Cassibo and one of his four children, Ralph, aged 4, of all those asleep when flames engulfed the frame building, espaped with their lives.

From the moment when Mrs. Beckworth, from her tiny bedroom adjoining the shop downstairs, screamed "Fire" up the staircase to her tenants, the Cassibo family, only a few minutes elapsed before the entire building became a huge bonfire and before the choking cries of five persons died in the crackle of the flames.

The very act of Cassibo in rushing downstairs to the rescue of his aged landlady sealed the doom of his own wife and children, for he left open a door at the top of the staircase through which the flames, roaring up the stairs as up a giant flue, belched death into the little apartment above.

Child is Saved

Stumbling, groping and coughing in the smoky heat of the downstairs rooms, Cassibo seized Mrs. Beckworth while his brain fought against suffocation.

Then another cry reached his ears. Little Ralph began to cry "daddy" as his fear mounted in the choking darkness.

Cassibo turned and grasped the little form in his arms. He felt his way to a window, smashed it open—adding new draft to the spreading fire—and dropped the child into the frosty night.

When he tried to go back for Mrs. Beckworth, he was driven back by the heat to the window.

Cassibo tried to dash up the stairs, but was driven back repeatedly. Finally he was forced by the spreading flames to leap through the window, after calling to his wife to throw the children out the upper window and jump after them.

Picking up the whimpering Ralph, Cassibo dashed to the home of the nearest neighbor, Mrs. Champagne. Thrusting Ralph inside and shouting an alarm to the Champagne family, he turned and raced back to his own home.

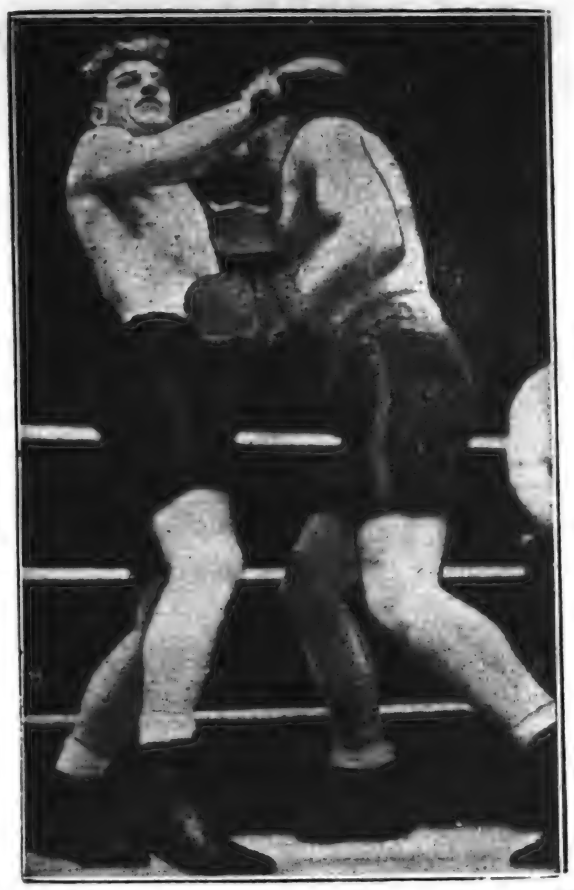
Once more he cried to his wife to leap with the other children, but no voice answered him. It is believed that the mother and little ones were already unconscious or dead.

Walls Crumble

The entire building was by this time becoming engulfed in fire, and soon the frame walls began to crumble in showers of leaping sparks.

Others of the 200 reidents of the little village began to rush to the scene, but could only cluster about the frantic husband and father, watching the structure collapse slowly into a great mass of glowing embers.

A call to Operator James J. Vogan at Northbrook, five miles away, sent appeals for assistance over the countryside, and started Coroner Dr. C. M. Stratton speeding from Napanee, 50 miles away, and Provincial Constable Dan Wagar from Enterprise.



The local physician, Dr. Tindle, was on the scene, but the bodies of some of the victims could be seen in the ruins, burned almost beyond recognition, and it was known that none of the five could be alive.

It was hours before the embers had cooled sufficiently to allow the bodies to be recovered. They could be identified only by the size of the remains, and in the case of Mrs. Beckworth by a scrap of her woollen sweater which lay under the body.

There had been no stoves lighted in the building for 24 hours, it was learned. No insurance was carried, as far as could be ascertained. The loss is set at $4,000.

So satisfied was Coroner Stratton of the accidental nature of the blaze—which he was inclined to attribute to rats chewing matches—that he decided there would be no inquest. He said he would, however, submit a full report to the Attorney-General's Department.

Canadian Dollar Rising Declares U.S. Consul-General

Foreign Trade Balance, Investment Renewals Cited As Reasons—Drop in Sterling Played Part

Toronto.—Certain tendencies in the Canadian situation, particularly in the balance of foreign trade and in international investment, appear to justify the belief that a definite upward trend in exchange may be expected in the near future, according to the report of Emil Sauer, United States Consul-General in Toronto, made to Washington.

He finds "the recent depreciation of the Canadian dollar is not directly attributable to the state of the foreign trade of Canada. Therefore, other factors have influenced the recent course of Canadian exchange, among them Canadian foreign loans and foreign investments in this country."

The sudden drop in Canadian exchange several months ago he attributed to the impact of withdrawals from Canadian banks by United States interests when Great Britain went off the gold standard, speculative short selling of the Canadian dollar in New York, the general confuson occasioned by the European situation and the fact "it was known sufficient gold to cover adverse balances was not available for exportation from Canada," largely owing to restrictive regulations.

Balance to Increase

With reference to the trade balance of Canada, Mr. Sauer says, "It is expected this favorable balance will continue to increase, particularly as a result of the recent Canadian protective tariff and of the probable effects of the adverse foreign exchange rate for Canadian funds upon imports. If the favorable trade balance during 1932 should amount to more than $200,000,000, it might be expected that there will be sufficient balance to meet the obligations on the Canadian debt held abroad. This would tend to relieve pressure on the rate for Canadian exchange."

Noting a decrease of foreign investmen in Canada during 1931, the Consul-General continues, "the trend . . . must be reversed and a substantial increase in such investments effected before it may be expected that Canadian foreign exchange will rise to par. The statistics recently compiled by the Canadian investment houses appear to indicate that American buying of Canadian securities is again on the increase. . . . It may be expected that when stability in the securities markets and in the foreign exchanges is restored, the flow of private capital into Canada for investment will be increased, particularly when it is felt that a return to par of the Canadian dollar would result in added profit to such investment."

Canadian Buying Abroad

The exchange rate was adversely affected also he said, by a demand from Canadian interests and individuals for both English and American funds to purchase securities, mostly Canadian bonds in those two countries, a demand far outweighing any similar demand for Canadian funds to buy Canadian securities.

Canadians also bought heavily in New York to obtain Canadian securities there which were already low owing to a demoralized bond market, and went lower when Canada was affected by England's gold standard action and uneasy Americans began to unload their holdings of Canadian bonds. Both American and Canadian securities were depressed in price by the heavy liquidation of their securities by American banks that failed and by other banks that needed ready cash.

The buying back of Canadian bonds by Canadians and taking by Canadians of the bulk of the $50,000,000 offering of the C.N.R. in New York in September meant a heavy demand for New York money by Canadians without any demand for Canadian funds to balance the drain.

Renewal of Interest

Now that bond prices were better, Mr. Sauer said, there was a renewal of interest by American investors in Canadian securities along with US. offerings and a consequent demand for Canadian funds, thus lowering the discount rate on the Canadian dollar.

The improvement already effected in the exchange situation from Canada's viewpoint was all the more encouraging, he thought, when it was noted that Canada's favorable balance of trade in December last was about $13,000,000 and dropped to slightly over $4,000,000 in January and February.

Another favorable trend, he added, was that heavy absorption of Canadian bond flotations by Canadian interests had used up a large proporton of loanable captal in Canada, and pointed to a lessening of investment by Canadians abroad with the consequent demand for foreign funds.

The Legislature In Brief

The Ontario Budget was carried in the Legislature with another big Government majority. The Hon. E. A. Dunlop, Provincial Treasurer, in tabling his budget, showed it to be a balanced one for the year 1932, together with an estimated surplus of three hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars. Increased taxation, amounting to four million three hundred and ten thousand dollars, coupled with governmental economies and expenditure cuts of four million, six hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars are also shown in the budget.

Increased Taxation

The increases in taxation include: raising the gasoline tax by one cent to six cents a gallon; a tax of ten cents a bottle on all imported liquors and wines and a tax of twenty-five cents a gallon on domestic wine; extension of the amusement tax to include tickets as low as twenty-five cents, and abolition of all exemptions except religious, charitable, patriotic and philanthropic bodies; increased taxes under the Corporation Tax Act, and increased charges for law stamps.

These new taxes are expected to net the following: Corporation tax, two million dollars; amusement tax, two hundred thousand; gas tax, one million three hundred and fifty thousand; liquor taxes, five hundred thousand; wine tax, sixty thousand; and law stamps, a hundred thousand.

Cut in Expenditures

The Hon. Mr. Dunlop announced a cut in governmental expenditures by four million five hundred thousand dollars. Referring to the new gasoline tax, he pointed out that automobile fees in Ontario are lower than any other province in the Dominion and that the present motor vehicle and gasoline tax together are fifteen per cent. short of road maintenance, interest and debt retirement.

The balance sheet shows the assets of the province exceeding liabilities by thirty-one million dollars, while the existing taxation is less than thirty-four per cent. of the total revenue.

There is also to be included two million, five hundred thousand dollars for direct relief, for unemployment, in the expenditures, and if the expenditure under direct relief last year had been eliminated Ontario would have had a surplus of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Having to include the necessary amount for direct relief this year and to secure a balanced budget, it meant that additional revenue to the extent of four million dollars had to be raised.

Liquor Board Not "Robbed"

From the Liquor Control Board, the Government had received ten million dollars, but the profits of the Board had been $1,509,346 less than this figure, the difference being realized from the surplus profits in the hands of the Board. "Any statement, however," said Mr. Dunlop, "that the Government had robbed the Board is entirely erroneous."

Power to declare a moratorium in the case of a municipality in default of payment of its bonds is provided for in the newly-created Ontario Municipal Board under provisions of a bill introduced to the Legislature by Attorney-General Price. The bill merges the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board and the Bureau of Municipal Affairs into one Board. This Board is commissioned to render upon any municipal matter and is empowered to scrutinize the debenture of any municipality and declare a moratorium when a municipality is in default and thus prevent suits against the municipality. The Board may inquire into the affairs upon the request of the municipality itself, or of twenty per cent. of its creditors.

Moratorium Act Explained

The Moratorium Act, where is especially applies to farmers, was explained by a member of the Government in the following way:

"If a farmer has a farm which is valued at fifteen thousand dollars, but to-day only shows a valuation of ten thousand dollars, then this Act will be in operation until such time as the farm realizes its proper valuation."

"The method of procedure is very simple," said this member. "If a farmer requires to use the Moratorium on Mortgages, the Act provides that he will apply personally to a Judge in Chambers and will give all the facts relative to his position and the Judge will decide the merits of his case. This guarantees absolute privacy of the farmer's personal business and, at the same time, prohibits the illegal use of the Moratorium.

Safeguards Taken.

"It will be realized," he said, "that every safeguard has been taken against the misuse of this Act, because anyone wishing to take advantage of the new Act cannot do so unless it has been passed upon by a local Judge."

There was strenuous opposition to the passing of the Budget by the Liberal and Progressive members, but the vote was a straight Party one, the Conservatives lining up solidly behind the measure, while the Liberals and Progressives voted for the Amendment, which resulted in a big majority for the Government.

Our Weekly Scout Law. 1. A Scout's Honor is to be Trusted.

This is the first of the Scout Laws to which every Boy Scout throughout the world has subscribed. What more can be said of a boy or a man than that he is honorable? Shakespeare has said that "My honor is my life!" and it is certain that a boy is not much use without life, and it is equally certain that without a code of honor he cannot use his life to very effective purpose for the uplifting of himself or of his fellow men.

And what does honor mean? According to my dictionary a person who is held in honor is one who is esteemed, respected and upright. And such a person is one who can be trusted, so that when he gives his word on any matter there can be no doubt but what he intends to carry out his promise to the letter.

Thus a Scout is honorable, and may be trusted, because having given his promise to obey the Scout Law, of which this is the first clause, he will follow through to the very end any task which he undertakes "On his honor," and further, being a Scout and trying all the time to obey the Scout Law, he will not make statements which are not true.

Scouts At Famous English Schools

No less than eighty Old Country public schools now have their Boy Scout Troops. The latest additions are Epsom, Mill Hill, Oakham, Oundle, Tonbridge and Westminster. Canadian Scouts on tour after the great 1929 World Jamboree in England were much interested in a Scout notice board in the famous quadrangle at Eton, recording the activities of Eton Scout patrols prior to the summer holidays.

This is another token of the fact that it is generally recognized that the Scout Programme is beneficial to boys of all ranks and classes, and in every station of life.

It should be recollected that the "Public Schools" mentioned here are the old established boarding schools of England, which are attended for the most part by the sons of wealthy parents, who pay high fees for their boys' education at these colleges. They should not be confused or compared with the "public school" as we know it in Canada.

When Does Vind Whistle?

How do trees indicate varying wind velocities? At what wind velocity does dust rise and swirl, and loose paper whirl into the air? At what velocity does wind whistle in the telephone wires? Ask a Boy Scout who has been studying his 1932 Canadian Scout Diary.

Scouts For Hudson' . Bay Co.

Old Country Rovers of several years Scout experience are being sought by the Hudson's Bay Co. for apprenticeship posts in Canada. Ten or more have been in touch with Dominion Scout Headquarters. A recent typical letter from a Scottish Rover tells of two months alon. as cook with his factor on an Ungava island, awaiting the freeze-up, then visits of Eskimos, the making of igloos, hunting seals and trapping foxes. All these young Scout adventurers write cheerily, reflecting the true Scout spirit under conditions that at times must be lonesomely trying.

There are two boys away up in the far north of Ontario, who are working for the Hudson's Bay Company, having come out from Scotland for that purpose, who are on the roll of the Ontario Lone Scout Department. Travelling is so difficult in that country that we do not hear from them very often, but they are trying to carry out their Scout programme loyally away up in that lonely country.

An Emergency Guard of Honor

An interesting inside story of the role played by a Boy Scout Guard of Honour is told by President D. P. Cruikshanks of the Minto Skating Club of Ottawa. The occasion was the last visit of Viscount and Lady Willingdon to the annual skating carnival, the "Minto Follies," accompanied by distinguished members of the diplomatic corps and several provincial lieutenants-governors.

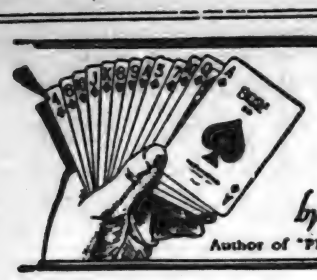
To facilitate the approach of the party to the vice-regal box a strip of carpet had been placed upon the ice. A few minutes before the arrival of the guests the director, on a final tour of inspection, stepped upon the carpet. It slipped under him.

Immediately came visions of a catastrophe—His Excellency or Her Excellency, or the Japanese Consul General, or the U.S. Minister—possibly even the whole distinguished party in a heap on the ice! And even broken bones!

The director thought rapidly.

Smartly uniformed Scouts were scattered about the auditorium on various duties.

Hastily he called them together. Quickly he explained, and placed them at intervals along the carpet, each boy's toes firmly clamping the carpet edge to the ice.



Their Excellencies and guests passed through the erect line of Scouts, smilingly appreciative of the youthful guard of honour—and reached their box in safety.

Boys who are interested in the Lone Scouts may obtain full particulars by writing to the Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay St., Toronto 2.

Portable Plant Developed By German Engineer

Berlin—A miniature electric power plant which one can carry about like a portable typewriter has just been constructed by a Berlin engineer, Herr Georg Muller. It can be used for illuminating a week-end bungalow room or for recharging a radio battery. The most interesting part is the small two-cycle engine which produces one-tenth of a horsepower. Since the smallest magneto on the market would weigh about as much as the whole engine and would probably consume its entire power, and since battery ignition proved too expensive, the engine was fitted with self-ignition. It is said to be the first time that this system has been used in so small an engine. The fuel consumption amounts to only thirty grams of benzine an hour.

Mrs. Saphead rushed into her neighbor's house without troubling to knock. "My dear!" she gasped, "I'm in an awful state. I don't know what to do next!" "Whatever is the matter!" asked the neighbor. "I've just had a terrible warning of approaching death." "Goodness me? What do you mean?" "Well," said Mrs. Saphead, "I bought one of those lifetime fountain pens the other day, and now it's broken!"

How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"

ARTICLE No. 16

There are certain hands on which the best of players will always differ, and it is a lucky thing for Auction and Contract that this is so. It is this very variety of opinion that makes the games interesting. No doubt it is a fine thing to agree about some things, but life woud soon lose its savor if we all were of the same opinion about everything. Arguments are stimulating and keep the interest alive. This is particularly true of Auction and Contract, and the very fact that some hands cause endless discussion and a wide variety of opinion shows why the games are so fascinating. The following hand is a good example. It was recently submitted to the writer as a hand on which no good players seemed to agree as to the proper bid. What do you think?

Y
A B
Z

Hearts—A
Clubs—9, 7, 6, 5, 3, 2
Diamonds—A, 8, 7, 2
Spades—A, 2

No score, rubber game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand at either Auction or Contract? The writer will give his opinion in the next article.

There is one type of hand on which the well-known writers and players of the game still disagree. When partner had bid one no trump and second hand has passed, what type of hand justifies a take-out at either Auction or Contract? If you want to get into an argument, just start a discussion of this subject, and you will probably find as many opinions as there are players. It is the same thing with the writers on Auction and Contract. They all disagree and the result is a wide diversity of opinion. The following hands illustrate the principles of the take-out, both at Auction and Contract, and the writer will give his opinions in the next article.

In the meantime think it over and discuss your opinion with your friends. It is an interesting subject and so far still an open one.

Z

Hearts—10, 9, 5, 2
Clubs—A, K, Q, 7
Diamonds—9, 6, 3
Spades—Q, 6

No score rubber game. Clubs are trumps and Z is playing the hand. A opens the king of diamonds and all follow suit. He then leads the trey of spades. How should Z play the hand so that he can make game no matter how the remaining cards are distributed?

The Daily News In Soviet Russia

By GUNTBER STEIN

German journalist, writing in the "Berliner Tageblatt," Berlin Daily

Every country shows its true face in its newspapers. They reveal its character and its circumstances. What they contain and what they lack, what they emphasize and what they conceal, their prohibitions and liberties, their style and form of treating the news—all these things are not chance creations. They represent, consciously or unconsciously, a portrait of an entire country, a snapshot of a given people at a given time.

I quote here the contents of a popular Moscow evening newspaper, one that is less serious, less scientific, less factual and dry than the big newspapers that sell by the millions and that are read by the intellectual elect. "Moscow in the Evening" is published by the City Soviet. It has four large pages, each of which is divided into seven columns. It contains about one page of advertisements.

It begins with foreign politics, and the world revolution is constantly featured. Here is a three-column headline: "Today the Geneva Gasbags Go into Conference. Geneva Lackeys Prepare to Serve Japan but Express Every Sympathy for China." The dispatch itself consists of a telegram from Paris. Then follow brief, more or less factual reports on the Russo-German economic negotiations, the end of the Indian Round-Table Conference, the crisis in Morocco, secret Fascist organizations in Stockholm. The news columns are broken by an almost unrecognizable picture of the unemployed in New York.

The Russians emphasize with incredible cleverness and incredible success the efforts of separate units and of the whole economic system to put through the Five-Year Plan. An article with two pictures on the first page bears a three-column headline: "The Iron Baker. Bread Factory No. 5 a Brilliant Achievement of the Soviet Union. Engineer Marsakov Is the Organizer of the Triumph." The dispatch is written in a good, sharp style. It relates that German and English manufacturers of machinery had asserted that their methods were the most highly rationalized, but Russia has completely outstripped them by building a bread factory without foreign aid. Not one foreign nail was used. The factory is ready. Nine persons in eight working hours can make 10,000 loaves of bread entirely by machinery.

The second page contains descriptions of daily Soviet affairs. Every other word is relentless self-criticism. One must admit that it is a sign of strength that this expanding, ambitious system permits itself so much candid self-criticism in public.

There is a description of how Moscow has failed to receive its supply of vegetables according to plan. Instead of the 532,574 tons of potatoes that were supposed to have been delivered, the city has received only 326,461 tons. Even the deliveries that are made often go to the wrong place. A "flying patrol brigade" discovers each day dozens of "criminal failures to provide the necessities of life." In one place carrots are rotting; in other places potatoes are freezing.

Under an oval photograph of a tailor measuring clothes is a caption praising Worker Trubnikov, the best worker of the 12th Moscow clothing factory, which completed its full scheduled output for the year six weeks before the year had ended.

"Twelve Thousand Historic Facts.

A New Central Archive Will Be Built in Moscow, Costing Two and a Half Million Rubles." So reads one headline. And here is a typical news item. The housing association of the Krassnia-Pressnia quarter complains bitterly that its members keep talking about progress yet never accomplish anything. Workers' Community House No. 7 has only one light, a single petroleum lamp. In Leontievski Street a community house where 22 people live has only one teakettle. The men in charge of these houses are to blame and must take the responsibility.

Some concrete instances of the daily misfortune of standing in line for necessities are given. At Shop No. 10-35 of the Moskva River Cooperative Society people had to stand for hours in the early morning waiting for vegetable oil and venison. Why? The goods had been delivered the previous evening, but there was no pump for the oil and not enough room on the counter for the deer. "Why should we hurry?" the store manager asked the reporter who was investigating the incident. "We always get rid of all our goods." At Shop No. 232 long lines stand waiting every day. The cashier is industrious but the cash register does not work.

A brilliantly written article describes how a member of the new generation was walking along a street lit by bright arc lights. He was gazing in wonder on a new theatre when he saw the 16th century emerge from a basement window in the form of a rat. There are 2,500,000 rats in Moscow today, almost as many as there are human beings, according to scientific estimates. It is true that Moscow does not hold the record for rats; it has less than Paris, London, and Hamburg; but it has plenty just the same. People have begun to fight bedbugs, though with resolutions more than with chemical formulae. The articles goes on to ask: "Why don't we talk more about the rats, about these relics of yesterday that we inherited from Tsarism and that still make their way into the life of today along with the most modern bread factories, community houses, and educational parks?"

Another headline reads: "The Parcel Did Not Arrive." Here are numerous instances of packages arriving late or not at all. It took 19 days for one package to get from Smolensk to Moscow, and in 1931 alone 110 packages were lost in the Moscow Central Post Office.

The advertising columns begin with the announcements of theatres, concerts, and circuses. Then there is half a column of offers to buy or sell. Naturally, more people want to buy. There are demands for sideboards, typewriters, pianos, chairs cameras, and phonographs. The objects for sale include men's coats, telescopes, writs watches, bear rugs, and an old hotel. A Leningrad cooperative advertises for an unlimited quantity of turnips and cabbage, and the state meat trust wants to buy two motorcycles.

Then come the most urgent demands of all, the demands for dwelling places. "The occupant of a room in Leningrad containing 183 square feet is looking for a room in Moscow," "Will exchange a corridor room for two rooms, paying all costs." "Wanted, a room. Will pay 100 rubles a month." "Will exchange room containing 43 square feet for larger room, paying all costs.' "We need rooms and houses for foreign specialists," announces a trust. "Will exchange five-room country house for one room in Moscow." "Will rent corner of room to student who will educate a boy."

There is also a labor-exchange column whose few items confirm the fact that no real unemployment exists in Russia. "Looking for work as a dog trainer." "Old cook seeks employment in state institution or hospital." "English, German, and French, seven rubles a month." There are jobs offered to stenographers with their own typewriters and jobs in the Caucasus for engineers, mechanics, and so forth.

Such are the contents of a typical number of a popular Moscow newspaper.

Gold of Ancients Found In St. Ives

St. Ives, Eng.—A glitter of gold in the earth of a bank on which he was at work caught the eye of a laborer on Amalveor farm, not far from St. Ives. Search revealed two long twisted ribbons of gold and six nearly complete circlets, also of gold. These latter are thought to have been used as armlets.

Antiquarians think that these gold ornaments probably came from Ireland as it is known that there was much intercourse between Ireland and Cornwall during the Bronze Age.

Worth Watching

A clergyman, obliging a sick friend by preaching for him, was struck by the attention of the congregation. Never once through the sermon did they take their eyes off him.

"What an intelligent lot of people!" he said to the verger, after the service. "Really, I was delighted!"

"Bless 'ee, sir," replied the verger, "we was all waiting to see you disappear!"

"Disappear? What do you mean?"

Well, our old pulpit's got pretty shaky this last month or so, and you're stones heavier than our own parson, sir."

Rheumatism So Bad He Had to Quit Work

Albert Berger Not Bothered Since Relieved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Working Every Day Now.

"I was terribly bothered with a weak back and rheumatism in my shoulders," writes Albert Berger, Wingle, Ont. "It got so bad I had to stop working and stay in the house. I was two weeks in bed, when a friend advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I gave the Pills a fair trial, and they relieved me right away. My back is good and strong now, and I am working every day. I have never been bothered with rheumatism since. I recommend them for anyone suffering from Rheumatism, Lame Back, Sciatica."

Rheumatism and kindred ailments thin the blood very rapidly. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich the blood stream and create new red blood cells, which is the reason they are so successful in combatting such ailments. Equally good for all rundown or nervously exhausted people. Try them. At your druggist's. 50c. 273

Editor—"Did you ever write anything before?"

Authoress—"Oh yes I wrote a confession story once."

Editor—"Did the editor send it back?"

Authoress—"No, he came all the way from New York to Louisville to meet me."

Daughter—"Do fishes really go about in schools, mummy?"

Mother—"Yes, dear."

Daughter — "Well, what happens when the teacher gets caught on a hook?"

Customer—"You made a mistake."

Bank Teller—"We never make mistakes here, sir."

Customer—"Then I'm much obliged for the extra $20."

There is just one thing that can beat a good wife—and that is a bad husband. Our idea of a self centered individual is one who is always thinking of nothing worth while. Then there is the lazy one who waits until some one somes along to push the revolving door for him.

Little Jackie was visiting friends, and his hostess noticed that he was not eating his spinach.

Hostess — "That's good for you, Jackie. You ought to eat it."

Jackie—"No, ma'am. At our house we don't eat ferns."

Farmer John—"How are you getting on keeping bees?"

Farmer Henry—"Very well. We have not had much honey, but the bees have stung my mother-in-law several times."

Lawyer—"Where were you on the afternoon of the 13th?"

Defenant—"With a couple of my friends."

Lawyer—"Scoundrels, probably."

Defendant—"Yes, sir, both of them were lawyers."

Pastor's Wife—"Ah, Mrs. Miles, one-half of the world is ignorant of how the other half lives."

Mrs. Miles—"Not in this village, ma'am."

A lot of honest men get that way through fear of being found out. At least if girls wear longer skirts, men will be able to do a little studying in the library. A fortunate husband is one whose wife has too much horse sense to be a nag. Weather forecast: Thunder showers Friday probably followed by Saturday—Brushville Bugle. The nice thing about dictating letters is that you can use a lot of words you don't know how to spell. The milk of human kindness never burns sour.

Johnny—"Teacher, can anyone be punished for something they didn't do?"

Teacher—"Why, of course not."

Johnny—"Well, I didn't do my arithmetic."

Edith—"So Gertie finally got a break?"

Judith—"Yes, and she's suing for breach of promise."

First Collegian—"How do you like my new skirt now that you've worn it all day?"

Second Collegian—"Oh it's all right, but the cuffs don't take ink very well."

Bill—"Didn't I see you wearing a bathing suit at the fancy dress ball last night?"

Doris—"Gee you must have left awfully early."

Prospecting In Streets Forbidden in Australia

Melbourne, Vic.—Mining is not the only method of searching for gold in Bendigo. Some enterprising treasure-hunters recently found that the dust from a suburban street contained payable gold..

Two young men aroused interest in Eaglehawk a Bendigo suburb when they began vigorously sweeping the surface of Caldwell's Road with hard brooms. They swept the dust into heaps, shoveled it into barrows, and wheeled it away to an old dam, where they tipped it into a "cradle" and shook it till golden specks appeared.

Far from appreciating the fact that the road was being swept beautifully clean, however, the borough authorities sent along a policeman, who seized the brooms, the barrows, and "cradle" and the gold dust on the ground that the sweeping was removing the surface of the road, involving civic expense for repairs.

So now Caldwell's Road will get dusty again, and what remains of its golden treasure will be left undisturbed.

An elderly couple were charged with creating a breach of the peace in their own home. "How did you come to cause this disturbance at your own fireside?" asked the magistrate. "Well, it was like this," replied the old woman. "John and I were sitting at the fire. John was reading his newspaper and I was thinking. Then I turned to him and said: 'John, sheep are awfu' stupid, aren't they?' And John said: 'Yes, my lamb'."

If men were less stupid women would have to be a lot more clever.

"PAINS ALL OVER ME"

Rheumatism Again!

And once again it was the "little daily dose" of Kruschen that conquered it. In fact, it made this sufferer "feel ever so well."

"I have been taking Kruschen Salts because of having pains in the back, head and joints; pains all over me. I felt tired going to bed, tired getting up. I was in a very bad way. I was laid up for over a month, and the doctor who attended me said I was suffering from acute rheumatism, and advised me to take Kruschen Salts. In less than 3 months I felt ever so well. I can't thank you enough for Kruschen Salts."—G. O.

The principle is this: Kruschen Salts drive from your body the uric acid crystals which cause your pain. Your pains ease; knotted joints become loose. Afterwards the "little daily dose" of Kruschen so stimulates the liver and kidneys that your inside is kept clean. Mischievous uric acid does not get the chance to accumulate.

COOKSVILLE

The boarding house of George Mitrovich, on the Dundas Highway, near Cooksville, took the appearance of a Donnybrook Fair, when some fourteen boarders, most of whom are employed in a local brickyard, ran riot during an argument.

According to the police, two of the men, Steve Grgos and Lawrence Horvat, had been invited to join a secret society to which the others belonged, and this precipitated an argument which developed into a free-for-all melee, during which the two prospective members were the victims of a brutal assault.

Grgos was stabbed in the leg and several stitches had to be put in to close the wound by Dr. W. H. Godfrey, of Cooksville. Horvat sustained nasty scalp wounds, which he claimed had been inflicted with a hammer in the hands of one of his companions. Constables Joseph Allen and S. Belfort, who investigated, later preferred charges of assault and doing bodily harm against the proprietor, George Mitrovich, and Phil Riley, who will appear before Magistrate Pallett in the Cooksville Police Court, on Monday. According to the police, the house was in a state of great disorder, and pieces of furniture indicating that a struggle had taken place, were littered in all parts of the main room.

Old English "Sport" of Fox Hunting Endangered

Would England still be England, without its hunting rallies? Is this sport of centuries, the merry chase of elusive foxes, fated to die out?

It is unlikely that there is any feature of English country life so typical of the customs and traditions of the nation, as fox hunting. This being so, a recent statement of the earl of Rosebery, on accepting the mastership of the Whadden chase, that this sport is in a very critical condition, came rather as a surprise. He declared that five neighboring packs are having difficulty in finding masters, and that sportsmen must rally around now, or see fox hunting go the way of hawking. His lordship ascribed the decline to hard times and high taxation.

This might be considered bad news, even for the foxes, for from accounts of this sport that I have read, it would seem that the prey gets as much fun out of eluding the huntsmen, as the latter do in the galloping pursuit. After some of these old wily masters of the craft have learned the business, their chances of becoming a mere brush are comfortably few. Why, there are even some of these old fellows who pay visits to the kennels, if the hunt is not up regularly, to see what is keeping their little playmates! At least that's the story told.—Border Cities Star.

How English Merchant of 1480 Sought Custom

One of the earliest posters ever printed in England is to be seen in the Bodleian library, and concerns a Sarum service book, printed in 1480 by Caxton. It reads as follows: "If it pleases any man spirituel or temporel to bye our pyes of two or three commemoracious of Salisburi Use, emprynted after the form of this prese't letre, whiche ben wel and truly correct, late hym come to Westmonester into the almenestrye at the reed pole, and he shall have them good and chepe." The manner of presentation is somewhat unenterprising. The goods advertised belonged to the Middle ages, which were fast dying. But a new force had been let loose, which in the course of the next century was to revolutionize not only the art of advertising, but the whole of European culture.

Famous English Potter

Josiah Wedgewood was born on July 12, 1730. He was the youngest son of a potter and came of a family of which members had been notable potters in Staffordshire, England. Soon after the death of his father in 1739 he became skilled in the art of shaping pottery on the wheel. In 1753 he became manager of a small pottery. In 1759 he began work on his own account in the Ivy house pottery at Burslem. Salt glaze and green and yellow glaze seem to have been his first staples. However, the fine white English earthenware was just reaching perfection and Wedgewood became one of its best known makers. He presented a service of his ware to Queen Charlotte in 1762 and was appointed potter to the queen and later to the king. He next turned his attention to artistic pottery and reproduced designs based on the later phases of Greek art.

Dog's Warning of Death

While there is a very common superstition that dogs by their wailing can prognosticate death, this cannot be given as a fact, any more than other superstitions. A writer in Chambers' Book of Days, mentioning that the howling of a dog at night under the windows of a sick room is looked upon as a warning of death's being near, adds: "Perhaps there may be some truth in this notion. Everybody knows the peculiar odor which frequently precedes death and it is possible that the acute nose of the dog may perceive this and that it may render him uneasy."

Old Dishes Still Popular

Peacock tongues and humming bird wings may have lost their place on the festive English menu, but medieval dishes still play their part in the true English observance of Lent. In hamlets throughout the shires eating fried peas is a time-honored tradition on Carling Sunday, the fifth in Lent.

Semael cakes are eaten in Shropshire and Herefordshire on Midlent or Mothering Sunday, the fourth Sunday in Lent, and in Westmoreland ayvers or havers are the rule of that day. Pancakes are in order on Shrove Tuesday and on every successive Tuesday during the Lenten season.

What Is Success?

He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often, and loved much; who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration and whose memory a benediction.—Exchange.

Golf and Geography

The scholars of a Pacific coast school have built an ingenious miniature golf course which is at the same time an instructor of geography. The various links represent different parts of the country and their peculiarities which is impressed upon the minds of the players as they make the rounds.

The Aztec Mystery

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

The stage running into Moleville is held up and robbed of a mine payroll by Sonny Holman, who has a habit of robbing the payrolls of the Aztec mine. He explains by saying he is the real owner of the mine. The stage prepares to proceed, bearing the two wounded guards, Tilford, manager of the mine, and a girl passenger who has openly accused Holman of being a murderer as well as a thief.

CHAPTER II.

Jake lowered his hands, bit off a huge chew of tobacco, and climbed down into the road. He bent over the fallen man and felt his breast and then his head, and swore admiringly.

"Hurt much, Pete?" he asked of the other guard. "This here is the neatest crease yuh ever saw. Sonny is a shootin' son of a gun."

"Nope," grunted the second man, working with neckerchief and teeth to bandage his arm and stop the bleeding.

Jake doused the fallen man with water and went to the other's aid. A few minutes later he was muttering angrily as he tested the weight of the boulder in the road. "I wish that feller could hold folks up without gettin' so gay," he said bitterly. "This here's goin' to take work to get by."

Tilford was still motionless in the stagecoach. The girl, her hands clenched tightly, spoke with her voice enforcedly even. "You take this hold-up quite calmly," she observed. "It doesn't seem to bother you."

"We're kinda used to it, ma'am," said the guard. "Y' can't blame Sonny for pluggin' us. We tried right hard to drill him. But he's a pretty good feller, in his way. He don't aim to ruin nobody if he can help it."

The girl shivered. "He said he'd have killed Laurier."

"He's got right good reason to," observed Jake acidly. "Mistuh Tilford, I need yuh aid an' assistance in removin' this here boulder." He paused. "Mistuh Tilford!"

Tilford got out of the stage-coach. There was little or no light, which was perhaps as well for him. His face was a pasty gray. He shoved, at first weakly and then with more strength. The guard who had been creased by Sonny's bullet stirred and moved and managed to sit up, to stare blankly about him.

Together, Tilford and the stage driver toppled the boulder on its side. From that position it was comparatively easy to roll it to the edge of the road and send it tumbling down the mountain side.

The four men climbed into the sledge, the lately-creased man being helped in by Jake. With a cracking of the long whip, the stage took up its interrupted journey. Jake seemed inexplicably cheerful for one with his normally embittered temperament. Presently he observed: "Ma'am, I'm right sorry this here thing happened, but it coulda been a lot worse. Sonny's a irritatin' son of a gun, but he don't never steal for nobody, but the Aztec."

"Why doesn't he claim the mine through the courts?"

"He tried it, ma'am," said Jake. "He ain't got a legal leg to stand on. But though I'll plug him if I get a chance whilst he's holdin' me up, otherwise I'm for him."

"Even to murder?" demanded the girl.

Jake chewed and spat. "That snake Laurier, ma'am, yes," he said in sudden acidness. "Most folks agree with me."

The girl bit her lip. The stage-coach rolled on. It reached the level ground and picked up speed, traveling at a fast trot across the valley bottom on a road that was hock deep in alkali dust.

A little distance out they came upon a pair of cowboys weaving in their saddles on their way back to their ranches with the previous day's mail. Other riders, later and thirstier, were riding in. And suddenly there were lights to right and left and sombrero-ed Mexicans and cowponies in rows against hitching racks, and glaring lamps in saloons and stores and tinny music from the Roaring Zephyr and its saloon and dance-hall competitors.

Moleville was not a large town. It owed its existence first to the freak uncropping of quartz ore that placed the Aztec mine nearly in the centre of the Gila Valley, and second to the large and small ranches that were scattered through the main valley and the tributary canyons that wound into the mountains. Aside from these two sources of trade, it had no reason for existing.

Horsemen reined aside to give the stage roadway, and some waved to Jake Hornaby on the box. The injuries of the two guards were not so obvious as to be noticed from the street, especially since the only lighting came from the welcoming glows of saloons and dance halls.

Jake spoke abruptly. "Ma'am," he said curtly, "there's goin' to be a lot o' fuss when we pull up an' tell 'em that Sonny's held us up again. But you remember what I told yuh. That there Laurier feller that grabbed the Aztec an' druv Sonny on the road, he's a snake, ma'am, a snake! [illegible] be sympathizin' with Sonny an' cussin' out that Laurier yuhself when yuh know the whole story."

He reined in. Mexican handlers came out for the horses. The girl in the stagecoach stood up and stepped out on Tilford's arm. "It's hardly likely," she said coldly to the stage driver. Her face was very pale. "I came to Moleville on account of this particular outlaw. He has practically ruined the Aztec mine. And I happen to be the Laurier, the snake that owns it!"

Jake's jaw dropped. He stared. "Lordy!" he said weakly. "Lordy!" He scratched his head and grinned sheepishly. "Lordy, ma'am," he said at last, "there is sure goin' to be some scrap between you an' him, ma'am, an' it's goin' to be kinda divertin' to watch!"

Jake Hornaby was not alone in considering that it would be diverting to watch the scrap between Sonny Holman and Janet Laurier over the Aztec mine. All of Moleville chuckled at the prospect. Opinion in the town was nearly evenly divided about Sonny, anyhow. Most admitted that he had a moral right to the mine, but not everybody approved of his method of asserting it.

His uncle had been in partnership with another desert rat when they came upon the outcropping of ore that was now the Aztec. They filed upon it in due and proper form. One of the oldsters went to Denver to raise capital. He carried a power of attorney from his partner so he could sign any necessary papers.

But, in those old days, he did not return with good news. Instead, strangers came to the valley to take over the claim. They produced what seemed to be an authentic transfer of the mine to one Laurier, which was certainly signed by the partner of the older Holman. Legally, the document was airtight. But the other desert rat returned breathing fire and slaughter, claimed that his signature had been obtained by fraud and while he was drunk, and in maintaining his claim got shot by a member of the usurping party. He died in the arms of Sonny Holman's uncle, fiercely declaring that he hadn't meant to sell the mine, and left his share to his partner.

The partner, Sonny's uncle, was killed in turn while grimly camped on what he still considered his property. A deputy marshal had been assigned to evict him, but the old prospector's body was found with a .38 rifle bullet in the back, whereas the deputy marshal had fired a .45 revolver from the front; and it had taken a certain amount of effort to smooth over the discrepancy. That had been done. Now the mine was a steady producer. Its levels went down twelve hundred feet. Its own mill concentrated the ore and its own wagons hauled that ore to the railroad twenty miles away. It had become the centre and indeed the reason for the existence of Moleville. And Sonny Holman, as the only heir of old Pete Holman, desert rat and hardrock man, claimed it for his own and set out grimly to wrest it from its legal owners.

There was where the opinion of Moleville abruptly divided into two parts. It was agreed that Sonny had first tried the courts, and had failed ignominiously to make out a case. The original deed transferring the mine was valid on its face, and it was now impossible to prove that it had been signed by a man who did not know what he was doing. Sonny's suit was thrown out of court. And Sonny, instead of instituting other suits and expensive legal processes for which he had no money, strolled out of the court when his case was dismissed, forked a pony, and rode sixty miles before the next daybreak. Then he walked into the office of the mine with a six-gun in each hand and went out again with the month's payroll under his arm.

He had done so. For three years he had collected approximately the net profits of the mine, though by six-gun instead of law. On the whole, Moleville did not consider him unjustified as far as that went. But public opinion split widely and definitely on the subject of ore stealing.

Those who considered that he only robbed payrolls and bullion shipments were more or less in sympathy with him. Those who believed him an ore thief to boot looked on him as no better than any other bandit. And the arrival of Janet Laurier on the whole tended to swing public opinion against him.

The story of her encounter with Sonny lost nothing in the telling. Moleville chuckled; or if Mexican, swore admiringly by variegated saints. And Moleville, too, did some calculating and figured accurately that though she might be the Laurier who owned the mine, she was not the Laurier who had given the two old prospectors a dirty deal fifteen years before. She had been a mere child when that took place.

Cancer of Breast Easily Preventable

Early Attention to Slightest Irrittaion Prevents Future Trouble

Cancer of the breast which begins in an irritation of the nipple, first described by Sir James Paget in England seventy years ago, is rapidly becoming a preventable disease. When first described by Paget and until recently, it was a hopeless form of cancer, because women paid no attention in the beginning to the little itching of the nipple, to its irritation until the nipple had become an ulcer and the cancer cells had invaded the breast and been carried throughout the body, making the disease hopeless. The studies of Paget's disease of the nipple during these seventy years have brought together convincing evidence that cancer may be made a preventable disease by giving people proper instruction how to deal with its simple beginnings. It is a very remarkable tribute to the intelligent foresight of this great surgical pathologist who wrote more than seventy years ago, that if women could be taught and influenced to pay more attention to the beginning of this irritation of the nipple, they could be protected by simpler means than the complete operative removal of the breast. Paget did not live long enough to learn that the disease of the nipple described by him need not be hopeless.

The modern woman under the care of the trained nurse or midwife and the specially trained doctor, knows that any neglected irritation of the nipple is followed by a "caking," painful mastitis of the breast which often ends in abscess. We know now that the incidence of abscess of the breast in women nursing children is less than one per cent., while formerly it was more than twenty per cent. Now women are learning that the neglect of any irritation of the nipple when they are not nursing a child may lead to a cancer of the nipple which can only be cured by a radical operation, or to an involvement of the breast which as yet has never been cured by operation or irradiation.

What a woman should know about the care of her nipples is simple: During the bath the nipples should be washed and dried in the same manner as the skin on any part of the body. But when any tingling or burning is observed, or a redness, or scaling, or weeping or discharge, the nipple or nipples should be immediately specially cleansed with warm water and soap, using cotton, then with alcohol, then covered with vaseline and a piece of gauze fixed in place with adhesive straps. If there is not immediate disappearance of the irritation, the patient should consult her family physician. When the irritation does not disappear in three weeks under the doctor's direction, the family physician should refer the patient to a surgeon specially trained in the recognition and treatment of the earliest stages of cancer and the conditions that precede cancer. It is important that every woman know that in spite of treatment this irritation may not be relieved by this simple treatment. Then the patient will have to go to the hospital and the surgeon, under local anesthesia will remove the nipple with a little bit of surrounding skin and some of the breast beneath. Right in the operating room frozen sections will be made from the nipple and the breast beneath. When no evidence of cancer is found in th microscopic section, the breast is saved. Should there be any evidence or suspicion of cancer, the complete operation must be performed in order to obtain the best assurance of a cure.

Therefore, cancer of the nipple, like cancer of the skin anywhere is fast becoming a preventable disease.

Moist lip to my lip,
Wave, I hear you speak;

That water is freer and purer
Than blood in the vein's troubled mesh;
And I turn on my back to rest,
To lie on your fluid breast.

Bright water and bright blue wave,
I fear your salty kiss—
And I break your dangerous words
With strokes like this—like this—
Till my feet grate on the sand
And I clutch it tight in my hand.

French Women Collect Writings of Own Sex

Paris—"The women of France may not yet have achieved the right to vote, but high achievement lies to their credit in other directions."

This statement is backed by two Parisian women — Mme. Marguerite Durand and Mlle. Marie Louise Bougle—both of whom have collected a mass of literary evidence of the doings of their fellow countrywomen since the earliest days of history.

Mme. Durand has lately placed her collection in the hands of the city of Paris, and the books—historical, political, legal, with some unique volumes of great value—are now lodged in the Town Hall of the Fifth Arrondissement in a library which bears her name.

Hill and Vale

Day by day the man in the vale
Enjoyed his neighbor's hill above,
Day by day the man on the hill
Looked down his neighbor's vale with love.

If either one would see how fair
Was his own home, at any hour,
He, walking up the hill or down,
Enjoyed it from his neighbor's door.

One man to see his own green hill,
These neighbors travelled, to and fro;
One man to see his own reen hill,
And one to see his vale below.
—From "The Collected Poems" of W. H. Davies.

A small girl was entertaining her mother's visitor. "How is your little girl?" she asked. "I am sorry to say, my dear, that I haven't a little girl." 'How is your little boy?" "I haven't a little boy, either." "Then what are yours?"

"THESE HARD TIMES"

"The hard times and scarcity of money makes it more important than ever to economize. One way I save on clothes is by renewing the color of faded or out-of-style dresses, coats, stockings, and underwear. For dyeing, or tinting, I always use Diamond Dyes. They are the most economical ones by far because they never fail to produce results that make you proud. Why, things look better than new when redyed with Diamond Dyes. They never spot, streak, or run. They go on smoothly and evenly, when in the hands of even a ten-year-old child. Another thing, Diamond Dyes never take the life out of cloth or leave it limp as some dyes do. They deserve to be called 'the world's finest dyes'!"

"SICK HEADACHE?"

IT is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Aspirin and heads it off.

Keep Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. In every package of Aspirin tablets are proven directions which cover colds, headaches, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, and even rheumatism.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain. Aspirin is made in Canada.

Sunday School Lesson

April 3. Lesson I—God in Creation—Genesis 1: 1-5, 6-31. Golden Text—In the beginning God Created the heaven and the earth.—Genesis 1:1.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE PRELUDE OF CREATION, vs. 1, 2.

II. THE BEGINNING OF CREATION, vs. 3-5.

III. THE CLIMAX OF CREATION, vs. 26-31.

INTRODUCTION—This chapter stands as the frontispiece to the great historical section of the Old Testament, which extends from Genesis to 2 Kings, and which traces the story of Israel from the earliest times to the exile. It is not by accident that the chapter occupies this position. It is designed to show that God, who presides over the fortunes of men and the destinies of nations, also controls the forces of nature. Since he made the material world, its resources are at his disposal, to fulfil his purpose with men. Thus the aim of the chapter is religious rather than scientific. It comes from a pre-scientific age, and it is obviously unfair to treat it as an authority on questions raised by modern science. The point of paramount importance is that God stands behind the whole movement of the material forces of the world, and expresses himself in them.

I. THE PRELUDE OF CREATION, vs. 1, 2.

V. 1. Nothing could be more impressive than the simple statement that the universe (which the Hebrews called "the heavens and the earth") came into existence, not by blind chance, but by the deliberate purpose and the creative activity of God. There was a time, "in the beginning," when God was, and the world was not. "Behind creation is a Person," says McFadyen. That is the claim of religion, and faith holds stubbornly to that conviction.

V. 2. This verse is a parenthesis, describing the condition of the world prior to creation. Chaos and desolation prevailed. The earth was covered with a welter of raging waters, and all was shrouded with darkness. The sovereign power of God is all the more wonderful in that he quelled this confusion and turned it into an orderly and productive world.

II. THE BEGINNING OF CREATION, vs. 3-5.

Light was the first creation. Before there was light the world was lifeless and chaotic; without light there could be no life and no order. In each instance creation proceeds by God uttering his word, which is immediately fulfilled. His word is the expression of his will; and his will is the one power in all the universe which cannot be frustrated, but gets itself fulfilled. Just as an artist stands aside and looks at his finished work, so God surveys the first dawn of the world's light. He pronounces it "good," that is, for the end it is to serve. A similar pronouncement is made after each creation. Since it comes from God's hands the world, with all its marvels and beauties, is good, and should be so accepted by men. Thus all pessimism and despair is ruled out. The ancients thought that a thing did not really exist until it received its name. Therefore God, as the Creator, rightly claimed the prerogative of bestowing the name upon the light and upon all succeeding creations.

III. THE CLIMAX OF CREATION, vs. 26-31.

The creation of man is described more fully than the preceding acts of creation because he is the crowning work of God. The human personality is to be the greatest feature in the universe; before him the sun and stars pale into insignificance. This being so, God addresses the whole council of heaven (see Job 1: 6) and declares his intention of creating him, saying, "Let us make man." Man's nature is described in its God-ward aspect; he is made in the image of God. Whatever else this means, it refers at least to a resemblance which man bears to God. This implies a capacity for God which the brute creation does not share. Further, the nature of man is described as social, for God created him male and female. The instinct which leads man and woman together to form the family is good, because it has been ordained and blessed by God. Then also the purpose of man in the world is shown. He is to "replenish the earth and subdue it and have dominion" over the animal kingdom and the realm of inanimate things. Here is the original charter of human civilization. Just as man is under God, so the lower creation is under man, who is to be creatively active with God. Thus man is a steward, entrusted with the care of God's earthly estate, and he is so to serve in the world as to bring out its finest possibilities. Finally (vs. 29, 30) God provides sustenance for man and beast alike—for man, grains and fruits and for the beasts, wild grasses. The suggestion is that since man was not yet carniverous, there was, in the golden dawn of the world, a beautiful league of peace between man and the animals. The great thought, however, is that God, who creates, also provides.

Iceland Grant Air Concession Detroit-to-Copenhagen

London.—A recent despatch from Reykjavik, Iceland, said a bill authorizing a concession to the Transamerican Air Line Corporation for air mail and passenger service between Detroit and Copenhagen via Iceland had been passed by parliament.

The bill authorized the corporation to build radio facilities and other concessionaries which would be exempt from income and property taxes as well as import duties on building materials for the first five years.

It was further stipulated the company would pay a five per cent. gross income tax on all air traffic over Iceland.

The concession was to extend for a period of 75 years, and one condition was that for the first 15 years no other American company can be granted a similar concession.

Variety is Keynote Of Spring Fashions

Sport Ensemble Rules During Day — Organdie New Note for Evening

London dress designers decree that spring costumes should be of the utmost simplicity for both day and evening dresses. Dresses are cut on flowing, and in some cases almost classical, lines. They reach to the ground for evening wear and up to ten inches from the ground for day wear.

Day dresses are mostly being shown in light-weight tweeds in plain colors. For evening dresses a new and attractive material known as "Angel-skin Jersey" is much in evidence. This material gives the appearance of heavy silk stockinette. In pursuance of the aim of retaining simplicity, there is little trimming on any of the clothes, and artificial flowers, which last year were considered vital to every fashionable evening dress, are no longer worn.

New For Evening

While organdie is already a qualified favorite for evening, the adoption of printed lawn and pique represents something different. The acceptance of pique for evening is not news.

Sporty Wear

All daytime costumes show a sporty tendency, with the emphasis on knots for country wear, heavy silks for town, bright sweaters an sweater blouse effects.

Wrap Around Suit

The woman whose figure is not qualified for the youthful type suit, the long-coated straight wrap-around suit, with belted waistline, should be a good suggestion. It has, definitely, the approval of smart houses.

Belts

Belts play an important part in the spring fashions right on through the day. Long strips of material make sash-like contrasting belts for daytime wool dresses. Sash belts feature in both beach and lounging pajamas. A twisted girdle of plain material accents a printed crepe or chiffon evening dress. Belts of self-fabric are the rule for the majority of evening dresses. Velvet ribbons encircle the waists of youthful evening frocks. Rhinestone belts enliven dull fabrics.

Patou's Blues

Patou introduces three new blues in his spring collection and calls the shades "midnight," new blue" and "flax blue."

Liberty

This season, instead of being tied down to one color, or two obvious color contrasts, in one outfit you are free to combine two, three, or four subtly differing colors. The results, as seen in practice during the winter, will be delightful or appalling according to the wearer's taste.

The Large Chiffon Handkerchief

The vogue for carrying a large and pretty chiffon handkerchief has a great importance, since it serves to supply the contrasting color note that a frock so often needs.

Handbags

In Paris at the present time the flat satchel shape daytime handbag, with or without handle, remains popular. Rounded envelopes in stitched or embroidered satin or velvet, with rounded handles of pearls are smart for afternoon.

Perfumes

Women are using the lighter type of flower perfume this spring in preference to the more exotic type of scent, according to the statement of a representative of the famous Bond Street perfumery establishment whose carillon is one of the "sound sights" of London.

English garden scents are much in favor, and this applies to all toilet accessories. The newest powder has the delicate intangible perfume of a bouquet of mixed flowers.

New Ringlets

The new coiffures look sufficiently inviting that it won't be long before the sausage roll steals quietly into oblivion. If it weren't for the almost excessive use of brilliantine and nifty lotions, the new hair arrangements might be likened to a blizzard, but it so happens that all the amusing little ringlets are plastered tightly to the head with various hair dressings.

For six months, French girls have been toying with their coiffures in place of changing their appearance with expensive hats and new jewel sets, and now this fancy is striking America. The ringlets should be various lengths to give the modern, sky-scraper, set-back lines to the hair-dress. There should be ringlets near the temples, the ears, the nape of the neck and occasionally on the forehead. Keep the effect well flattened, and change your hair-do for day and evening, or as often as you like. It's a pleasure to report this new item of public entertainment.

Smart Men

Give your husband's clothes the "once over" at this season. Men care too little for dress, and will let themselves go if their wives don't keep them up to the mark. It is the well turned out man who gets the business these days, and a wife shares her husband's business successes—also the spruce looking man is as pleasing as the fashionable turnout of the feminine members of the family.

Client—"Justice is blind."

Lawyer—"Perhaps that's the reason so many of you crooks think you can get away with it."

"I notice your 'usband always has his hair cropped short, Mrs. Thumpa." "Yes—the coward!"

Very stout woman (to friend): "I 'ates goin' out in company, bein' so fat. People laugh at me an' I feel so bloomin' small."

"But are you sure he's highly bred?" "Highly bred! Why, mum, to get the best out of this little dog, your husband will have to wear spats an' a tall hat!"

The World's Fastest Speed Driver

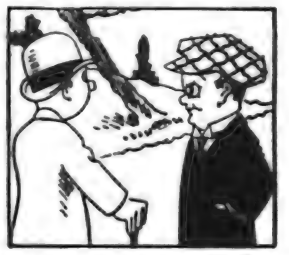
There may be some New York taxi drivers rounding street corners who hold unofficial records, but Sir Malcolm Campbell still has the undisputed title for the fastest traveling over land. Recently at the wheel of his racer on Daytona Beach, he went eight miles an hour faster than he had ever gone before. His speed was nearly 254 miles an hour.

Breaking records has became a Campbell habit. Only seven years ago he held the world's automobile speed record of 156 miles an hour; now he has clipped almost 100 miles from that. And when he touched 206 miles an hour four years ago, it was said that the brain and nerve reactions of man would make it impossible for him to achieve more than 250 miles an hour over the ground.

Sir Malcolm has two apparently incurable ambitions; one is to drive 300 miles an hour, and the other is to seek pirate gold. He has attempted both. He is 47, looks 35, and says he will be driving racing cars when he is 70. He prefers to travel by plane rather than by train. He would rather walk than ride, and he would rather sail a small boat than do either.

The man who drove a mile in less than 13½ seconds has no fondness for being at the wheel of a car in city traffic. The latter is dangerous, he believes. On the other hand, he has not been before a judge for speeding for more than thirty years.

"I was riding down hill on a push bicycle and going 27 miles an hour," he says of that incident. "A brazen cop stopped me at the bottom of the hill. I was not arrested, but only 'had up,' which is the more euphemistic term we have in England for the same thing. They had me up and fined me 30 bob. A man who was 'had up' at the same time for beating his wife got off with a fine of half a crown. From that I deduced that it was safer to beat your wife than to go fast in England."



Nevertheless, Sir Malcolm doesn't beat his wife, and he has gone fast in England. Mechanically he has progressed from bicycle to automobile, to airplane and to automobile again. He was a flier before the war, and in the war, too. A few years ago the idea occurred to him that in all the desert wastes of the Sahara there might be a smooth stretch of hard sand ideal for testing in secrecy his four-wheeled motor projectiles, and this project he abandoned after a venturesome airplane flight.—The N.Y. Times.

The Peace of the World

By Dr. Mary Emma Woolley.

It is not an overstatement that the possibility of world peace hinges upon the important question whether law is to prevail over force. The principle of the sanctity of contract is vital to the new order, and it is unthinkable that the League of Nations should not win out, that the disarmament conference should not succeed in a further achievement based on this principle.

In the winning of success you at home are an important factor. Do not for one instant relax your wholehearted support of your delegation in co-operation with what the delegates of other nations are trying to accomplish. The need of patience and perseverance becomes more apparent as the complexity of the problem grows; but with the realization of this complexity comes increased optimism. The determination of the representatives of the nations that there shall not be war is another good augury. We are thinking peace, not war, and we are determined to succeed.

"I suppose your little girl is quite big enough now to be a good deal of help to her mother?"

"No, she won't be any help to her mother until she can play a better game of contract."

Trade of World Drops 27 Per Cent.

Compared With 1930 and About 41 Per Cent. Compared With 1929

London.—World trade in 1931 decreased by approximately 27 per cent. compared with 1930 and by approximately 41 per cent. compared with 1929, according to figures compiled by the Board of Trade.

With the decrease came increased unemployment, increased bread lines in most countries and decreased dividends by business corporations, all contributing to decrease still further the purchasing power of the masses and to make the hoped-for expansion of trade in 1932 still more difficult.

Imports into Britain decreased by 16.6 per cent. compared with 1930. Exports from Britain decreased by 31.8 per cent.

Imports into the United States declined by 32 per cent. while exports from the United States declined 37 per cent.

Of 16 important countries for which complete details of 1931 trade are available, Australia showed the largest percentage decrease in imports, namely, 54 per cent. This was brought about by the highest tariff walls in the world and by import restrictions and quotas. Australian exports declined by only 17 per cent.

Canadian imports decreased by 38 per cent., while her exports decreased 32 per cent.

German imports decreased 35 per cent., exports only 20 per cent.

Italian imports decreased 33 per cent., exports 17 per cent.

SMALL DECREASES.

Of the 16 countries listed separately Switzerland had the smallest percentage reduction of imports, 12 per cent. The Belgo-Luxemburg economic union had the smallest percentage decrease of exports, 11 per cent.

Compared with 1929 Australia had the largest percentage decrease of imports, namely 70 per cent., the United States being second with a decrease of 52.5 per cent.

British Malaya had the largest percentage decrease in exports, 57 per cent., the United States having the second largest decrease, 53.9 per cent.

The United States, British India, Germany and Czechoslovakia were the only countries of the 16 which had favorable balances of trade for all three years, 1929, 1930 and 1931.

In the case of the United States and India the favorable balances became progressively smaller. Only Germany showed a progressively increasing favorable balance. Her favorable balance was less than £2,000,000 in 1929, more than £80,000,000 in 1930 and more than £140,000,000 in 1931.

Czechoslovakia's favorable balance was greater in 1931 than in 1929, but smaller than in 1930.

Great Britain, France, Japan, Switzerland and Denmark had progressively greater unfavorable balances of trade during the three years.

Italy and The Netherlands had unfavorable balances all three years but they became progressively smaller.

Australia turned an unfavorable balance in 1929 and 1930 into a favorable balance in 1931. British Malaya turned a favorable balance in 1929 to an unfavorable balance in the succeeding two years and Sweden did the same. While Canada did not quite rectify her trade balance in the calendar year, her fiscal year is expected to reveal the former unfavorable balance converted into a favorable one.

Travel Figures Show Heavy Falling Off

Ottawa.—About 5,000,000 motor cars entered Canada from the United States last year, which is 500,000 fewer than in 1930. Nearly two-thirds of these were for a period not exceeding 24 hours, and only 700 were for more than 60 days.

The number of Canadian motor cars going out fell off proportionately to a greater extent, being only 537,000 in 1931, as compared with 747,000 the previous year. Nearly three-quarters of the American motor cars entered Canada by way of Ontario.

GROWING PAINS

A large number of deaths and a great deal of chronic ill-health and incapacity are due to organic heart disease, which in turn, results in a very large percentage of cases, from rheumatic fever in childhood.

Rheumatic fever is always a serious disease. In spite of its apparent mildness in children and the absence of the severe symptoms in cases which occur in older persons, it may and frequently does result in a damaged heart.

When a child becomes acutely ill with fever and one joint after another becomes painful and tender, it is not difficult for parents to recognize the condition as being serious, and they do not hesitate to call their doctor.

Growing pains, however, are seldom taken seriously by parents. The very name given to them suggests that they occur as the result of growth, which is not the case. Growth does not cause pain. Growing pains should not be taken lightly. They are perhaps the most common symptom of the mild form of rheumatic fever.

It does not follow that every child who complains of growing pains has rheumatic fever. These pains may be due to some unusual use of the muscles, such as occurs when the child starts skating or cycling. Ill-fitting shoes will cause pains in the legs, as will also hip-joint disease.

The growing pains of rheumatic fever vary in extent and severity; they may affect both arms and legs; they come on indepently of exercise and exertion; they often keep the child awake for hours at night.

The reason why we wish to bring growing pains to the attention of parents is in order to inform them that they make a serious mistake in not paying attention to the recurring muscle pains popularly known as growing pains. All parents should understand that if such pains are overlooked and treatment neglected, heart disease may result.

Growing pains, St. Vitus' Dance, tonsilitis and rheumatic heart disease often occur in the same child and may be regarded as symptoms of the same disease. Any one of them requires immediate care. Rest gives the heart the best chance, and rest in bed, for a long time, is often necessary.

Heart disease in adult life is a severe handicap. It is true that, if the manner of living is adjusted to the capacity of the injured organ, a useful life is generally possible. If, however, such a handicap is to be avoided and if the number of cases of heart disease is to be decreased, it is necessary that preventive measures be taken early in life. One thing we can do to prevent heart disease is to pay attention to growing pains.

Car Drivers Make Plea for Saint's Protection

The holy Saint Francisca is the patroness of motorists. She was, in the Middle ages, a charitable woman who mitigated many misfortunes. On the Roman forum stands her little church, appearing almost fragile, yet most beautiful, amid the mighty arches and ruins of ancient Rome. Upon her feast day, in March, there come every year hundreds and still more hundreds of automobiles to the square before this little church.

All sorts of cars are there, belonging not only to the wealthy, but to the poor as well. Ambassadors and other government officials are represented. Instead of chauffeurs sitting at the wheel in solemn state, these functionaries and many lovely young ladies, too, drive their own cars to the consecrated spot, where at the altar of Saint Francisca their vehicles may be protected against disaster and misfortune for another year.

Successive services are held in which the guardianship of the saint is invoked, and all the cars driven to the precincts of her altar are blessed and dedicated to her, that she may intercede for their owners and drivers, and guard them from peril and accident during the year to come, and very appropriately at the season of the year when motor traveling is most prevalent. Certainly these ceremonies have a deep and solemn significance, occurring as they do in the very center of what was anciently a pagan Rome!—Berliner Tageblatt.

Life's Prime, the Years Between Youth and Age

At what age is the average man or woman in his or her prime of life? is often asked, and what is the average length of life?

The prime of life, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is the period of full vigor and power, that which succeeds youth and precedes age.

The average length of life in the United States, according to estimates made by the United States public health service, is fifty-six years. Statistics indicating the expectation of life place Australia at the head of the list with an average length of sixty-one years. New Zealand comes second, with an average expectation of sixty years. The average expectation of life at birth in various countries, according to the United States bureau of the census, is as follows: Denmark, Norway and Sweden, fifty-seven years; England, fifty-three years; Holland, fifty-two; Switzerland, fifty-one; France, fifty; Germany, forty-six; Japan, forty-four and India, twenty-three. Statistics also show that females have a greater expectation of life at birth than males.

England's Earthquake Year

About one hundred and seventy years ago England experienced the first of a series of severe earthquakes, which created great alarm. The first shock was very distinct, the second still more severe, and a crazy soldier scared many folk almost out of their wits by predicting that the third, which he timed for April 6, would totally destroy London. On April 5, tens of thousands of all ranks quitted the metropolis, and many who remained were afraid to go to bed, but spent the night in the streets. The prophecy proved false, of course, but further shocks were felt in various parts of the country in the spring and summer of that year, and some held the prophet justified—with some error of date and locality—by the awful earthquake which shortly after destroyed Lisbon.

Should Appeal to Tourists

The Baltic republics of Lithuania, Latvia, Esthonia and Finland, formed from territories of the old Russian empire as a result of the World war, offer the tourist a region of great interest and beauty for exploration. Scenes of natural splendor abound along the winding coastlines and amid the dense northern forests of all these countries and about the vast and innumerable lakes of Finland. What is not generally known is that each of these peoples boasts of long centuries of independent civilizations and that in many of the cities relics of unspoiled and charming medieval beauty remain.

Coffee Production

The regions best adapted to the production of coffee are those between the parallels 15 degrees north and 15 degrees south latitude and from 1,000 to 4,000 feet above sea level. It is cultivated from latitude 25 degrees north to 30 degrees south in places where the temperature does not fall below 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Moist and somewhat shady slopes are found most desirable. Little streams of water are conducted to the roots of trees which are kept very wet until the fruit is nearly ripe, then the water is turned off to keep the fruit from becoming too succulent.

Area Taken From Mexico

The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, February 2, 1848, conveyed to the United States the territory which has since become the states of California, Nevada and Utah, part of Colorado, and the largest parts of New Mexico and Arizona. Previous to that time, this territory belonged to Mexico. Five years later, the United States purchased from Mexico about 45,000 square miles of southern Arizona for $10,000,000. Since this treaty, Mexico has remained approximately the same size as it is at present.

OBITUARY

A gust of wind, blowing shut his garage door, is blamed for the death of Howard Orr, Trafalgar Township Councillor. He was found dead, beside his car, several hours after being overcome with carbon monoxide fumes.

Mr. Orr, who lived on the Trafalgar Town Line, drove to Oakville in the morning, returned, ran his car into the garage, and is believed to have been tinkering with the generator when the doors blew shut and the deadly fumes filled the air.

When he did not return home for lunch his wife telephoned several places and became alarmed at his continued absence. At 3 o'clock he was found, with a screwdriver clutched in one hand.

Mr. Orr a prominent figure in township affairs, was in his 39th year. He was serving his second term as councillor. Born in Clarkson, he had spent all his life in the surrounding district. He was a past master of Mississauga Lodge A.F. & A.M., and a member of the Royal Arch Chapter at Port Credit and the Scottish Rite in Toronto. He was also a director of the Clarkson Fruit Growers Co-operative Association. He attended the Clarkson Community Church.

Besides his widow, formerly Adella Leach, Mr. Orr is survived by two children, Wanda, aged 14, and Rheta, aged 9, his father E. A. Orr, of Clarkson one sister, Mary Orr, Montreal, and five brothers, Fred, Hugh and Stewart, of Clarkson, John of Bronte and Donald of Oakville.

The funeral of Howard Orr was held Saturday afternoon under Masonic auspices, from his home on the Trafalgar Town Line, a very large number of Masons attending to pay their last respects to the memory of him, who was beloved by all.

An old friend, Harry Pattinson, and his five brothers were the pallbearers. The floral tributes, which were very numerous, were a token of the great respect in which he was held by a large circle of friends. The service of the United Church was in charge of Rev. Robert Spencer, and the Masonic service was held at the grave. The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in the district.

Mrs. C. Blackburn

Mrs. C. Blackburn, resident of Toronto for 44 years, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. C. Scott, 416 St. Clarens Ave., in her 93rd year. Descendant of Scottish-Irish pioneer settlers of Peel County, she was born at Grahamsville. She was a member of St. Margaret's Anglican Church and later of St. George's church, John St.

Returned to Mimico

Arrested at Malton, the two boys who escaped from the Victoria industrial school, Mimico, yesterday, were returned to the school by Chief of Police Holley early to-day. The boys made their escape by breaking a window in their dormitory and climbing down the fire escape.

PORT CREDIT

Word has been received here that Humane Society certificates have been granted three Port Credit youths, Sam Joyce, Billy Clancy and Kenneth Trotter, all members of the Port Credit Troop of Boy Scouts.

The awards are unique in that they are awarded to three boys of the same age, 12 years, and all for feats of lifesaving that occurred on the same day, March 12th, when several boys slipped off the ice rimming the banks of the Credit River.

Arrangements are being made to have the certificates presented at a public gathering. With these awards, Port Credit will have six certificates to its credit within a space of two years. Last year, Kenneth Cross and Bert Peer received certificates, and the year before, Captain L. Hare.

OBITUARY

Late Mr. A. S. Dick

The Rev. Dr. Calderwood officiated at the "In Memoriam" service held in Newton Church, last Sunday morning for Mr. Alexander S. Dick, Hallside, who died a few days previous. Dr. Calderwood preached from I. Cor. XV. 57, and there was a large attendance of elders from the parent church at Kirkhill. In his concluding remarks, the reverend gentleman said, "This thought that death dispels all weariness, all pain, must be of peculiar comfort as we think to-day of Alexander Scott Dick. He indeed had to pass through the valley of tribulation. His illness was a long and particularly painful and trying one, but it was borne with a Christian fortitude and courage for which to-day we can give God thanks. Never during those months of suffering did a murmur escape his lips. He was always bright, always cheerful, always a happy smile for all who came to see him. And that was characteristic of the man in all his dealings as an office-bearer in the church. His disposition was naturally optimistic, and he had the happy knack of imparting that hopeful spirit to those with whom he worked. Interested in all the activities of this church and indeed of the parish generally he was especially interested in all musical matters. The choir and anything in the way of a junior musical association or children's kinderspiel always had his enthusiastic support. Painstaking and thorough in all his work, we shall miss much the willing service which he rendered. He was always agreeable, always kindly, and in any conflict of opinion he was always on the side of peace. During all my years of association with him as parish minister I can honestly say that I never received anything but the heartiest co-operation and helpfulness. We can thank God upon every remembrance of him, and we extend to his widow, his children and his grandchildren alike, our deepest sympathy, rejoicing with them that he has won the victory and entered into rest.—The Advertiser, Cambuslang, England.

The subject of the foregoing obituary notice was the father of Mr. Dick, of Streetsville, who is the only one of the family living in Canada. There are two other brothers and three sisters living in the Old Country.

COMMUNITY CLUB

The club met at the home of Mrs. Will. Leslie, March 30, with a good number of members present. The business part was hurried through so as to give more time to our speaker, Miss H. Graydon, who told us a great deal of conditions in the north and her experience as a nurse there. She explained symptoms of common diseases and how to treat them, and many other useful things every mother should know. The afternoon came to an end all too soon, the hostess then served the club lunch assisted by her mother and Mrs. Jack Miller.

The next meeting will be at Mrs. N. McCracken's, April 13, at two-thirty. Please bring your needle and thimble and those who have quilt blocks out bring them to this meeting as we have planned to finish the quilt. A worthwhile programme is being arranged.

LET US SMILE

Check!

Son in college was applying pressure for more money from home. "I cannot understand why you call yourself a kind father," he wrote, "when you haven't sent me a check in three weeks. What kind of kindness do you call that?"

The father replied: "Dear son—That's unremitting kindness."—Capper's.

Voice of the Press

Canada, The Empire and The World at Large

CANADA

Toronto's Bond Triumph

Canada, as well as Toronto, has reason for congratulation over the absorption of the city's new $15,299,000 loan in less than two hours. The success of the dotation indicates a healthy state of Toronto finance, and it also suggests a degree of returning confidence which should be beneficial to the business community.

Since it became impracticable last autumn to enter the New York market for money, Canada has witnessed the disposal of several important bond issues at home, and, while it has been feared the saturation point might soon be reached, there seems no danger on that score as yet.—The Globe (Toronto).

Forest Preservation

Having returned from a three months' tour of the chief European countries Mr. Frank J. D. Barnjum is more than ever convinced of the serious world shortage of wood. He thinks that the British Empire, notwithstanding its immense natural resources of other kinds, is weak in this respect, and he makes the following suggestion:

"Our governments could not make a wiser or more necessary move than to purchase and conserve as a reserve, every acre of forest within the Empire than can be obtained at a reasonable figure. The present time is the best and last opportunity that will occur to purchase forest lands at a moderate price. Owing to the depression, land containing mature timber can be purchased in Canada today for a trifling advance over the cost of planting young seedlings. Control of a majority of the remaining available wooded areas, with the enormously advancing values which are bound very shortly to occur, would give the Empire greater prestige than control of the gold supply, for no amount of gold can replace forests within the lifetime of two generations, nor can few thousands of acres of our remaining big trees in 15 generations."—The Mail & Empire (Toronto).

The Industrialization of Canada

Le Devoir, Montreal (Ind.): Recent official statistics show that the industrialization of our provinces is continuing. Throughout the country more than 53 per cent. of our population dives in the towns. In Ontario 61 per cent of the population lives in the urban centres. In our province the proportion is 63 per cent., as against 56 per cent. in 1921. This means that practically two-thirds of our people live in towns like Montreal —where more than a third of the population of the province resides—Quebec, Verdun, Three Rivers, Hull, Saint Hyacine, etc. Practically a third of the population remains on the land. Such a state of affairs from all points of view is unsatisfactory; the movement toward the towns, if it has declined since the beginning of the economic crisis, is still far from being stopped. Undoubtedly with modern methods of agricultural production and with the evolution of crops, there is not the same need for laborers on the land as there used to be, but here is still a complete world to develop and populate, that of the new territories and colonization regions.

Back to the Land

Le Droit, Ottawa (Ind.): If the back to the land movement has been many times proposed as a remedy for unemployment, it goes without saying that the opening of new lands and the clearing of them, with the establishment of farmers or the sons of farmers in new countries, would be no less efficacious. This is the work that follows on colonization.

The Imperial Conference

Toronto Star (Ind. Lib.): It is to be hoped that some workable plan of closer trade co-operation between Canada and Great Britain may emerge from the conference at Ottawa during the coming summer, but no matter what the conference may decide upon one may feel assured Canada will continue to exercise control of her own fiscal policy and will continue to advance as she can as an industrial nation—utilizing her own raw materials as much as possible.

The Western Viewpoint

Saskatoon Star-Phoenix (Lib.): The prairie provinces have a vital interest in the Empire Economic Conference this year at Ottawa. The bulk of Canadian exports to Britain have always been from the west: wheat, livestock and farm products. It is on the shipments abroad of these commodities that Canada's prosperity largely rests and the prosperity of Western Canada depends on them almost exclusively.

THE EMPIRE

True Nobility

Recently a Salvation Army band played beneath the windows of Buckingham Palace, and subsequent incidents revealed the kindly and intensely human character of the Royal Family. The Queen sent out a request that the musicians play her favorite hymn, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," while his Majesty requested "King of Kings" and "Silver Threads Among the Gold." Then the leader of the band was invited into the palace and introduced to members of the family circle.

Nothing wonderful about this, may be the comment of the supercilious critic of all such human incidents. But there is. Here are the hereditary rulers of a vast Empire, asking, not for the latest in popular music, but for the old hymns and a song that has been familiar for more than a generation.—The Globe (Toronto).

Ireland and the Empire

London Morning Post (Cons.): If the Irish are to be driven out of their Imperial heritage by their countrymen in Southern Ireland it will be their great loss and misfortune. They cannot well have it both ways. If they are citizens of a Republic, they cannot at the same time be British subjects. Their loss, we fear, in these hard times will be looked upon as gain by many of our native British now out of employment. It is altogether a very complicated and regrettable position. If the severance comes, both countries will suffer heavily thereby: but it seems to us that the Irish will suffer much more heavily on balance even than the British, since they will thenceforth be aliens in a country and Empire which they have long regarded as their home from home.

The "Defence" of Paris

Manchester Guardian (Lib.): The authorities of Paris are preparing elaborate plans for the defence of the city against aerial bombardment. The French public is never left for long without some reminder of the "imminent" danger of attack from Russia or Italy, or Germany. The real danger, unless provoked by France herself, must, in the present state of the world, be extremely slight. It may perhaps still be the duty of the War Department, or the new Ministry for National Defence, to envisage it and to guard against it. But this constant harping in public on the likelihood of France's being attacked is not calculated to increase that feeling of security which the French Government professes so earnestly to desire.

OTHER OPINIONS

The Prince's Popularity

Brooklyn Eagle: But what the Prince of Wales calls his "debt" to the press is due to the press of the whole world. Does his horse throw him, as any man's horse might? Sympathy is stilled by newspaper stories from Melbourne to Paris. Does he plan to teach his nephews the manly art of self-defence? South Africa and Canada and the United States get all the details. Does he issue a fervent appeal to British patriotism? The appeal, textually printed, reaches all readers of the English language. Commonly he shows rare common sense in what he says and what he does. Publicity never hurts him.

The Silver Lining

Boston Christian Science Monitor: The ten-year deflation of agriculture has resulted in losses running into the billions. Some estimates run as high as $40,000,000,000. On the face of it, one would assume that recovery must be painfully slow. That does not necessarily follow. A great industrial concern which had its capital depleted to that extent would have to face the task of replacing a large part of that depleted capital out of future earnings. Agriculture, although a great industry, is an industry of small owners, and to a considerable extent of changing owners. The greater part of the billions lost in the agricultural deflation has been charged off. It is the loss of the savings of the older generation and of holders of farm mortgages. Those losses will not have to be recouped before agriculture can recover. Most of them are gone and never will be replaced. Agriculture is more completely liquidated than any other industry, and, with the coming of better times, its recovery will be correspondingly rapid.

Effective Antidote for Gas In Warfare Discovered

London. — A remarkable scientific discovery which may have a profound effect on modern chemical warfare, was reported by the Sunday Express, which also indicated that the discoverer of the secret may have died a martyr to his work.

The newspaper said the chemical defence research department of the war office had discovered an effective antidote for all gases used in modern warfare. The department had been experimenting for 14 years in an effort to achieve such a formula.

Military volunteers risked their lives by walking in areas filled with deadly gases, the newspaper said. They were affected by the gases but recovered immediately from the effects when the antidote was applied.

Major W. R. Cawley, who died March 6, was the chief expert conducting the experiments. The Express said he died without realizing the success which had been achieved, and that his death, which was said to have been due to pneumonia, may have been a result of gas poisoning.

WITH THE LONE SCOUTS

Free Trees For the Asking!

The Lone Scouts of Ontario have recently co-operated with the Ontario Forestry Branch of the Provincial Government in posting signs in prominent places throughout the province announcing to farmers and other interested person how they may secure a large number of trees free of charge, for reforestation work, from the Forestry Branch.

The boys arranged hikes, armed with the cards, a hammer and tacks, and posted these announcements in prominent places.

Every year, around May 24th, some 200 Boy Scouts attend a special Forestry Camp at Angus, Ontario, where they are taught the rudiments of Forestry by Government Officials, and where they help to lay out plantations which will be the foundation of a large Boy Scout Forest. Already some of the trees, planted several years ago, are growing into large proportions. This camp is very popular, and only costs the boy his transportation to Angus and it may be that some Lones would like to attend this year. If so, let Headquarters know as soon as possible, so that arrangements can be made to include you.

English Scouts May Visit Canada

A project is afoot among Birmingham Scouts and Rovers to organize a special troop and visit Canada this summer. If the plan materializes the troop will leave Liverpool in July and spend some fifteen days in Canada.

Lone Scout Summer Camp

There has been quite a lot of interest shown in the proposed Lone Scout Camp, and this opportunity for Lones to get together and work and play under the supervision of experienced Scout leaders should not be missed. Similar camps were organized very successfully in 1929 and 1930, and if there is sufficient encouragement to carry the matter through, the camp will probably be held at Ebor Park, near Brantford, Ont., during the first two weeks of July. The cost for the two weeks will probably be ten dollars, and the Scout will have to provide his own transportation to and from the camp.

Any Lone Scout interested should communicate at once with Headquarters, and start saving his nickels now!

Boys Aid Firemen in Dominion Contest

Hamilton, Ont., Scouts are credited by Fire Chief James with helping his department win the 1930-31 Dominion Fire Prevention contest, Class 1, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce Shield. The Scouts systematically inspected alleys and back streets and reported fire hazards.

World Courts and Boy Scouts

That Scouting offered a great lesson in neighborliness, and that he would rather fasten his hopes for world peace on the Scout Movement than on world courts, was the declaration of the Hon. W. G. Martin, Provincial Minister of Public Welfare, at the annual meeting of the Boy Scouts Association of Ontario.

This Week's Scout Law—No. 2

A Scout is loyal to the King, his country, his officers, his parents, his employers and to those under him.

Loyalty is one of the foundations of good citizenship. No organization of any sort, from a Government downwards, can be successfully operated unless it's members are loyal. To be loyal means to adopt certain principles and to stick to them when you know they are right. Loyalty is a bulwark thrown up against Life's temptations.

Therefore a Scout is Loyal to his country, that he may help to make it a better place to live in; to the Scout Organization that he may get the best out of it; to his Parents, who have worked and sacrificed for him, thus obeying the 5th commandment, which says "Honor Thy Father and Mother"; to his employer, that he may obtain the best results from his labor; and to those over whom he has control, that they in turn may honor and be loyal to him.

Lone Scout Dog Show

In a recent issue of "On Lone Scout Trails" particulars were given of a Lone Scout Dog Show." This, in fact, is theoretical, as the boys cannot bring their dogs to any central spot for judging, but they are required to write an essay and send pictures of their dogs, from which the judging was done. The winning essays will be published in this column at a later date.

Membership in the Lone Scouts is open to boys from 12 to 18 years of Age, inclusive, who are not able to join a Regular Boy Scout Troop. It is particularly designed to give boys who live on Rural Routes, or in small villages, an opportunity to take advantage of the Scout Programme.

For full particulars, write to The Lone Scout Department, Boy Scouts Association, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2. —Lone E.

Spain Adds 7,000 Schools Since Fall of Monarchy

Madrid — Fernando de los Rios, Minister of Education, told the National Assembly that Spain's educational system had been greatly modernized and expanded under the republic.

He said 7,000 schools have been built since the establishment of the republic last April, as compared to the monarchy's average of 500 annually. He eulogized universities of the United States. Alumni associations, like that of Yale, he said, greatly furthered the progress of higher education.

Palestine Immigrants Admitted Under More Liberal Category

Jerusalem. — A new immigration category for middle class settlers seeking admission to Palestine has been announced.

Farmers, merchants and industrialists would be admitted in the new category if they can show they have a capital of $2500. The present classification of settlers will not be affected.

Chile Seeks Use for Lumber

Santiago, Chile—Proposals are being considered by commercial organizations in Chile to use wooden boxes instead of sacks as containers for merchandise. Supporters of the idea say that the use of wooden boxes would furnish employment to 20,000 men and would consume 11,000,000 feet of Chilean lumber yearly. All sacks are imported at present.

Deterioration of Stored U.S. Wheat May Remove Dumping Threat

Ontario Elevator Officials Taking Steps to Avert Warm Weather Menace for 18,000,000 Bushels Stored in Province—Grain in South Reported Hard Hit

Toronto.—That nature may be the cause of a bright future for the world wheat situation was voiced by Ken. W. MacTaggart, Mail and Empire staff writer, on Saturday. He writes:

Fate of Surplus

Is this huge surplus—variously estimated at between 175,000,000 and 200,000,000 bushels—going to be wiped out as a menace and its deadening effects upon world wheat prices ended because of a natural process of life?

The present condition of millions of bushels of this wheat, now stored in Canadian elevators at Ontario lake ports, and the efforts being made to preserve it, lead to the propounding of these questions, particularly with the steady approach of the greatest menace to wheat storage, warm weather.

In November, 1930, the Stabilization Corporation was created in the United States, financed with public funds, to purchase surplus wheat supplies, hold them for future sale, bolster or steady declining wheat prices and thus benefit United States grain growers. With purchases suspended early in 1931, the corporation to-day holds the amassed natural surplus of steadily ageing wheat, stored in elevators all through the United States and in Canadian ports.

During this time this wheat has faced all the dangers which threaten wheat storage and to-day is worth less than was paid for it in addition to cost of storage and treatment averaging about 18 cents a bushel.

But what of the wheat itself which had become the fear inspiring storm cloud on the horizon? Would it despite the assurances of the corporation that it would not sell more than a monthly average of 5,000,000 bushels, be suddenly dumped on the market? And, if it were, would it find buyers with Argentine Spring wheat soon reaching Europe? Most of all, could it be sold?

Rumors had developed steadily that it was "losing condition." News reports recorded explosions in two elevators in Kansas where much of it is stored. General comment held that it was being subject to rigorous treatment to keep ahead of the ravages of weevil, the infinitesimal "bug" which will destroy bin or elevator of wheat like wildfire.

The colder Canadian climate admittedly was more favorable for the storage of any wheat as weevil cannot live in a temperature below 60 degrees. Reports that Minnesota, Kansas and other United States sections were fighting weevil and finding the fighting difficult was existent. Was the fight being waged in Canadian elevators?

There is something over 18,000,000 bushels of grain board holdings in 17 Canadian elevators, 11 of which are in Ontario. Of this, according to the last report of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, about 11,000,000 bushels are in Georgian Bay ports distributed between Midland, Owen Sound, Collingwood and Port McNicoll. The remainder is distributed among Depot Harbor, Goderich, Sarnia, Prescott, Toronto and Kingston elevators.

"To start at the beginning, all U.S. wheat is subject to attack from weevil. The weevil is in it when it comes from the field. It only needs heat to start it hatching and eating.

"This does not affect the saleability of the wheat as long as the weevil is controlled and removed from the wheat. This is done by turning it. The wheat is poured in a steady stream through a current of cold air which chills it and at the same time blows the lighter materials—dust and husks left by the weevil—aside. But if the wheat is dirty, both the weevil and the dirt tend to increase the temperature.

Treated For Weevil

Thus, it appeared, Canadian ports held approximately 18,000,000 bushels of the corporation wheat which was more or less being treated for weevil. In other words, the Canadian ports hold a three and one-half months' supply of the corporation's wheat based upon its pledge that it would not sell more than an average of 5,000,000 bushels a month. This, it was pointed out, could be sold all at once, however, and still be forced to "average up" with months a year from now or could be converted by trading for futures and releasing it to private grain dealers.

"The solution seems to be the American consumer," declared one wheat man. "This wheat is getting older all the time, some of it being 1928 and 1929 wheat. It is now in the position of being ready for sale if it could be bought right where it is now. But how about delivery of it in Europe after loading into bottoms, transportation interval and distribution on its arrival? Would it make the grade then?

"I doubt if it could be dumped even if the corporation did decide on such drastic action," he continued. "Indication is that the board is being forced to unload or face terrific losses. The only place it could unload would be at home and find markets which could consume it while it is in reasonably good condition."

Bad Attacks of Flu

E. M. Ward Finds Wonderful Pick-Me-Up in Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Brings Wonderful Vitality.

"I have had attacks of the 'flu' frequently since 1919, and sometimes very bad attacks, but always when on the road to recovery I take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I find them a wonderful pick-me-up."

So writes E. M. Ward, Saskatoon, Sask., who further states: "I would recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all sufferers from that rundown, listless feeling. I have taken the Pills on many occasions, and they seem to tone up my blood wonderfully. I have been anaemic for years, and find that, when I get rundown, after taking several boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the color comes back to my cheeks and I have wonderful vitality."

Ice Dikes Proposed To Reclaim Isles

Engineer Claims Cost and Time Reduced by Freezing Method

Berlin—A scheme for constructing ams, breakwaters, levees and dikes with ice, at a fraction of the usual building cost and in much shorter time, has been advanced by Dr. A. Gerke, engineer, of Waldenburg, Silesia. He says his method also offers greater possibilities for quick temporary repairs of present structures.

Dr. Gerke's scheme is simple. He would run a network of ammonia pipes across the stream, or into the water which he wished to divert, and fill them with a freezing mixture, forming an ice block of the required dimensions and form. The method is not altogether new. It has been used in mining in various forms for sixty years, being applied to shut off flooded veins, or to close crevices, which could then be bored through to reach the pay-dirt otherwise shut off by water.

But Dr. Gerke proposes much wider possibilities. By use of a series of his ammonia-pipe networks he believes it would be possible to strengthen weak points along the levees of a river during high water, on short notice. Sea dikes and breakwaters could be frozen at strategic points at little cost, while the series of small islands on Germany's north coast could be joined and thousands of acres of land behind the new ice walls could be reclaimed, he declares.

Finally, Dr. Gerke believes his scheme would be much more practicable for construction of floating islands in the sea for trans-Atlantic airplane hangers, than the America proposal for steel islands. He especially emphasized the cheapness and quickness of repairing an ice dam as compared to steel, cement or stone structure.

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, tosses and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made specially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a young infant to relieve colic. Yet it is as effective for older children. Castoria's regulative help will bring relaxed comfort and restful sleep to your baby. Keep a bottle on hand. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Calcium Cyanide for Groundhogs

The Groundhog is an expensive pest, causing considerable damage to meadow land and grain fields. A teaspoonful of Calcium Cyanide placed well down in a Groundhog hole, will generate a deadly gas, that puts any Groundhogs that are within reach to sleep forever. After the Calcium Cyanide is placed in the hole, the upper end is plugged with sod and soil to keep the gas in, and to keep other animals out. All the Groundhog holes in the district should be treated, as these animals migrate from place to place, digging new hole where ever their fancy takes them. Every Groundhog hole means an unsightly hole in the meadow, with stones and sub soil thrown up in such a way as to cause damage to implements during haying and harvest. Give them their dose of Calcium Cyanide in early May, when the holes are easy to find, and the new crop of Groundhogs is not yet in sight.

Box packing of apples is making headway in Quebec province, and it is reported that 30,000 boxes of McIntosh and Fameuse were put up by the growers last fall.

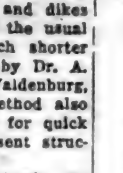
How to play Bridge AUCTION and CONTRACT

by Wynne Ferguson

Author of "PRACTICAL AUCTION BRIDGE"



ARTICLE No. 17

The other night a friend of mine asked me: "What's the best way to learn how to play a good game of Auction or Contract?" and I replied: "Learn to profit by your mistakes." That's the secret of improvement and the only one that is of any value. No matter how much a teacher may tell you or how many books you read you will never improve your game unless you learn by your mistakes. Don't make the same mistake twice and you will soon become a fine player. The ones who make the same mistakes over and over again are the hopeless players. Don't be afraid to ask questions. If you do something wrong, ask some good player what you should have done. Write to the editor and, if your question is one of general interest, it will be published in these articles.

The following hands represent problems of bidding that have confused readers of these articles and are now given as a test of your knowledge of bidding. If your analyses agree with those given below, you are a pretty good bidder. If they do not, compare your analyses with the writer's and try to find out your mistakes.

Solutions to Last Week's Problems

Hand No. 1

Hearts—A
Clubs—9, 7, 6, 5, 3, 2
Diamonds—A, 8, 7, 2
Spades—A, 2

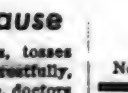
No score, rubber game. What should Z, as dealer, bid with the foregoing hand?

Solution: At Auction with this hand Z should bid one club. The hand contains three aces and, therefore, proper values for a sound no trump; but the distribution is bad for that bid. The six-card club suit, even without top honors, offers the best attacking bid of the hand and so must be the best bid. The only other possible bid with this hand is one diamond an that is doubtful because of the shortness of the suit and its weakness in top honors.

At Contract, the hand should be passed, despite the three aces. Partner will try for game with a fair hand and the weakness in the club suit, if bid, may cause disaster. The penalties, when one is vulnerable, are too heavy to justify bidding this type of hand.

Hand No. 2

Hearts—J, 10, 8, 3, 2
Clubs—J, 7, 3
Diamonds—9,5
Spades—K, 6, 5



No score, first game. Z dealt, bid one no trump and A passed. What should Y now bid with the foregoing hand either at Auction or at Contract?

Solution: Y should pass either at Auction or at Contract. This hand is a fine example of the type of hand containing a five-card major suit that does not justify a take-out.

Hand No. 3

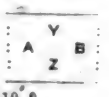
Hearts—8, 2
Clubs—J, 9, 8, 2
Diamonds—10, 2
Spades—A, 7, 6, 5, 2

No score, rubber game. Z dealt, bid one no trump and A passed. What should Y now bid with the foregoing hand?

Solution: At Auction, Y should bid two spades. It is just over the requirements, as Hand No. 2 is slightly under them, to justify a take-out of partner's no trump. The fact that the hand contains two doubletons is really the deciding factor.

At Contract the hand should be passed. The hand does not justify any further bidding by partner, and he should not be encouraged to try for game by a two-spade bid.

Hand No. 4

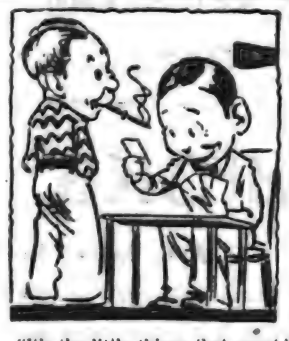


Hearts—A, Q, 4
Clubs—J, 10, 9, 4, 3, 2
Diamonds—7
Spades—A, 4

Hearts—10, 9, 5, 2
Clubs—A, K, Q, 7
Diamonds—9, 6, 3
Spades—Q, 6

No score, rubber game. Clubs are trumps and Z is playing the hand. A opens the king of diamonds and all follow suit. He then leads the trey of spades. How should Z play the hand so that he can make game no matter how the remaining cards are distributed?

Solution: This hand is a problem in "stripping," that is, taking out all suits except two and then throwing opponents in the lead. When this has been done, one opponent is forced to lead the remaining plain suit to his disadvantage or one of the two missing plain suits and thus allow one hand to trump and the other to discard. At trick No. 2 Z should win the trick in Y's hand with the ace of spades and lead a low club, winning in his own hand with the queen. Z should then lead the six of diamonds and trump in Y's hand with the ten of clubs. Y should then lead a low club and win in Z's hand with the king. The lead of Z's last diamond should be trumped in Y's hand with the nine of clubs. The lead of the ace king of hearts to determine the distribution of that suit should now be made, followed by a low club, which Z will win with the ace. The cards now held by Z and Y are as follows:



Hearts—Q, 4
Clubs—J
Diamonds—none
Spades—

Hearts—10, 9
Clubs—7
Diamonds—none
Spades—Q

Z should now lead the queen of spades. This trick must be won by A or B depending on the location of the king. Suppose Z wins the trick. If he leads a heart, Z can let the heart run up to his nine spot, if A has shown up with four hearts. If neither A nor B has four hearts, they must drop. If A leads a diamond or a spade, Z can trump in one hand and discard a heart in the other.

Suppose B wins the trick with the king of spades. He also must lead a heart and, if he originally held four hearts, Z must win two heart tricks. If B leads a diamond or spade, he gives Z a discard of a heart in one hand and a trump in the other. Therefore, Y Z must make game in clubs for it has been shown that A B can only win one diamond and one spade trick, irrespective of the distribution of the remaining cards.

"It's the little things that count."

"Right you are; a small ace will take a big fat king."

Quit Yer Kickin'

Stop yer kickin' 'bout the times,
Get a hustle on you,
Skirmish 'round and grab the dimes
If the dollars shun you;
Croakin' never bought a dress
Growlin' isn't in it,
Fix yer peepers on success,
Then go in and win it;
Times is gettin' good again,
Try to help them all you kin.

Stop yer kickin', get a hold
Of the wheel and turn it,
You can never handle gold
'Less you try to earn it;
Brush the cobwebs from yer eyes,
Stop yer dern repinin',
And you'll notice that yer skies
Allus'll be shinin';
If you hain't the nerve to try,
Sneak away somewhere and die.

Apparently no girl of to-day plans to remain married long enough to "get into a rut," or let any man become a positive habit with her.

Clarence — "They've lovely mushrooms in this hotel. What do you say we get some?"

Agnes May—"Don't bother. We can use the parlor when we get home."

Too many people think themselves broad-minded when they are merely too lazy to form an opinion. No one loves a quitter, but the acquitters seem to be fairly popular. Much may be forgiven the man who pays his bills. A movie star was married the other night for only the second time. A man is not necessarily in love when he tumbles for a girl, but when he falls so hard he can't stop going, that's the test.

Hungarian Vinters Feed Wine to Country Pigs

Budapest.—Nothing speaks more eloquently of the hard fate that has this year befallen the Hungarian wine industry than the fact that in several parts of the country pigs are being fed on wine of good quality. It is reported that his improves the appetite of pigs and the vineyard owners prefer to give their stocks of wine to the porkers rather than sell it at the ridiculous price of ¾ cent a liter. They hope to recover the expense of tilling their vineyards from pork and bacon. The vineyard owner to make a profit must obtain at least 20 cents a liter for his wine.

Of the eight million inhabitants of Hungary, at least 600,000 are vineyard owners, and this hitherto prosperous class is on the verge of bankruptcy.

EXCESS acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick corrective is an alkali which neutralizes acid. The best corrective is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.

One spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume in acid. Harmless, and tasteless, and yet its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, once you learn how quickly this method acts. Be sure to get the genuine.

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

WESTON

Most Rev. J. Fielding Sweeney, Archbishop, of Toronto, attended his first public reception as Metropolitan of Ontario on Friday night, when he officiated at the dedication of a memorial cross at St. John's Anglican church, Weston, and presided at a confirmation service. The cross over the edifice has been erected by Philip Dunn, of Weston, as a memorial to his father, the late Rev. H. E. Dunn, of Upton, England. The services were in charge of the Rector, Rev. W. E. Mackey.

The second son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Dunn (Sidney) was confirmed on this occasion.

GEORGE BEAMISH

(Sept. 16, 1854—March 22, 1932)

After an illness of only four days following a stroke, Mr. George Beamish, a highly respected Toronto citizen, passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. R. Stuart, 21 Sumach St. Deceased was the third son of the late Francis and Margaret Slater Beamish, and was born in Toronto where he spent most of his life. For a great many years he was employed by the City of Toronto in connection with the Corporation Stables, and being a lover of horses, and a good judge of horse-flesh, his services were greatly appreciated by the city hall officials who always drove fine horses. He was retired on pension only three years ago. His wife predeceased him four years ago, and he is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Stewart of Toronto and Mrs. Morrison of Green Bay, Wisconsin, and one son, George of Detroit. Surviving also are two brothers, Samuel and Thomas Beamish, and one sister, Mrs. Adams, residing in Toronto. The funeral took place on Good Friday afternoon, the services being conducted at the house and the grave-side in St. James' Cemetery by Rev. H. R. Widdows of Little Trinity Anglican Church of which Mr. Beamish was a faithful member. This was followed by the impressive burial service of the Loyal Orange Order. Mr. and Mrs. A. Beamish of Erindale, Mr. J. H. Beamish and Mrs. H. G. Hill of Islington and Mrs. H. Rowntree of Toronto were in attendance at the funeral. Deceased was a brother of the late Francis Beamish of Erindale.

Spoke to Masons

Masonic Notes

At the regular meeting of River Park Lodge, Tuesday evening, degree work was exemplified in a very able manner by the Past Masters of the lodge, with Very Wor. Bro. E. E. King presiding. This lodge was organized in 1877, with the late Robert Barber as its first master. There are still living 25 of its Pastmasters.

At the banquet which followed the business meeting, an interesting program of toasts was proposed and responded to as follows: The King—God Save the King; Grand Lodge—Proposed by C. H. Pegg, responded to by H. W. Gerhart; The Visitors—Proposed by W. G. Cooke, responded to by Messrs. Gilford and Hackett; The Candidate—Proposed by H. W. Hope, responded to by Ray Nerdon; The Pastmasters—Proposed by J. W. Drennan, responded to by Wm. Couse.

The speaker of the evening was Mr. W. M. Mounfield, Registrar of the College of Art, Toronto. He was introduced by Rev. G. H. Purchase, an old friend, and gave a delightful address in a jocular manner, which kept those present laughing from beginning to end.

As an innovation, Hec. Graydon's novelty orchestra entertained very pleasantly and Graydon Clipperton favoured with a solo.

LORD AND LADY BADEN-POWELL

Two thousand Girl Guides and Boy Scouts attended a service in Worcester Cathedral in celebration of the birthdays of Lord and Lady Baden Powell, who recently enjoyed their seventy-fifth and forty-third birthday respectively. "Through all the seasons and in all weathers I have been sleeping in the open and I have no intention of being driven indoors now."

Lord Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout, and hero of Mafeking, made this statement at his beautiful home, Pax Hill, Bentley, when we were discussing his practice of sleeping out at the age of 75.

"I never feel better or happier than when I live as close as possible to the earth," he said.

"It is a good sign that the young people of today are rediscovering for England the virtues of fresh air.

"Hiking, camping, and studying nature are doing big things for them and the country.

"If people must live in houses, let us have them built with flat roofs and sun-kissed balconies instead of on the lines of the modern villa which excludes the sunshine and the cleansing winds."

On May 18th, the 31st anniversary of the Relief of Mafeking, Lord Baden-Powell will give a luncheon to distinguished military men at Pax Hill.

LAKEVIEW

Defying dense clouds of smoke and tongues of flame, Mrs. Thomas Brannon, of Orchard Avenue, Lakeview, was responsible for the rescue of her husband and four children and two other occupants of the home, when she noticed the cottage ablaze early this morning. Awakened by the smell of smoke and the crackling of timber, she immediately roused her husband, who is a disabled soldier, and dashed to the other rooms, to make sure that all the occupants were warned of the danger. One by one she brought her children to safety, with the aid of neighbours who had come to give assistance, and all were out of the building within a few minutes.

James Haley, 20, and Alex. Campbell, 18, who, along with the family, shared the cottage, risked their lives in an attempt to save the pet canary, Campbell sustaining a deep cut on his arm as he attempted to enter through a broken window.

Handicapped by the absence of a water supply, the Port Credit Fire Brigade were helpless, but with the aid of chemicals they succeeded in saving the home of George Patterson, a neighbour, where sparks had ignited the roof.

Shower

Mrs. J. Switzer, assisted by Mrs. Cecil Dowling, entertained about thirty-five friends at her home on Monday night, at a shower for Miss Mar Hisey. The house was decorated with vases of yellow daffodils. The chair for the bride-to-be was beautifully decorated in white and pink and surrounded by white and pink streamers with a white bell overhead.

The Misses Vera and Marion Steen, Marion Stephens, May Munroe and Marg. Switzer, assisted in opening the many beautiful gifts. Mrs. W. Atkinson acted as secretary.

A dainty lunch was served at which Mrs. W. S. English poured tea. A very happy evening was enjoyed by all.

No, He Wasn't Telling That One to the Wife

"I can match that one," said the man who owns a dog to the man with a new baby at home.

"Impossible!" said the man with the new baby. He had just offered, as an illustration of the intelligence of infants, the story of how a baby, picked up and walked with at 11:03 p. m., will demand with wails to be picked up and walked with the next night at 11:03 p. m. And the next.

"Well," said the man who owns a dog, "when our Maggie had puppies, I was doing night work. Came in at 3 a. m. Maggie and her puppies were sound asleep in their basket at that hour, but one night when I wasn't sleepy I turned on the light in the kitchen, dumped them all out on the floor and played with them for a while. The next night I did the same thing. And the next.

"The night after that I came home tired, I walked right through to the bedroom, undressed and got into bed, and you should have heard the yelps that went up from that kitchen. Every one of those puppies spent the next 15 minutes noisily reproaching me for my neglect. They woke up the wife, they woke up the neighbors. They made the darndest fuss. The next night I ignored them again, but they woke up and yelped at 3 a. m., just the same. It took three nights of ignoring them to break the habit."

"You don't say," said the man with the new baby, looking thoughtful. "Well, I wouldn't dare tell that one to my wife."—New York Sun.

Turkish Capital Famed for Its Many Mosques

As the tourist gets his first view of Istanbul from the deck of an approaching ship, he is more aware of the mosques than of anything else, says an article in a Boston paper. Their domes, and the slender minarets which rise near them, give Istanbul a real distinction which many great cities lack. Not even Cairo has mosques which show up so astonishingly against the skyline. They are almost numberless, but there are a dozen that are really tremendous in size. They occupy commanding sites, so that the domes and minarets rise above the surrounding roofs. They give Istanbul, from a distance, an aspect of wonderful dignity and grandeur mingled with the charm of the Orient.

Of these mosques, the most renowned is St. Sophia, one of the most glorious buildings in the world. It was built as a Christian church and dedicated in the year 538. The minarets at the four outside corners were added by the Turks when they converted the structure into a mosque. From the outside, St. Sophia is apt to seem a little disappointing, but within it is hardly surpassed anywhere in architectural merit. It would be hard to find another great nave so light and so graceful.—Detroit News.

Mother Earth's Age

The earth is 2,000,000,000 years old, according to the estimate of Prof. Dr. Otto Hahn, director of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute at Berlin. The noted physicist bases his calculations on the quantity of lead to be found on the surface of the earth.

"The progress made recently in the study of radio-active substances and the disintegration of the atom enables us to fix the age of the world with fair accuracy," the professor told an audience of German scientists. "Uranium and thorium, contained in certain minerals, are converted, in the course of millions of years, into radium, and finally into uranium lead and thorium lead. The lead findings help us to determine the age of the earth at 2,000,000,000 years."

Old Story Disproved

There is an often repeated story credited to the historian, Harvey Rice, that Moses Cleaveland's exploring and surveying party started up the Chagrin river, mistaking it for the Cuyahoga, and that upon discovering the error Cleaveland gave it this name as representative of the state of his feelings.

It appears, however, that this story has little foundation, for on maps made before the Revolution the river was called the Chagrin. The name is no doubt from an Indian word given as "Shagrin" or "Shaguin" and said to mean "clear." One map issued in 1755 calls it the Elk river.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Spinster's" Derivation

Spinster means one who works at the spinning wheel. In the olden days the work of making cloth for clothing was a part of the household duties and fell to the younger women to spin the yarn. As the prepossessing and marriageable girls had their minds on their fellows, the job usually became the responsibility of those who had had their chance and lost. So a spinster came to mean any unmarried woman, and is still today the legal phrase in England for any woman who has never been married.

Mine Rescue School

To train rescue crews in mine accidents a factory in Berlin, Germany, has opened a school where invasion of gas-infested chambers and the carrying of men to safety are taught. Experiments are made under varying conditions, different types of gas masks being worn by the operators and dummies are rescued from rooms filled with poisonous vapors.

Here and There

There are over 450 miles of motor highways, 100 miles of roads, 2,492 miles of trails and 1,100 miles of telephone lines in the twenty national parks of Canada, which cover an area of over 13,800 square miles in different parts of the Dominion.

San Francisco was en fete recently when the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain arrived there from Honolulu for a two day stay on her 128-day winter cruise of world ports. About 80 additional passengers joined the ship at San Francisco and another fifty at Los Angeles for the last lap of her voyage through the Panama Canal to New York.

"The Mineral Position of the British Empire" is the suggestive title of a paper by Dr. Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, which will be the leading topic for discussion at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7. This same topic will provoke much discussion at the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference.

Belief that economic conditions were gradually improving and that the forthcoming Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa would be one of the big historical events in the development of the Dominion, was expressed by Senator Gideon Robertson, former Minister of Labor, who sailed on S.S. Montcalm from Halifax recently as Canada's chief delegate to the 16th annual conference of the International Labor organization at Geneva.

Canada's rapid change from an exporter of raw minerals to an exporter of finished and semi-finished products will be well set forth at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7. A number of important papers will describe the new smelters and refineries that have effected this change.

With five steamers in service between Port McNicoll and the head of the Lakes during the coming season, the Canadian Pacific Railway announces that they will now accept shipments of freight at eastern points destined to points in western Canada, via Port McNicoll, Ont., and their lake and rail route subject to delay at Port McNicoll pending the first sailing.

Changes in the management of Maritime Province summer hotels of the Canadian Pacific Railway will shortly become official. Joseph A. Cashman who managed the Lakeside Inn, Yarmouth, N.S., and is at present in charge of the Place Viger Hotel in Montreal, will become manager of the Algonquin Hotel, St. Andrews, N.B., and he will be succeeded in the management of the Lakeside Inn by Jeremiah Daley, Jr., now chief clerk at the Cornwallis Inn, Kentville, N.S.

Among deeds of heroism at sea, the rescue of the 27 men of the salvage ship Reindeer by volunteer seamen of the S.S. Montcalm recently will rank high. Ably seconded by Captain Rothwell who steered the Montcalm to make a lea for the lifeboat, and with very heavy seas running, the men under Second Officer Knight put through "as pretty a piece of work as one could wish to see," was the comment of J. G. Ross, of Moose Jaw, former M.P. for that city, who was a passenger and witnessed the rescue from start to finish. (831)

The Aztec Mystrey

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

The Moleville stage is held up and robbed of a mine payroll by Sonny Holman, who has a habit of robbing the payrolls of the Aztec mine, declaring he is the real owner of the mine and that what he cannot win through the courts he will take by force.

The stage proceeds toward Moleville again, bearing the two wounded guards, Tilford, manager of the mine, and a girl passenger who later reveals herself as Janet Laurier, owner of the Aztec.

CHAPTER III.

Tilford took Janet to the sheriff, who received her expansively in his dusty office. There were ancient "Wanted" bills on the walls, some ornate Mexican spurs in one corner, an olla doing duty as a water cooler, and close by the sheriff's rifle in its saddle holster there were capacious canteens and a plaited horsehair rope, to be coiled around one's blanket at night as supposed insurance against overfriendly rattlers.

Janet received his welcome with a trace of suspicion, as if she had been warned against too complete an acceptance of his friendship. She explained her mission gravely.

The sheriff's forehead puckered. "Sonny's right hard to get hold of, ma'am," he told her. "He's got a lotta friends. A li'l while ago—a year or so now—feelin' was right high against him. Somebody was usin' his name an' way of workin' to pull some mighty dirty tricks. Held up a coupla stores an' shot a Mexican or so besides. The whole country was after Sonny then. But Sonny he went ridin' over Arizona way an' he came back with his own half-brother. An' he made that there half-brother confess to the whole thing, ma'am, an' that hombre was glad to get to the pen where Sonny couldn't land on him no more. Folks was kinda ashamed of suspectin' Sonny after that, an' they're extra friendly to him to make up for it."

"But he is a lawbreaker," insisted Janet coolly. "He is an outlaw and a thief."

"I'll admit the lawbreakin', ma'am," agreed the sheriff. "I'm just sayin' he's got a lot o' friends, an' he brung back a hoss from Arizona, name of Gunpowder, that's a lot o' help in gettin' away. I'm tryin' to explain that he's right hard to catch."

"It's no use beating about the bush," said Janet coolly. "My family has been unfortunate lately. The income from the mine is important to us. This man is the cause of our loss of it. So I will give a thousand dollars reward for his arrest."

The sheriff fingered his chin meditatively. "I wish you'd hold off on that a while, ma'am," he said slowly. "There's a lot of folks think Sonny is stealin' ore. He ain't. He's doin' his durndest to stop it. He figures those ore thieves are stealin' from him, feelin' as he does that the mine is his. Sonny, he's workin' on a right promisin' clue just now."

Janet's chin set firmly. "You're in communication with him?" she asked curtly.

The sheriff smiled faintly. "Not exac'ly, ma'am," he denied gently. "If I knew where to fin' Sonny I'd have to arrest him. But once or twice he's called me up on the phone an' talked things over with me. He's helped me out considerable, now an' then."

"And you follow his advice in trying to catch the ore thieves?" Scorn undiluted was in Janet's tone.

"Why, yes, ma'am," said the sheriff mildly. "I know Sonny right well. I've known him since he was knee high to a grasshopper."

"But he's the ore thief himself!" said Janet crisply. "I wish to offer a reward for him. If you won't try to catch him——"

"Did Mistuh Tilford say I didn't try to catch him?" asked the sheriff softly.

Tilford squirmed uneasily. Janet glanced at him and bit her lip. "No. It's my own idea," she retorted defiantly. "It's clear enough. If you won't try to uphold law and order—"

"Excuse me, ma'am," said the sheriff very politely. "I was sayin' I'd like to hold up that reward offer a while, because it looks like Sonny is right on the trail of that there ore stealin' gang. An' ma'am, that gang has killed a coupla Mexicans that it didn't need to, an' it's carried off a coupla Mexican girls."

"You mean that Holman is a wanton murderer and a kidnapper as well as a thief!" said Janet fiercely. "I offer a thousand dollars reward for his arrest. Will you post that, or shall I?"

"I'll spread the news, ma'am," said the sheriff quietly.

"Dead or alive!" added Tilford.

The sheriff gazed at him with eyes that went through to the wall beyond. "I rek'n," he observed, "that's up to Miss Laurier."

"I'm taking Mr. Tilford's advice," she said coldly. "You may include that in the offer."

The sheriff frowned. "All right, ma'am," he said soberly. "I'll say that you'll pay a thousan' dollars for Sonny Holman, dead or alive. Delivered to you, ma'am?"

She flushed, and then went quite pale. "As you like. He'd kill me if I were a man. Perhaps he will try to do so anyhow. I have to use what weapons I can."

The sheriff stood up. "I see the way you feel, ma'am. I' been tryin' to catch Sonny, an' I'm goin' to keep on tryin'. But I promise you, ma'am, that if I as the sheriff, catch Sonny Holman, as an outlaw, you won't have to pay out no reward."

Janet's cheeks were pink as she rode through the dusty little town back toward the mine. Occasional lounging figures doffed sombreros. Once a half-breed Mexican grinned familiarly at Tilford as he made Janet a sweeping bow. Tilford gave the man a furious glance, but ignored him otherwise.

They came to the mine, a huge bulk of buildings rearing upward from the plain. The adobe dwellings of the workers, who were mostly Mexicans, crowded close up to the enclosing fence on one side, but on the other the valley swept clear away to the foothills with the mountains beyond. Tiny specks could be seen here and there, which took thought to recognize as horsemen, and a long way off a cloud of rolling dust bespoke a herd of cattle on the move. They would be driven over the stage road to Leftover and the cattle pens of the siding.

Buzzards wheeled lazily, high aloft. Baking heat swept in from the valley floor in waves. Except for the muffled clanking and rumbling of the machinery in the shaft house, however, there was no sound at all. Moleville was somnolently still beneath the noonday sun.

Janet reined in but did not dismount.

"You see what I'm up against," said Tilford uneasily. "Even the sheriff was finding excuses for Holman."

"I saw that," said the girl briefly. She looked far away, toward the mountains. She swung around to him again. "Some time ago," she said evenly, "you urged that we hire some guards, white men. I gathered that they were to be gunfighters."

"Yes." Tilford was at first nervous, then eager. "I know of half a dozen men I can get. Good men with a gun."

"Hired murderers," said Janet coldly. "They'll sell their services to the highest bidder, I suppose."

"Not exactly," said Tilford uneasily, "but they would—er—"

"Hire them," commanded Janet coldly. "One outlaw terrorizing the whole county, from what you tell me. I am going to fight fire with fire. I've got to get the mine on a paying basis." Her tone had changed oddly on the last sentence. She bit her lip, and when she spoke again her voice was again level. "Hire them, please. You have my authority."

She wheeled her mount and rode away, to the little bungalow that had been built for Tilford as resident superintendent, and which she had preempted for her own use during her stay. She dismounted and went inside, her lips held tightly together. But when the door had closed behind her she caught her breath and clenched her fists as if fighting back tears.

"I—I—" She stopped and exclaimed irrelevantly, "I won't cry! I won't!"

Then, womanlike, she did. But presently she found pen and paper and went to the small desk Tilford had used. She began to write a letter, and if her expression at times belied the optimistic words she was writing, she wrote on cheerfully nevertheless.

Dear Father,

Everything looks much better, now that I'm on the spot. I just had a talk with the sheriff and he's anxious to co-operate with me. He hinted that a reward would make people more anxious to help him, so I have offered one of a thousand dollars. Mr. Tilford seems very capable and courageous, but handicapped by insufficient authority. With me to back him up now, I feel sure that everything will go along nicely.

She wrote on, an optimistic note with absolutely no word of the holdup of the day before, or of her encounter with the highwayman. (It was just the sort of letter to encourage a badly worried or frightened man in desperate need of hope. The letter did not contain a word that was not hopeful—or a detail that was completely true.

King George's New Cairn Terrier

King George's recent acquisition of a dog, to replace the one which died a year ago, relieves the royal parrot of the responsibility of being the only pet in the royal household.

The new puppy, like his predecessor, is a Cairn terrier and is six months old. Like Snip, he immediately became devoted to the King, although he is reported to be somewhat stand-offish toward all others in the palace. Snip, it will be remembered, was inconsolable when his royal master was ill in 1928 and stood a twenty-four hour watch daily outside the monarch's bedroom door.

Snip's death in April, last year, left Charlotte, the wise and gray old parrot, as the King's only house pet, although the royal stables boast a number of excellent race-horses.

Outside the animal pets of the household there is, however, one other who offers further proof of King George's amiability. This is the Princess Elizabeth, to whom, it is whispered, his Majesty is just "grandpa."

Garden Chats

Early spring is the proper time to set out most new shrubbery, roses, ornamental and fruit trees, climbing vines and other things purchased to make the grounds about the house attractive. These should be bought from the nearest reputable source of supply so that they may be planted as soon as possible. In planning this part of the garden it is important to secure plants that are suitable to Canadian conditions and if satisfactory results are to be secured it is essential that good stock is bought. One will find a wide range of prices quoted, just as in any other line, but here again as always, good plants, well grown, hardy and true to name cannot be sold at the lowest figure. Unless the plant is in prime condition, with plenty of green bark, moist pliable roots and large live buds, it will have little chance, and if it lives at all a whole year will be lost in getting it started. After all, the actual cost of the nursery material is a mere bagatelle compared with the satisfaction which may be achieved. On arrival of the new plants, they should be planted immediately in moist soil, but if this is not possible, dig a shallow trench and "heel in" by covering roots firmly with soil. All shrubs, rose bushes, trees, and vines should have tops pruned back and they should be set in permanent quarters a trie deeper than they were planted in the nursery bed. Give the roots plenty of room, spreading them loosely about the hole, then cover with good garden soil, throw in a pail of water, fill in the remainder of the hole and press soil down firmly. In the case of trees and such single stem plants as lilacs, provide some support against the wind in the form of a stout stake and tie with soft twine or raffia. If the soil is poor it is a good thing to add some good garden loam and also an occasional application of commercial fertilizer dissolved in water.

IN PLANTING SHRUBBERY AND ROSES.

WHEN SOIL IS FIT TO WORK.

When this old earth really begins to warm up in the spring the normal person who traces his ancestry back to a farmer before the ape feels an impulse to get out and dig and while the modernist frowns on repression of any kind the experienced gardener advises extreme caution at this time. If the earth is too wet there is grave danger of a nasty cold, not to mention dire consequences to the soil itself. Too early working will cause the latter to pack down hard and it may require a whole summer of constant digging and raking to get it back into its old crumbly self again. There is a simple test. If the soil crumbles after a little is squeezed in the hand or if it does not muddy the boots, it is safe to go ahead, but if it compacts into a ball, it is best to satisfy the spring craving with a good walk or a game of golf.

GRAFTING AND TRAINING.

Grafting is not a difficult operation. The main thing is to get a portion of the inner bark of the scion, or twig being grafted onto the tree exactly opposite and tight up against the inner bark of the limb of the tree, so that the two may grow together. When working on a big limb it is best to take two or three twigs and insert them around the edge of the sawed-off portion with the two inner barks in close contact. Later on when growth has well started remove all but one twig. After putting together, tie tightly with raffia or some soft twine and cover all around the joint with grafting wax. It is advisable to get some good Government bulletin on this subject before attempting the work. By grafting one can repair a tree which rabbits or mice have girdled and which would die without this treatment and can put a complete new top on a broken down tree or one of a non-desirable variety. Grafting and training opens up interesting possibilities to the gardener. One apple can be made to fill the lace of three ordinary trees if an early variety like the Yellow Transarent, or Astrachan, a good early cooker like the Duchess and a fine winter apple such as the McIntosh are all grown on the same trunk. By careful pruning and training shrubs and trees may be made to assume weird shapes or almost as ornamental as the hardwoods usually planted for this purpose. One may make bushy trees of climbing roses by only allowing a single stem trained to a stake and then encouraging this to branch by cutting it off when it reaches a certain height. In Japan by judicious pruning and withholding of fertilizer and water pines and oaks of very dwarfed proportions are grown in pails and tubs.

Relics on Two Continents Attributed to the Vikings

Ships, Jewels, Rune Stones and Even a Cathedral Appear to Trace the Course of the Norsemen

The recent discovery of a Viking cache of gems on the Swedish island of Gothland in the Baltic Sea, directs attention to other relics dug up during the present century that appear to trace the activities of these sea wanderers of a thousand years ago. These discoveries have been made for the most part in the Scandinavian countries, and in Iceland and Greenland. Ruins have also been revealed on the North American continent suggesting that the Norsemen propelled their great galleys far to the west, but authority is divided as to the Viking origin of these remains.

In the Historical Museum in Oslo, Norway, three Viking ships are displayed. One, found at Oseberg in 1903, was evidently a pleasure yacht owned by a woman of noble rank, and used as her sepulchre. The ship was apparently hauled high and dry into a hollow place, then roofed over and covered with earth, peat and stones. Two skeletons, both of women, were found on board.

In 1925 an expedition under Dr. Paul Norland made some interesting discoveries of Viking relics in Greenland. Most important were the ruins of a cathedral and a Bishop's palace, which boasted a main building 150 feet long containing a large banquet hall. The out-houses must have been large enough to accommodate 100 cows, besides horses, pigs, etc., and to have room for a smithy. The cathedral was evidently ninety feet long, with several chapels attached. It was built of sandstone quarried near the settlement at Igaliko. This was evidently the colony ruled by Eric the Red.

In 1931 Dr. Knud Rasmussen, Danish explorer, discovered in Ekjoldungen Fjord, Greenland, the 1,000-year-old ruins of a house which was not of Eskimo origin, and which was believed to have been built by the Vikings.

The question as to whether the Norsemen discovered America, and if they did, how far they went into the country, has been debated for many years. Similarities have been found between ancient civilizations in America and Norse culture, mounds have been ascribed to the Norsemen, and runic writings and names have been traced to Norse origins; but although it is probable that the Norsemen reached America, no proof of their having penetrated the country for any distance has been found.

Ancient ruins on Sculpin Island, twenty miles off Nain, Labrador, were discovered in 1926 by Commander Donald B. MacMillan, and believed by him to be the remains of a Norse settlement.

New Zealand Establishing Dental Clinics in Schools

New Zealand has a system of school dental clinics—begun in 1920—which are established on application when the cost of premises and certain maintenance expenses are guaranteed by responsible local organizations. The teeth of all children in the entering classes are examined, and any needed treatment is given if the parents consent. Re-examinations and necessary treatments are given at intervals of six months. At the present time about 60,000 children in 130 schools are being cared for. An important feature of the system is the employment of women nurses who have received a two-year course in dental hygiene in the Wollington training school.

No Windows in New Museums

Most modern museums are now built entirely without windows. Daylight, even when filtered through glass, has such intensity that it has been labeled "the greatest enemy" of public exhibits. It causes many specimens to deteriorate by fading.

No product in the world has as great a turnover as chewing-gum.

FASHION HINT

"How to make my old short skirts conform to the new length was a problem to me until I hit on this plan I dropped the hems; and as the part that had been turned under was darker than the rest, I redyed the entire dress, after having bleached the goods, following directions in the Diamond Dyes package.

"I used Diamond Dyes for the redyeing, of course. I have dyed many things with these wonderful colors. They have saved me many dollars and have never failed to give perfect results—smooth, even colors—fast to wear and washing. Friends think my things are new when I redye or tint them with Diamond Dyes. They do give the most gorgeous colors!"

When You CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Aspirin was meant for just such times, for it insures your comfort. Freedom from those pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block that threatening headache while it is still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you've caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Aspirin tablets when you travel. Have some at home and keep some at the office. Like an efficient secretary, they will often "save the day" and spare you many uncomfortable, unproductive hours. Aspirin is harmless, so keep it handy, keep it in mind, and use it. No man of affairs can afford to ignore the score and more of uses explained in the proven directions. From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains which seem almost to bend the bones, Aspirin tablets are ready with quick relief—and always work. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. They are of perfect purity, absolute uniformity, and have the same action every time. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

Sunday School Lesson

April 10. Lesson II—How Sin Begins—Genesis 2: 15-17; 3: 1-8. Golden Text—Watch and pray, that we enter not into temptation.—Matthew 26: 41.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE PROHIBITION, Gen. 2: 15-17.
II. THE TEMPTATION, Gen. 3: 1-5
III. THE SIN, Gen. 3: 6, 7.
IV. THE CONSEQUENCES, Gen. 3: 7, 8

INTRODUCTION—From the story of creation the Bible proceeds to the story of the garden. The connection between the two accounts is not important. It implies that God is concerned, not only with creating man, but with forming an ideal environment for him—an evidence of God's goodnes and loving care. What an enchanted garden it is, with trees that bestow knowledge and life, and animals that talk! This garden, like the far country in Christ's parable and the road which Christian traveled in Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," belongs to the map of the soul rather than to that of the earth. The motive of the story is to explain the universal but mysterious fact of human sin with its dire consequences.

I. THE PROHIBITION, Gen. 2: 15-17.

Life in Eden, though pleasant, was not idle. There can be no genuine happiness without a worthy vocation. So Adam must tend the trees of the garden. In his life he was given a wide liberty of choice; he could eat of any of the trees of the garden. Without this freedom he could not fully express his personality. But there is a limit to human freedom. There was one tree of the garden which was not to be touched—the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Just as the people of the Middle Ages sought for the fountain of eternal youth, so the ancients believed that certain trees would bestow knowledge, as certain waters would bestow life. Here the forbidden tree is surely to be understood as a symbol. It stood as a divine warning against human presumption. It said, "Thus far shalt thou go and no further." Knowledge of life and the world, which is won by the sacrifice of peace of mind and purity of heart, is both illicit and impious.

II. THE TEMPTATION, Gen. 3: 1-5

Never have the stages which lead to sin been depicted with such penetrating, psychological insight and with such simple, powerful strokes as here. Even an ideal environment is not proof against the possibility of sin. The serpent is not to be understood as the devil of Christian theology, although it became identified in later thought with him; it represents simply the agent by which an evil suggestion came to man. It commenced by exaggerating grossly God's prohibition, as though every tree of the garden were under the ban. It thus sought to create the impression that man's lot is unnecessarily hard through the severity of God. The serpent seemed more compassionate than God; life, under his management, would be less austere. At first the woman repelled the suspicion that God is unnecessarily harsh. She corrected the serpent; only one tree is prohibited. Ah, she was made to talk—and about the prohibited tree! The serpent now became very bold and branded God's word as false. "Ye shall not surely die," he said. God is, therefore, a tyrant who lays down a prohibition, not in the interests of Adam and Eve, but merely to restrain them from the happiness that might be theirs. Further, in eating the fruit of this tree there is a wondrous boon—the opening of the eyes. It makes one's soul to feel that one is going through life like a blind man, missing its priceless things. These were the suggestions sown in Eve's heart.

III. THE SIN, Gen. 3: 6, 7

The serpent, having done its work, disappeared. Eve's curiosity had been aroused. She looked at the tree and noticed what she had not previously observed, that the forbidden fruit was of pleasant appearance. Next, her desire was kindled. How glorious it must taste. How mysterious its power of bestowing knowledge! The fatal step was taken swiftly and thoughtlessly. Then, as sin loves company, Eve tempted Adam, and when woman tempts, man is powerless to resist.

"The opening of the eyes aptly symbolizes the awakening of conscience. So Newman says, 'They lost Eden, and gained a conscience.' The innocence of childhood was gone, and shame and fear came in its place. No doubt the moral maturity which an awakened conscience implies would have been reached, but more slowly, by the way of obedience. It is a familiar fact of life that the unhealthy growth is the more rapid. The child ages more quickly in ways of sin, and the bad boy usually knows much more of life's good and evil than the healthy, normal, right-minded boy of his own age."

IV. THE CONSEQUENCES, Gen. 3: 7, 8.

These early sinners had hoped to gain knowledge of the highest, but the knowledge they won was merely that they were naked! Sin produces shame. For they had now to cover themselves, and they chose fig-leaves. Sin also separates man from his God. In picturesque simplicity the story tells how God walked in his garden in the cool breezes of the morning and how Adam and Eve could not look into his searching eyes.

First Spring

Ah it is well that grass now light to emerald;
That hyacinths in purple and pink unfold;
That lilies lift in sheer and sudden whiteness,
While daffodils burst softly into gold.

For soon, across the earth, dull-hued as parchment,
A message must be written by a sun—
A message worthy of the fairest colors—
"The Lord is risen again! Lo, death is done!"

Illustrated Dressmaking Lesson Furnished With Every Pattern

Just another smart frock for "best" for that important age of 8, 10, 12 and 14 years.

This time a lovely deep blue with a sapphire cast silk crepe made the original. It's an adorable affair.

And it's really quite simple. It reflects the Victorian period in its quaint puffed sleeves and round lace trimmed neckline.

Style No. 2622 can be made at a very small outlay.

Vivid red crepe de chine is very effective.

Then again, perhaps you'd like it fashioned of a lovely cotton tweed in red and brown mixture. For the collar, cut the material on the bias and pipe around lower edge with red binding. Match the belt in leather to the collar.

Size 8 requires 2⅛ yards of 39-inch material with ¼ yard of 35-inch lace and 3 yards of 3-inch ribbon.

HOW TO ORDER PATTERNS.

Write your name and address plainly, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Enclose 20c in stamps or coin (coin preferred; wrap it carefully) for each number, and address your order to Wilson Pattern Service, 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto.

Blue Predominates In New York Parade

Waists Uncertain But Neck Lines Are Definitely Higher

New York.—There was a distinct blue note in the traditional spring parade when fashionable New York and a great many country cousins strolled down Fifth Avenue.

The blue note was not due to overcast skies, but to the whim of the mysterious men and women—in Paris and New York or somewhere—who dictate what the well-dressed woman will wear.

If you're still in doubt, the W. D. woman will wear blue most of the time this season.

The styles displayed along the Avenue were emphatic. Hats were small, tipped over one ear. Rough woolen material of a loose weave was seen frequently and there were many striped costumes.

The stripes appeared to have invaded every phase of the new styles. They were usually three colors—red, white and blue or red white and black.

The hats were mostly blue, and oftentimes trimmed with red and white. Most of the dresses were a pale shade of blue, trimmed with pearl gray and with light blue slippers to match. Black costumes also were popular.

The silhouette was intriguing, broad at the shoulders and narrow at the hips. The waistline is still wavering between its natural level and a slightly higher point of the directoire period. This trend also has inspired higher neck lines, and in the smartest street dresses the neck line aproached the collar-bone.

American Professor Urges Adult Education

Adult education has become not only a necessity but an obligation, according to Professor A. Broderick Cohen, director of the evening and extension courses of Hunter College.

In a recent interview Professor Cohen declared: "It is an obligation of all parents to continue their studies, either by some more or less regular program at home or by participating in organized courses given by a college university or some other educational institution.

"Such organized study at home or in an educational institution is desirable even for the graduates of the college and the university. For those lacking college training such study is indispensable especially if the parent would fulfill his obligation to his child and keep abreast of the swiftly changing scientific and cultural aspects of our modern world.

"As the child grows older the need for the parent to continue his studies in order to keep up with the child is necessary."

Shift in Population Noted in Dominion

Ottawa.—Rural population to-day represents 46.20 per cent. of the total for the Dominion of Canada, compared to more than 50 per cent. in 1921, according to an official report based on the census taken last year.

The rural population to-day is 4,802,138 and the urban population 5,572,058. Comparatively figures a decade ago were 4,435,827 and 4,352,122 respectively. Thus, during the ten-year period the urban population increased by 1,219,936, or 28 per cent., and the rural population by only 366,311, or 7.6 per cent.

In the ten years the population of Canada increased by 1586,247, or 18.05 per cent. to the total of 10,374,196. During the same period the gain in the United States was 16.7 per cent. and in England and Wales somewhat less than 6 per cent.

Generally speaking the most pronounced movement from the country to the city is found in Eastern Canada, and in particular the industrial areas of Quebec and Ontario, although the tendency is spreading westward. Since the census was taken, in June of last year, governments in Canada have been giving attention to a back-to-the-land movement which has been instrumental in settling in agricultural employment on their own land or as employees, some 45,000 individuals who required no financial assistance but only some advice and guidance.

Royal Family's Taste in Books Extends Over Wide Range

London.—Prince George's confession that he has a keen appetite for novels, but is tired of their incessant harping on sex, is a reminder that he is the book lover of the royal family. He is as interested in first editions as his father is in stamp collecting.

The public life of the King and other members of the royal family leaves little time for light reading, although the King's partiality is toward the older novelists—Dickens, Thackeray and Scott, and occasionally Conrad. Biographies and historical romances are the Queen's favorites. The Prince of Wales likes Kipling, P. G. Wodehouse and Stephen Leacock. The Duke of York turns to serious and economic problems of the day.

Percy—"By Jove! I've got an idea."

Betty—"Be kind to the little stranger."

Electric Plows Tested in Europe

Pills of Fertilizer—Germans Speed Cooking—New Radium Field To Be Developed in Canada

Some 200 electric plows are successfully operating in Europe. They are expensive but efficient. Costing as they do from $15,000 to $20,000 each, they are beyond the reach of the average farmer. In France they are rented. Community utilization seems to be the practice so that the power company by which a plow may be owned makes the most of its investment and the possibility of selling electric energy.

An electric plow travels along at the rate of about three miles an hour and covers as many as thirty acres a day. The cost of electric current at 2 cents a kilowatt-hour amounts to only 60 cents an acre. A contractor who owns a plow and hires himself out to farmers charges from $3.50 to $6 a day. Allowing the usual rate for interest on the investment depreciation and operating costs, he ought to make money.

There is nothing resembling the usual gasoline tractor. Two portable drums are set up at opposite ends of the field along a straight line. A steel rope from one drum is fastened to the rear of the plow and paid out as the plow travels along; a similar rope from the second drum is fastened to the front of the plow and does the actual hauling. At the end of the furrow the plow is turned around to begin the return journey and dig a new furrow. What was the paying-out drum now becomes the hauling drum. There is no overhead trolley. Current is supplied by cables paid out from reels.

Pills For Plants

Fertilizers are scattered over the land. It would be better if they could be drilled into the ground like seeds. Convinced that this is the correct principle, a Southern research organization has developed a method of making fertilizers in an entirely new way. The process was described by B. G. Klugh before the New York chapter of the American Institute of Chemists recently.

At first pellets about the size of homeopathic pills were considered, but the pharmaceutical equipment required to produce them was too intricate and expensive. It was decided to form a paste and to extrude it through very small apertures. Spaghetti-like strings came out, which were dried and then cut into granules an eighth of an inch long. Pills are thus obtained which can be forced into the ground in any desired dosage by means of a farmer's ordinary drilling machine. They are very hard and dense, and uniform in size and shape. The perfectly smooth outer surface presents so little area to the atmosphere that the absorption of moisture is slight. Even after four months there is little tendency of the pill to cake.

Speed Cooking

For all their easy-going ways, the Germans are speed-conscious, and for all their tradition, they are as much interested in modern home comforts as Americans.

Not only are they speeding up some of their trains, but there are signs that they want to cook in a hurry. What else would explain the marketing of a new "electric kitchen" with which, it is claimed, a full-size meal for five persons can be prepared in 45 minutes? The device, which is also said to make cooking cheaper consists of stewing pot, frying pan and coffee percolator, all of which operate by insertion of an electric plug. It was exhibited at the Leipzig Fair recently.

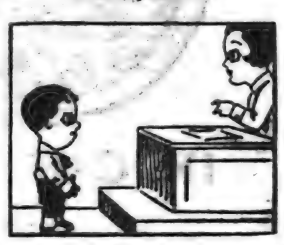
As for the home comfort, there was displayed at the fair a "central heating range" which can be used not only for cooking but for heating the entire house, doing away with the necessity for separate fireplaces or stoves in the various rooms, which is still a widespread custom in Germany and other European countries. This special range has three grates, one over the other. Only the top grate is used for cooking; the middle grate is intended for use in milder weather when the house requires only slight heating, and the bottom grate, where the flames are most intense, is for the winter.

Radium Refinery

The Canadian mining company, which sought, near Great Bear Lake, to find gold worth about $22 an ounce and discovered radium valued at well over $1,800,000 at present prices for the same amount, is planning to establish a refinery at the scene of the digging.

This will further reduce the great cost of getting the valuable pitchblende ore, containing the radium, out of the wild area by airplane. In connection with radium extraction, the company has engaged the services of a Belgian expert, Mr. Pochon, and on his return from Europe in June plans will be considered for a refinery. The plant will include crushing and grinding machinery, as well as the chemical equipment for readium extraction.

The Department of Mines at Ottawa is lending all possible assistance toward working out ways and means for the treatment of the radium-bearing ore. So far the government has received 600 pounds of ore for experimental purposes, and the company proposes to ship twenty tons of ore, now stored at Waterways, Alta., to Ottawa for further test purposes.



Water Power in Central Electric Stations

About 98 per cent. of the output of central electric stations in Canada according to the Dominion Water Power and Hydrometric Bureau, Department of the Interior, is generated from hydraulic installations. The proportion of hydraulic installation available for public use is steadily growing to keep pace with the increasing demand for domestic, commercial and industrial energy. In all three of these fields new adaptations are increasing the demand. The development of the alternating current radio, electrical refrigeration, therapeutic appliances and general household devices in the domestic field; of improved commercial lighting and advertising in the commercial field; and of electro-chemical and electro-metallurgical processes in industry constantly increases the demand on the central electric stations.

At the present time there are 328 hydro-electric central stations in Canada with a total installation of 5,734,491 horsepower. Of these totals, 226 stations with an installation of 609 turbines of a combined capacity of 4,241,838 h.p. are owned by commercial organizations while municipal and other public organizations operate 102 stations which contain 242 turbines aggregating 1,492,653 h.p. The average installation of the commercial stations is 18,769 h.p. and the average capacity of their turbines 6,965 h.p., as compared with 14,634 h.p. and 6,168 h.p., respectively, for the municipal stations. Individual turbines vary in size from the 10 h.p. turbine used for hamlet lighting to the great 65,000 h.p. units of the Chute a Caron development on the Saguenay river.

Progress on the Big Bend Highway

Considerable progress has been made during the past year towards the completion of the Big Bend highway, the connecting link in the western half of the trans-Canada highway which follows the course of the Columbia River in British Columbia, for almost 200 miles. On the eastern end, which is being constructed by the National Parks Service, Department of the Interior, sixty-two miles of road from Golden have now been graded and surfaced.

"Quick . . . the barn's on fire"

Dick Johnson's wife was making pies when she glanced out the window and saw smoke curling up from the barn. And Dick was over at the Blay's helping with a load of hogs!

She ran to the telephone. Dick rushed home with Fred Blay and in a few minutes they had stamped out the smouldering hay before the fire got really started.

"That was a close shave", Dick said. "We might have lost everything. It's lucky we've kept our telephone."

ISOLATION HOSPITALS

Our older readers may recall the time when they used to hold their breath in passing a house which was placarded for a communicable disease. They may also remember that isolation hospitals were built away from the residential area, and that the smallpox hospital was regarded as a pest house.

That attitude can be understood when we realize that, in the past, it was generally believed that the communicable diseases were air-borne. It was during the same period also that sewer-gas was considered to be a serious menace and was regarded as the cause of many ills.

We know now that disease is not air-borne, and we know too that the germs of disease are usually spread in a fairly direct manner from the sick to the well, or by the transference of fresh, germ laden secretions. The sick are isolated in order to set up a barrier which will prevent contact of the sick with the well, and so stop any chance of the transfer of secretions.

Isolation hospitals are required because in many homes it is not possible to isolate the case. To begin with, the home may be overcrowded and so a separate room is not available. The case of communicable disease requires nursing care, and the mother who has other children to look after cannot give her whole time to the case. If the case is a serious one, then the treatment facilities of a hospital are required as they are in any serious illness.

The community which has an isolation hospital has something for which to be thankful. Such an institution is a treatment facility which aids in protecting the whole community and which provides hospital care for those who, for one reason or another, require it.

It has only been comparatively recently that the public have looked favourably upon hospitals. They used to be regarded as places which were to be avoided at all costs. Now they are recognized for their true worth as life saving institutions. To a certain extent, the old view still persists with regard to isolation hospitals, and many parents hesitate to commit their children to the care of these institutions.

The isolation hospital differs from other hospitals only in that it limits its admissions to cases of communicable disease. The facilities for treatment and the care given to patients are of just as high an order as in other hospitals.

We are now coming to the time when isolation hospitals will not be built away from the community, but will form part of the general hospital. There is no danger in an isolation hospital. It is one of the safest places in the world, because the necessary precautions are taken there to prevent the spread of disease germs.

ISLINGTON

The Islington Fire Brigade's annual euchre and dance last Friday evening in the Assembly Hall was a genuine success, there being a record attendance. Thirty-five tables indulged in euchre, while a bigger crowd engaged in modern and old-time dances. Visiting firemen were present from Lambton, Swansea, Long Branch, New Toronto and Alderwood, and these were treated to luncheon by Chief Mitchell and the members of our local brigade.

The following officers of the Islington Men's Conservative Association were elected last Wednesday: President, O. Webb; 1st Vice-Pres., C. O. Waters; 2nd Vice-Pres., G. Bell; 3rd Vice-Pres., J. Clarke; Sec., J. G. Marsh; Treas., V. R. Ide.

Our five-pin bowling league of 72 members concluded a fine season by holding a banquet at Croftin Inn, Cooksville, last Thursday night. A real chicken dinner was served, following which a rip-roarious program was rendered by Jimmie Reid, Scotch comedian and Duncan Cowan, baritone, the musical numbers being varied by a clever magician. The Reeve and Council of Etobicoke attended and were honored by being asked to hand out the prizes to the winners. Mr. W. E. Gordon, president of the club, acted as toastmaster.

The editors of local newspapers are often blamed for partiality in their notices for churches, societies and even families, when the fact is the parties most interested are the ones to blame. The local newspaper does not possess a sufficient number of reporters to send to every church service in the range of its circulation, and it must needs depends upon some person to send in the news. Many pastors or leaders of the congregation do this and their items are gladly printed. Many societies appoint one of their members to attend to this important work.

The startling discoveries of radium and silver at Great Bear Lake, as well as many other important topics, are to be discussed in the technical sessions of the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7. A part of the proceedings is to be broadcast.

Seventy Atlantic crossings in the ships of one company is the record of C. H. Williams of Toronto who this month reached the three score and ten mark in the Canadian Pacific Duchess of Atholl. He is not yet 45 and has been crossing regularly in Canadian Pacific liners since 1912.

The Governor General, Patron of the Canadian Institute of Mining & Metallurgy, will attend the annual meeting in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7. It has been arranged that his address to the assembled mining men will be broadcast to all quarters of the Dominion for the benefit of those who cannot attend the meeting.

Choice of 14 tastefully worded Easter greetings, either in English or in the language of the country of destination, are at the disposal of the public, in Canadian Pacific telegraph offices, at a standard rate of one dollar, on and after March 19. The form conveying the message will be decorated with traditional Easter Lilies and message can be sent over a wide range of countries throughout Europe.

Canada's increasing importance in gold production is represented by a number of important papers on gold at the annual meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Montreal on April 5, 6 and 7. The developments in the Quebec gold belt are particularly prominent in these papers.

Ending with a clear-cut victory, in the play-offs, of 4-0, making it 5-1 on the round, Canadian Pacific Railway hockey team in the Montreal Railway Telephone League, took for the second year in succession the E. W. Beatty Trophy and the Railway Telephone Cup. The team started off the season with three defeats, staging a great come-back to end in first position, prior to the play-offs. (Ad)

Experts See No Future for Hemp Production

Hemp, once a profitable crop in this country, has dwindled in importance, and the vehicle through which it has lost its market was the principal market in former years. It is estimated that in the early Colonial days it took the product of 1,000 acres of hemp to make the ropes necessary to outfit a single sailing vessel of any size.

Now ships bring jute from India and this importation, due to its much lower price, has driven hemp from the market to a large extent. In spite of this loss of market, glowing pictures of prosperity to be had from hemp growing are painted for farmers who have had no experience with the crop. Agents with something to sell have induced many farmers to attempt crops, but little hope of success is held out by Department of Agriculture officials, who point out that by no means is the general run of land suitable for hemp production. Even if it were, there still remains the fact that the demand for hemp is more than filled by present sources, with the result that the prices are too low to make a crop an attractive proposition financially for the grower.—Washington Star.

Iguassu Falls One of Wonders of the World

The Iguassu falls of Brazil are said to be the most wonderful in the world. In the Wide World Magazine R. Halliburton writes: "Half a mile away a vast mass of water seemed to flow forth from the sky. It was a river, which, after wandering quietly through the forests of Brazil, had come at length to the edge of a great plateau. There it girds itself for a grand climax to its career—a climax so spectacular that no one who sees can ever forget that this river surpasses all others in the sublime beauty of its passing, leaving behind one of the wonders of the world. With one mighty charge along a front 10,000 feet in length it hurls over the brink, in superb 200 foot cataracts of foam. Niagara may have greater volume, Victoria greater height, but for artistry and coloring Iguassu stands alone."

Historic Eastern Spot

Shimoda, on the eastern coast of the Izu peninsula, came into the American spotlight in the middle of the last century, when a treaty was ratified there which first opened Japan to foreign trade.

In 1853 Capt. Matthew Galbraith Perry, United States navy, sailed up the bay of Sagami to Shimoda, went ashore with 300 men and delivered letters from President Fillmore to a representative of the Japanese emperor. In the spring of 1855 the first treaty between America and Japan, providing, among other things, for the opening of Shimoda to American trading vessels, was proclaimed.

America's first diplomatic representative to Japan resided at Shimoda. It was a tidal wave and earthquake that caused the diplomatic offices to be removed from Shimoda to Yokohama in 1859.

Pretty Indian Legend

The custom of sacrificing a beautiful maiden by sending her over Niagara falls in a canoe was practiced by the Indian tribes about the falls. The maiden selected paddled a white canoe, filled with fruits and flowers, over the falls. It was counted a great honor to be chosen as the sacrificial victim. Once the only daughter of a Seneca chief was selected by the gathered tribes. Her father loved her dearly, yet he showed no sign of grief. The revels continued during the whole day, and when night came and the moon rose the girl paddled her canoe toward the falls, amidst much tumult and shouting. Suddenly another white canoe darted from the opposite bank. It contained the chief, her father; the canoes met, and together they went to their death over the falls.

English Official Mark

The "broad arrow," used as a distinguishing mark on British government property, was the "cognizance" or heraldic symbol of Henry, Viscount Sidney, who was master-general of the ordnance from 1693 to 1703, says an article in the Montreal Family Herald. In time it came to be used by other government departments besides the ordnance board (now the war office), with which it first was associated. Curiously enough, the "broad arrow" was a symbol of power and authority among the ancient Druids. It is felony to obliterate this official mark.

Not a Major Crime

A soldier walked rapidly from a railroad train in London, gazing nervously down at a suitcase he carried. A railway detective looked at him for a moment and then leaped in pursuit. Blood was dropping from the bag. A few days later the soldier was found guilty by court-martial. The charge was stealing six pounds of fresh meat from the company kitchen.

Careless Pedestrians

In Nuremberg they seem to have hit upon a plan which secures some lasting results. Any person who drops a paper or an empty cigarette box in the street is liable to a fine of one mark. A watchful policeman steps up, names the offense, collects the quarter and hands over an official receipt for it. The streets of Nuremberg are accordingly free from litter.

In the Dixie Presbyterian Church, April 7th, an interesting program was given by the following artists: Hon. Duncan Marshall, lecture on Scotland; duetts by Mr. and Mrs. Thomas of Brampton; readings by Ruth Ross; solos by Mr. Jackson. Mr. Perkins Bull, K.C., was chairman. Mr. Bull is at present collecting material for a history of the County of Peel, past and present, intending to arrange it in book form. Mr. Bull was born in Brampton, Peel County, where the Bull family have always been prominent figures in every progressive movement in the county; therefore we may expect a great amount of valuable and interesting information. Mr. Bull intends to show that Peel is one of the greatest historical counties in Canada.

Mr. Bull is desirous of hearing from anyone who knows anything about the history of Peel. With what information he has on hand and what he expects to get will, he says, be of untold value to the present and future generations.

Mr. Marshall's lecture was advertised to be about Scotland, but when he started he told us about one of his numerous trips to the Old Land. He told of when he landed in Liverpool, then taking a motor trip from there through the English country, with its mild, warm, refreshing rains almost every day, then sunshine, making it one of the best grazing places in the world. He compared it with the disadvantages of our Canadian climate, where the rain comes down in torrents, often doing more harm than good.

Then he told about an old friend he used to meet at the stock shows in England. This friend was a breeder of Ayrshire cattle; he had many failures, but at a show where he won the sweepstakes the late King Edward (at that time Prince of Wales) was there. When he asked who won the coveted prize, this man was pointed out to him and who was known by the square christy hat he always wore. After the Prince had congratulated him on his success they had a lengthy chat, both often laughing heartily. After the Prince had departed the reporters were very anxious to know what had amused the Prince so much. "Oh," he said, "when two farmers get together at a stock show there are many things to interest and amuse them." Then he came to a town called Brompton, where he met his good old friend, Mr. Bull (the chairman here tonight) and he took this opportunity to thank him for his kindness to him while he was there. This was during the world war and it is worthy of note that Mr. Bull donated his large residence to the British officers. In days gone by when it was customary for the Highlanders to lift cattle from the English, which, they claimed, was theirs by right, this town Brompton was used as a trap to catch them. There were many inlet roads but no outlets.

We were beginning to fear that Scotland was going to be left out of the picture, but when he crossed the border at Carlyle he no sooner landed into Scotland when everything else was forgotten but Bobbie Burns and Scotland. Robert Burns was the greatest poet Scotland ever knew and, he believed, the greatest poet the world ever knew. Everyone was spellbound as they followed Mr. Marshall on his motor trip through Scotland where the great plow-boy poet's life was spent and where he made these places famous in history and tradition and noted as the localities of national song.

It was a stormy January night when Burns entered this world. A Gipsy woman was seated by the Burns cottage fireside. Burns father had been kind to her, and on the child being placed on the lap of this woman, shortly after his birth, she is said to have inspected his palm, after the manner of her tribe and made the prediction which the poet has embodied in the song.

(First verse runs like this)

There was a lad was born in Kyle
But whatna day O'whatna style
I doubt its hardly worth the while
To be so nice wi Robin

Robin was a roving boy
Ranting, roving ranting, roving,
Robin was a roving boy,
Ranting, roving Robin.

Now we fancied we saw the Hon Duncan Marshal's car parked at the Alloway Kirk where what is supposed to be the most popular of all the poet's work, is the tale of Tam O'Shanter. Douglas Grahame of Shanter a farmer on the Carrick shore, who was in reality the drunken, careless being the poet depicts him, became the hero of the legend and several ludicrous stories current about him were woven into it with admirable skill. It is reported of him that on a market day being in Ayr, he tied his mare by the bridle to a ring at the door of a public house; and while he was making happy with some of his cronies inside, the idle boys of the neighborhood, pulled all the hair out of the mare's tail. This was not noticed until the next morning when bewildered as to the cause of the accident he could only refer to it as the agency of witchcraft.

It was further related of Graham that when a debauch had been prolonged until the dread of the 'sulky sullen dame' at the house rose up before him he would frequently continue drinking rather than face her, although delay would add to the terrors of the inevitable homegoing.

This poem was composed in one day in the winter of 1790. This day the poet lingered longer by the river-side than usual. His wife with the children went to meet him but perceiving that her presence would be an interruption to him she lingered behind him. Her attention was attracted by his wild gesticulations and ungovernable mirth as he recited the passages of 'Tam O'Shanter' as they were in his mind.

When Mr. Marshall took us by mountain, stream or glen the place was more beautiful because Burns had been in every place before him and it was Burns poems and national songs made Scotland loved at home and revered abroad. When Mr. Marshall brought us to the field where Burns was plowing and he turned up a mouse's nest, when the man that was with him started after the mouse to kill it, Burns checked him and asked him what harm the mouse ever did to them?

The last number on the program was "Afton Water," solo by Mr. G.B. Jackson. Burns said it was written upon the Callsfield Dairymaid, the dearly-beloved and long-remembered Highland Mary. If Burns heard it sung that night he would have been satisfied.

After singing God Save the King, which, Mr. Bull claimed, had been composed by one of his forefathers, everyone was invited to the basement where tables were set and coffee, cake and sandwiches were in abundance.

Even after an extraordinary display of food consumption there was a great number of cakes offered for sale.

Mr. John Jamieson, acting salesman, was asked by Mr. Perkins Bull if the cakes were of the same good quality as the ones we had already been served with and baked by these Dixie women; if so, he would give a dollar for one. Then Mr. Marshall rebuked him, saying he must be Scotch if he thought he could get one of these cakes for a dollar, and straightway offered a handsome advance. The cakes were soon disposed of to the two and then donated to the artists taking part in the program.

That happy night is in the past
But pleasant memories always last.

OLD BIBLE POSSESSED BY GEORGETOWN MAN

A. E. Tost, of Georgetown, takes pride in the ownership of an old Bible which was printed in 1613 by Robert Barber in London, who designates himself as "Printer to their Most Excellent Majesties." HOWLING OF WOLVES TERRIFIED SETTLERS

John Carberry on 93rd Birthday Reminisces About Indians and Oxen

Days when savage wolves, oxen and Indians were a part of life in this community are easily recalled by John Carberry, who yesterday celebrated his birthday on the farm on which he was born 93 years ago.

When Mr. Carberry's parents moved to the farm two-and-one-half miles north of here, the land was all bush.

"My father tied the oxen to a tree," he related. "That night the wolves came and surrounded the animals, making it necessary for my father to build a roaring fire to scare them away. Another time my mother brought two small wolf cubs into the house in her apron, and in a short time the house was surrounded by a howling mob of the savage beasts. We were terrified for fear they'd jump in the chimney and all night long we piled wood on the open fireplace to keep them from getting in.

"When I was a small boy the Indians were quite frequent visitors at our home. They would come into the kitchen, sit down for a while and talk, then get up and go out. We always left the doors unlocked lest we'd offend them."

In a back field of Mr. Carberry's farm is a large rock where the Indions came to hold their religious ceremonies. The rock, until recent years, had three large and distinct steps carved in its face, but two of the steps have been chiselled off. Bones dug from beneath the rock were declared by authorities to have been those of an Indian, and it is probable one of their chiefs was buried there.

One of the most cherished memories of Mr. Carberry is that as a young man he helped to draw the first load of bricks used in the construction of St. Joseph's church, Streetsville. He is the only living member who was present at the consecration of the church 74 years ago.

An ardent Liberal, Mr. Carberry has taken a keen interest in politics since he was sixteen years old and is well informed on political questions.

Mr. Carberry's wife died six years ago and he lives with his son Peter, who has taken over the farm. Besides his son he has three daughters living, Miss Annie, Toronto; Mrs. L. Caine, Cooksville, and Mrs. D. O'Connor, Streetsville.

Perhaps the most appreciated of felicitations came from a companion of his younger days, Owen Hickey, Centre Rd., who is now in his 84th year. By a coincidence he helped draw the first load of bricks for St. Patrick's church, Dixie, when a young man.

"We went south together in the fall of 1866 with the intention of making a fortune," recalled Mr. Hickey. "We traevlled to Buffalo and joined the Northern Army in the American civil war. They sent us to Galveston, Texas, where we were parted by a break-up of the detachment. We didn't meet again until we returned to Cooksville three years later. For a time I acted as escort to an officer who conducted martial law courts in Texas state." While on guard duty at the house occupied by Jeff Davis, southern rebel leader, Mr. Hickey was given a thousand dollars' worth of red confederate dollar bills. "But they weren't much use unless you could pass them off on a nigger," he commented.

The Aztec Mystrey

A Thrilling Story of the Old West

BY MURRAY LEINSTER

SYNOPSIS.

The stage running into Moleville is held up and robbed of a mine payroll by Sonny Holman, who has a habit of robbing the payrolls of the Aztec mine, declaring he is the real owner of the mine and that what he cannot win through the courts he will take by force.

The stage proceeds toward Moleville bearing the two wounded guards, Tilford, manager of the mine, and Janet Laurier owner of the Aztec, who offers a reward of $1,000 for Holman's capture.

CHAPTER IV.

Ehe went down in the mine that afternoon, which was perhaps why she did not see the sheriff ride out of town. He went ut about dusk, when even the dust seemed merely a choking nuisance and not a scorching abomination, and the few cottonwoods in the town were beginning to add a slightly greeny smell to the generally horsey aroma of Moleville.

The sheriff's rifle was in his saddle holster and six-guns were on either hip, but that was his usual way of traveling. He rode steadily until darkness enveloped him, and then turned on his trail and doubled back on the route he had followed. He rode swiftly when he doubled back, but no one had been trailing him. He saw no signs of having been observed. Satisfied, he swerved from the trail and set off for the foothills at an easy lope.

It was more than an hour before he reached them, and darkness was complete, but the stars shone down brightly, and as he rode into a cleft among the first hillocks of the mountain chain, a glow, as of a cigarette, arose from the earth, swung on horseback, and spurred toward him.

"Howdy," said the sheriff comfortably. "I figured yuh'd be here."

"What's the news?" drawled the other, drawing alongside.

"One item o' news," said the sheriff detachedly, "is that I don't know who y'are, Sonny. I ain't got any idea at all who you might be. I rek'n you must be that feller John Doe I hear so many warrants is out for. Because, bein' the majesty of the law in person, if I was to come across Sonny Holman I'd have to arrest him an' collect a reward of a thousan' dollars Miss Laurier's put up for him."

"Doggone!" drawled Sonny. "That's right nervy of her, it is. But it ain't just exac'ly honest, takin' money from my mine to pay a reward for catchin' me."

The sheriff chuckled. "Sonny—" he began. "No, Mistuh Doe. Mistuh John Doe, suh, when yuh seen as many women as I have, an' looked in as many sixguns as I have, yuh'll have more respec' for both kinds of artillery. Of the two, though, the ladies are a lot more devastatin'. Where do we go now, Sonny?"

"Little box canyon over that-away," said Sonny, waving his hand to give the direction. "When I got next to this li'l trick, sheriff, I swear I was tempted to horn in on it. It'd be so durned easy to stick up those fellers an' drive away with a load o' high grade! But like my great-grand-uncle once removed used to remark, a fat poke ain't any good to a yaller dawg. I didn't do it, sheriff, an' I'm feelin' virtuous."

He led the way while darkness deepened gradually and blotted out all their surroundings. At last, instead of dull black ramparts before them shutting out the sky, an opening appeared ahead and they gazed as if over the edge of the world into star studded space.

"Here's the stage road," said Sonny in a lowered tone. "The ore wagons come along here every mornin'. Mexican drivers. Moleville is six miles back, and the last three miles are all in the hills where there ain't anybody lookin'. The drivers, they kinda pick over their loads that three mile stretch. They've got near an hour. An' when they get here they just fling a li'l sack of high grade ore over the edge of the road. Come nightfall, why, frien' Garcia he comesalong with a wagon an' picks it up."

"H'm," said the sheriff grimly. "Sweet an' pretty, an' very simple. But why didn't somebody tell?"

Sonny dismounted and tapped his mount's knees with the flat of his hand. Gunpowder obediently lay down and was still.

"I met a Mexican," said Sonny abstractedly from the ground, "runnin' for the Border like a bat out o' hell. I made him talk, knowin' he'd been workin' at the mine. He'd told Tilford, hopin' for a reward. An' Tilford told him to keep his mouth shut. That night three of Garcia's men come an' pumped lead at him through a window. I let him keep movin' for the border. He kinda needed to lose himself."

"I see," said the sheriff gently. "Garcia, he's got him some Spiggoty gunman. Ore wagon drivers get a li'l pay for helpin' steal ore, an' get shot if they don't, or if they tell. That's all right as long as they go to Tilford. They don't come to me because no Mex wants to go foolin' around officers of the law. They generally got somethin' on their consciences. That's it, Sonny?"

"That's it," Sonny agreed. He paused. "Now, suppose a Mex went to Miss Laurier?"

"She'd tell Tilford," said the sheriff briefly.

"I kinda wish," said Sonny slowly, "that she hadn't come here. Tilford playin' snoops with Garcia—an' Garcia, he's run off with a coupla Mexican girls."

He said nothing more. But the sheriff made a sudden angry movement toward his gun.

Then the crunching sound of wagon wheels was heard. Came from a distance, rapidly growing nearer. With them was the sound of many horses. Suddenly the noises were near indeed and against the star studded space before the pair in wait a rider was silhouetted. Then another. The first of the riders plunged down the embankment of the road and vanished. Others followed. And then a bulky, heavy ore wagon appeared. There were mules hitched to it, and its bulk was clearly outlined against the sky, pricked out by the tiny stars and blue velvet heaven against which they twinkled.

There was laughter and sibilant talk in Spanish. Figures began to ascend to the road again, on foot, bearing burdens in their arms which they heaved into the waiting wagon.

"This here," drawled Sonny softly, "is about as much nerve as anybody livin' ever showed. I wouldn't like so much to have Garcia's disposition, but I sure would admire to own his gall."

The sheriff worked his rifle silently loose from its sheath. He stepped forward. "Han's up!" he barged, "or I'll blow holes in the lot of yuh!"

Sonny drew his own gun and stood ready, waiting for surrender or acceptance of the challenge. The answer came swiftly. One shot—two—and then the little traplike canyon in the hills seemed to be spouting flames from every stone and rock.

Two cowboys riding night herd on the Circle Bar heard the shooting first. It was a long way off, but coming nearer. One gun popped in the distance, unmistakably a black powder .45. It was answered by a rattle of shots that were lighter in calibre but that had the venomous ring of rifles. Far away and thin from the distance, the sound had traveled, there was a yell, and then more shooting.

Silence for a while. Then the popping .45 began again, to be interrupted in its third shot by the same wolf pack barking of rifles. It was nearer this time. The distant, muted thudding of horse's hoofs could be felt, rather than heard, in the cool stillness of the starlight night.

"What the hell?" demanded one cowboy of another.

The answer to that was action. They rode. Partly, of course, to head off an erruption of shooting men into the herd they guarded. Cattle are high-strung creatures after dark, and neither of the Circle Bar riders longed for the job of trying to get a stampeded and scattered herd together again. But mainly they rode because there was shooting, and it is the instinct of man to hunt up trouble and get into it.

They saw the yellow flash of the .45 this time, and the scattering flickers of answering fire.

"Sonny Holman," grunted the first Circle Bar rider. "Dawggone!"

Sonny set up a wild yelling, designed to carry all the way to the ranch-house. "White folks! Comin'! Trouble on my heels!" he yelled. His gun boomed again and again.

"When Sonny hollers like that," said the second rider briefly, "he ain't runnin' from the sheriff. We mix in." They swooped alongside, guns out, the starlight glinting on their muzzles.

Sonny covered them and swung his muzzle away. "Garcia's gang," panted Sonny. "Plugged the sheriff. Grab him an' get him to the ranch-house while I wade into them coyotes back there."

Boom! He fired behind him, into the bunched riders who rode yelling in his wake. Two other guns instantly took up the fusilade, and while one single-action Colt may not do overmuch damage by starlight, from the back of a plunging horse, and at a target made indefinite by distance, three exactly similar Colts sending stabs of orange flame from the muzzles are a different proposition entirely. The yelling from behind changed in timbre. From exultation and threat, it rose to rage.

Ashamed

A certain firm had the following legend printed on its salary receipt forms:

"Your salary is your personal business, and should not be disclosed to anyone."

Motor Hints

Protection For Bearings

Motorists should beware of binding that may ruin bearings. After the bearing has been adjusted the front wheel should spin freely and there should be a bit of sideplay.

Oiling Windshield Cleaner

Use a special tube when oiling the windshield cleaner. Trying to pull oil through the regular hose connection on the vacuum wiper is a good means of shortening its life. Oil has that effect upon rubber.

Care of Radiator Core

Poking the dirt or dead insects out of the radiator core is a temptation. It is better, however, to lift the hood and put the hose behind the radiator and force any mud or dirt out of the core.

Select Water For Battery

Water may look clear and "feel" soft but that is no excuse for using it in a battery regardless of what a motorist may think. It is what may be dissolved in the water that does the harm.

Turn Signal Urged

Motorists are urged not to forget to signal when turning out of a main highway.

Remedy for Steering Lock

Pressure will make the steering-gear lock hard to unlock at times. A simple remedy is to turn the steering wheel slightly and the drag on the lock plunger will be relieved.

Insect Mimics

Mimicry in insects, that is, the trick of looking like a dangerous or ill-tasting species or of camouflaging oneself as a leaf or twig, is not the prop of evolution it was once thought to be, according to W. L. McAtee, of the bureau of biological survey, U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Beetles are taken as one example of the failure of various protective devices. Some of them are mimics. Others have powerful, ill-smelling secretions which are supposed to repel their enemies. Still others have hard shells. Yet the birds eat them all.

The sting-armed family of bees, ants and wasps fare no better. The birds eat the "stingers,' 'and they eat also the unarmed ones that mimic the "stingers" in appearance. And the birds are joined by ground-dwelling animals: toads, mice, foxes, weasels, bargers, skunks and bears, which make victims of these supposedly most powerfully-armed members of the insect clan.

Nor are insects the only animals that are betrayed by the failure of the "armor wherein they trust." Even the rattlesnake is attacked and eaten by birds. And the skunk, expert par excellence in defensive chemical warfare, nevertheless frequently falls victim to the attack of the great horned owl.

Feminist Library

Paris—Mme. Marguerite Durand has been working for many months preparing her library as a gift to the City of Paris When it is opened this spring this will be the first feminist library in Paris, and as such it is expected to do much to help the cause of feminism in France. It consists mainly of books written by or about women, showing the progress of feminism throughout history. It also has a very complete system of classification, giving the titles of the most important books on this subject and the names of the public libraries at which these works may be consulted. Mme. Durand is particularly pleased because her library is to be housed in the new Mairie of the fifth "arrondissement" which is the Latin Quarter, thus enabling students to have free and easy access to it.

French Expedition to Seek Lost Sea of the Sahara

Algiers.—Somewhere in the vast and uncharted wastes of the Sahara Desert, a French scientific expedition is seeking traces of inland seas, along whose shores an unknown civilization once flourished.

Led by Professor Auguste Chevalier, of the Paris Natural History Museum, the expedition vanished into the desert below southern Algeria. Nothing may be heard of the explorers for months. Heading due southward, they will visit the principal oases of the central Sahara, gathering data.

Then, leading their camel train to the southwest, they will proceed to the River Niger. The next stage of their explorations will be a journey due east to Lake Chad. FFinally, continuing eastward, they will come back to civilization by way of the Sudan and Senegal.

When Chevalier visited the southern Sahara for the first time thirty-three years ago, he thought he saw indications that a sea, or several lakes, had once existed there. This theory was later substantiated by discoveries of sea shells and fossils of animals.

While seeking to confirm these suppositions, the expedition also will undertake practical research work. The expedition is under the patronage of the Ministry of Public Instruction, the Academy of Colonial Sciences and the colonial governments of Algeria and Occidental Africa.

In Childhood

It was a cold spring, the rain
Blew out of the hills, and the wind blew.
After a little it was quiet, then
Yellow as stars, on the twigs the new leaves grew,
And waxen as candles with a purple stain
Hyacinths blossomed in the icy sun.
It was a cold spring and long—but when
The pear trees flowered, summer had begun.

—Bertha Ten Eyck James in Poetry.

A Matrimonial Wood Pile

"Miss Ruth Birch yesterday became the bride of Mr. Arthur Oaks. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. S. Maples. Mr. and Mrs. Oaks left immediately after the ceremony for Hickory, N.C., where they will visit the bride's aunt, Mrs. Oscar Shingle. Upon their return they will board with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Forrest on Elm Street."

The unusual combination of names helped make the marriage of national prominence and of lasting interest to every one who read about it.

Ancients Believed Sneeze Sound of Departing Soul

The modern custom of saying "God Bless You," when someone sneezes, probably had its origin in the belief that primitive peoples that a sneeze was the sound made by the soul leaving or returning to the body, says Dr. Forrest Clements, of the University of California.

"Loss of the soul was considered to be an important cause of disease; so a sneeze might mean the beginning of a dangerous sickness unless a blessing from the gods was asked."

All the Winners

The vicar met the village reprobate wandering slowly in the churchyard.

"William," he said, "it is indeed a hopeful sign to observe you so often in this sequestered and contemplative spot where, doubtless, you will yet meet with some spiritual consolation."

William blinked.

"Well, no, sir. To tell you the truth I usually meets the bookie's runner 'ere."

"FATIGUE? I just postpone it!"

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others.

"Then I learned to rely on Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache is rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable the pain seldom returns!

Keep Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practice.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying Aspirin. Don't take a substitute because it will not act the same. Aspirin is made in Canada.

Plan For British Community Settlements in Canada

Hon. W. A. Gordon, Minister of Labor, has intimated that a policy of immigration must soon be started again in Canada because of the railway debt. "Whether we like it or not," he said, "if we are going to pay off that huge debt we must get over to the positive side of immigration as soon as possible. That opens up a serious problem as to where we are to get people who will be acceptable to this country, and who will be easily assimilated into our national life."

Among those who have given thought to the resumption of immigration is Brigadier-General M. L. Hornby, of the Hornby Farms, Lethbridge, Alberta. After 30 years of Empire service he came to Canada in 1924 to farm, develop and settle his properties. But he has found that the majority of those around him are not British. In Southern Alberta, where some of his properties lie, Central Europeans have constituted the bulk of the immigrants. New British settlers have been comparatively few. "Let me make it quite clear," he says, "that I am not out to knock the 'foreign' settlers. Far from it—I admire them as workers and colonizers; I can see how much they are doing to develop this Western country. Nor have I anything against the Government of Canada for admitting them, for I know that the Government has always offered every possible inducement and advantage to British migrants from England to come in and settle on her vacant lands. But the cold fact is that England has been too slow to take advantage of Canada's invitation and offers, whereas 'foreigners' have been quick to step in, and have eagerly acqired the good lands open to them."

General Hornby puts forward the following scheme of immigration: (a) The settlement of new British immigrants in Canada should be confined to the already developed and proven mixed-farm districts. (b) Any description of settlement by contract is a mistake. England has a direct responsibility for the settlement of her migrants in new homes overseas. She must shoulder this responsibility directly. (c) Migration and settlement should be carried out by Old Country communities—counties and towns—with the object of bringing into play the very strong county and town spirit, which exists through the United Kingdom—the "team spirit," which has stood us in good stead in important national and Empire causes in former days, and which is exactly what is needed to help new settlers over the first and most difficult years of their new life. (d) The communities, or the community organizations, sending out new settlers should be also responsible for establishing them o the land and for their "after-care' —that is to say for their agricultural supervision and financial support, if necessary, for the first two or three years, until they are thoroughly on their feet. (e) The new settlers should b established by their Old Country communities on these farms and small holdings, as tenants, not as owners. After having made good as tenants, the new settlers should be encouraged and assisted to move off and acquire farms of their own—thus making room for further relays of new settlers from the same Old Country community to occupy the vacated tenants-farms. In this way a continuous and automatic flow of new settlers will take place. (f) New settlers who fail to "make good" must be returned to the Old Country county or town which sent them out. It will therefore be in the interests of the Old Country town or county to send out to Canada only those who are likely to succeed.

General Hornby thinks that the approach of the Imperial Economic Conference is an appropriate time to invite attention to the unsatisfactory state of British settlement in Canada and to urge an imrovement in it.—The Mail & Empire, Toronto.

Threepence A Bunch

All the tradition of old London and Springtime is embodied in this delightful sketch and is particularly appropriate and will have special appeal now when Canadian fields are again feeling the touch of the sun's warmth.

At the crossroads of two busy arteries—one running down to the City, the other racing towards the heart of Kent—I waited for a friend who had invited me to share the stillness of the country with her for twenty-four hours.

Under the archway of an unfrequented door sat a rosy-faced old lady on a camp stool, at her feet a large, rough basket, still partially filled with daffodils.

"Daffodils, threepence a bunch. Fresh daffodils." She need not have told us they were fresh, for the whole air was pungent with that spring fragrance which fresh daffodils always bring with them.

"Threepence a bunch!" I said to myself. "Fancy getting all that gold for threepence!" And, even though I was actually on my way to the land of daffodils, I edged over to the archway and bought two bunches.

While she was wrapping them up a shrill voice behind piped: "Daffodils! I wonder how much!"

"Threepence a bunch," came the voice from the camp stool.

"Oh, Freddie! You buy a bunch for Mummy and I'll get a bunch for Dad."

In a moment one felt that spring had met spring! They seemed to be dancing with the daffodils and sunbeams! Two diminutive pocket-books flashed out and pennies were counted; then off up the street frolicked the daffodils.

A workman passed with his bag of tools; passed, but turned and came back.

"How much are they, Missus?"

"Threepence a bunch."

He laid down his tools gently, fumbled for his threepence, found it, and smilingly took his sheaf of gold.

"Daffodils, threepence a bunch. Fresh daffodils," sang the rosy-faced old lady.

A couple wandered over to the archway, the young man taking a bunch out of the basket. I felt as he gazed at them that he was seeing much more than a handful of daffodils. He asked the price.

"Threepence a bunch."

"Oh, Ernest!" protested his sweet little helpmeet, "dont spend money on unnecessary things. We must save if we want to have a home of our own."

"I feel that they are necessary," he replied quietly, and picked out two lovely bunches which she took reluctantly. How I longed to tell her that he was building their home by buying those daffodils!

Then a girl came along, who might have been considered smart. Her hat looked like Paris, and everything else was in keeping with her hat.

"How much are the daffodils?" she said in a voice which sounded like pent-up streams let loose. "And how many bunches have you got?"

The old lady counted her remaining treasures slowly: "Threepence a bunch, and there are seven bunches," she said, smiling.

"I always take a bunch home on Saturday myself," she added.

"I'll take all that you can let me have," said the smart girl.

The old lady had come to the end of her wrapping paper, so the girl held the daffodils on her arm. I had no idea until that moment how becoming daffodils could be!

And now the old lady was folding her camp stool, and picking up her basket with its one solitary bunch of daffodils. I should like to have spoken to her, for I felt in a vague way that she was doing her bit for humanity—and had helped me to go ahead and do mine—but at that moment a cheery voice rang out. It was my friend calling from her car, so I turned and scrambled in beside her.

As we drove away, I looked back. The old lady was starting, too. Over her arm was the rough basket and camp stool, but in her other hand she clasped her bunch of daffodils. Our eyes met and we smiled to one another.. I felt she understood, for she stood there smiling and waving her bunch of daffodils till we were out of sight.—S. F. C.

Sunday School Lesson

April 17. Lesson III—The Call of Abram—Genesis 12: 1-9. Golden Text—Thou shalt be a blessing.—Genesis 12: 2.

ANALYSIS.

I. THE CALL, vs. 1-3.

II. THE CALL OBEYED, vs. 4-6.

III. WANDERING AND WORSHIPPING, vs. 6-9.

INTRODUCTION—The book of Genesis opens with stories of the beginnings of mankind as a whole, but quickly narrows its interest to the family springing from Noah's son, Shem, of whom Abram was regarded as a lineal descendant. It treats history genealogically. When Abram is reached, the story expands to considerable length because he was regarded not only as the first patriarch of the nation, but as the ideal Israelite. His faith in God, his ready obedience to God's will, his generosity, his love of peace and his noble bearing under trying circumstances—all this fitted him to become a bright and shining light to remote generations. He has been called "the Father of the Faithful." A pioneer in the exercise of faith, he taught men by living example how to practice it. There are many New Testament references to Abram. He is honored by Jews, Mohammedans and Christians.

I. THE CALL, vs. 1-3.

At the outset of his career Abram lived among people who neither knew nor worshipped the true God, and he was himself, perhaps, little better than his neighbors. How God's call came to him we do not know, but come it did with a heavy demand. He was required to leave his native Ur (15: 7) in southern Babylonia, with its sure prosperity and advanced civilization, and to break the ties that held him to his kindred. We, in our ordered society, can scarcely realize what this meant for him. In his turbulent age, to separate oneself from one's clan was to expose oneself to hostile tribes and to be without protection in a war-like world. Further, God called him away from home without indicating at first his destination. He had merely the promise of divine guidance —"I will shew thee." It required great faith to obey so difficult a call. Now faith is never aimless; it does not operate in a vacuum. It serves a purpose, and the greater the faith the loftier the purpose. God's purpose with Abram was to isolate him from his old, idolatrous environment in order, through him, to found a new order—a nation great, because it would be the bearer of the divine revelation. This sounds like national egotism, but its offensive feature is offset by a wide universalism. Through Abram and his descendants the blessing of God would flow out to all the nations of the earth. At any rate, the severity of God's command is more than compensated for by the promise of rich ward for the obedience of faith.

II. THE CALL OBEYED, vs. 4-6.

Without question or complaint Abram responded to God's call. At the age of seventy-five most men would wish to settle down comfortably, but here was one willing to pioneer! Such faith is infectious; it draws others into its company. It is not surprising, therefore, that a considerable number, chiefly of relatives, followed Abram out of Ur. Nothing is told us of the long and hazardous journey across the desert which stretches between Babylonia and the land of Canaan, but in estimating Abram's obedience this should not be forgotten. On the way to Canaan a stop seems to have been made for some time at Haran, in the north-west of Mesopotamia, which probably formed a regular resting-place for caravans on the great trade route.

III. WANDERING AND WORSHIPPING, vs. 6-9.

Abram did not come to an unoccupied country. It had long been inhabited by a people known as Canaanites, who had attained a fairly high civilization, but were, of course, worshippers of strange gods. Abram traversed the country, remaining for some time in the two important towns, Shechem and Bethel. He had not left his home in Ur for worldly gain, and hence he did not seek it in Canaan. What he sought was the opportunity to worship God. This opportunity he seized at Shechem and Bethel, both of which had long been shrines for Canaanitic worship. The higher faith of Abram was thus to displace eventually the lower faith of the Canaanites at places which from ancient times had had sacred associations. Not until he had arrived in Canaan did he know that this was the promised land (v. 7) but it was not yet his. His life in Canaan was well-rounded. In v. 8 we learn that he pitched his tent, thus setting up family life; he had Bethel on the west and Hai on the east, and so entered into social relations; he builded an altar, nurturing his religious life. The family, the community and the Church were all benefited by him.

"The danger in going away into a strange life does not have to do with geography. It is not that a man is in danger in a different land. It is that he is in danger of becoming a different man. A good deal which we consider a part of our deepest life is just the reflection of our surroundings. When we change our surroundings it is startling and disconcerting to watch the change in ourselves. We can be stronger than any strange environment if we build an altar to God wherever the sun rise in the morning and wherever the sun sets at night." —Lynn Harold Hough.

"DeBore called on you last evening! I suppose you didn't get a chance to open your mouth."

"Oh, yes I did, I yawned several times."

Fiddlesticks

It was at an orchestral concert, and after gazing for some time at the bass fiddle player a man in the stalls muttered, "He'll never do it; he'll never do it."

At length the title of the first number was announced, whereupon the mutterer continued his remark, louder each time.

This was too much for a man in the row in front, and eventually he turned and said, angrily, "Confound you and your mutterings, sir!"

"Well, he can't do it, I tell you. I'll bet you he can't!" was the reply.

"Can't do what?"

"Put that big fiddle under his chin."

Experiments With Cancer Promising, Says Anatomist

London. — Experiments being conducted here by a young man may lead ultimately to control of cancer, Sir Arthur Keith, famous anatomist, revealed recently.

"This young man really has got hold of something big towards control of growth," Sir Arthur said. "He is working with parathyroid extract, with which he experiments on animals and can develop or retard the growth as he wishes."

Sir Arthur did not reveal the man's name, but sai he was working secretly in specially constructed laboratories on top of the Royal College of Surgeons.

U.S. Air Manoeuvers Face Economy Cut

Washington.—This year's manoeuvres of the Army Air Corps may be canceled to save money.

War Department officials said they had been discussing manoeuvre plans, but had not reached a decision. Indications point, they added, either to cancellation or great curtailment.

Fox Farm Started in Chile

Magallanes, Chile.—A valuable consignment of 14 silver foxes has arrived here from Hamburg. The importer, Herr Gustav Icken, who intends to start the first experimental fox farm in Chilean Patagonia, has selected for the site "Los Robles," in the neighborhood of Rio Seco.

Denmark to Banish Solid-Tired Vehicles

Copenhagen. — Solid rubber-tired motor vehicles are to be prohibited on the roads of Denmark after 1934 by a law which has been passed here following experiments with different kinds of wheels coverings and road materials.

Toronto-Detroit Air Mail To Continue Service

Ottawa. — Temporary continuation of the Toronto-Detroit air mail service has been decided by the post office department, and instructions to this effect have been issued. The Winnipeg-Edmonton route has been cut off, but it is anticipated the other service will not be touched.

News Oddities

Man Commits Suicide By Swallowing Savings

Lyons, France.—Jean Collier, 42, attempted to commit suicide and take his money with him.

He succeeded in killing himself by swalowing his life savings which consisted of several 1,000, 100, 10 and 5 franc notes.

An autopsy was performed and the notes were recovered.

Lonely Heath Hen Bachelor To Be Provided With Mate

Oak Bluffs, Mass.—The last health hen in the world, after four years of presumably carefree bachelorhood on quaint Martha's Vineyard, is to be provided with a mate.

His bride will be a Wisconsin prairie chicken, the finest ornithologists can find in their effort to preserve as many of his characteristics as possible.

Dr. Alfred O. Cross of Bowdoin College, foremost authority on the heath hen, has consented to supervise the nuptials, which necessarily will be hurried because the mating season already has begun.

The heath hen—he is called a hen although a male—is the last of his once plentiful species wich inhabited the eastern coast from Maine to Virginia. The guns of hunters reduced his numbers to a small flock which found refuge on Martha's Vineyard. Forest fires there further destroyed the species until only three could be found on the island in 1917. Two of these died and since 1928 there has been but one heath hen left in the world. Natives have reported seeing him within the last week.

Only an ornithologist can tell the difference between a heath hen and a prairie chicken.

Deaf in Gotham Plug-In and Hear at Theatre

New York.—A row of seats for the deaf, wired from microphones hidden on the stage, has been installed at a local theatre.

The play-goer may plug-in his own instrument or rent one at the box office, adjust the ear-pieces and hear everything, the League for the Hard of Hearing, Inc., have announced.

Voting On Mountain Top

Of the thousands and thousands of polling booths which were used throughout the German Reich during the presidential election, there was one which occupied a unique position because of its altitude. This was the booth which had been established on the top of the Zugspitz Mountain, near the terminus of the recently constructed cog railway from Garmisch-Partenkirchen, at a height of over 8500 feet above sea level. Undoubtedly there were a number of people who, in order to make the ascent of the Zugspitz on the day of the presidential election (which like all election days in Germany, was on a Sunday) left Munich too early in the morning to go to the poll in the Bavarian capital, but who were thus afforded an opportunity of recording their vote amid the snow-covered peaks of Germany's loftiest mountain.

"How long have they been married?"

"About five years."

"Did she make him a good wife?"

"No, but she made him an awfully good husband."

FAITH.

The union of profound knowledge with divine faith, and the recognition and perception of their unity, is the mind's first step within the domain of truth, and of the consciousness of it; or, rather, the first step in that gradation by which the mind and consciousness advance towards verity.

When is a pie like a poet?—When it's browning.

The Archdeacon has a very inspiring message. His work is very successful; just recently has had two hospitals, the Panguirtung on Baffinland and the Aklavik, at the mouth of the Mackenzie River, with a staff of fine nurses, established and fully equipped. There are 24 missions and out-stations under his supervision, which are well manned with a splendid staff. You must not miss hearing the Archdeacon on Sunday morning.

Tuesday, at 8 p.m., service for the Deanery. Speaker, Rt. Rev. Dr. Hallam, Bishop of Saskatchewan.

On Friday evening at 7.15, a service with Missionary views on the Arctic will be given in the Hall. As this covers the work of Archdeacon Fleming it will be instructive to have some information before hand. There will also be a set of humorous views presented. All are invited.

On Tuesday evening, April 19th, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Hallam, Bishop of the Diocese of Saskatchewan, will be the special preacher at a service in the church, which will be representative of the Deanery of Peel, to which the clergy and laity are being asked to attend. Dr. Hallam is one of the four Western Bishops, who are making a tour of the East in connection with the conditions and call of the West. Only last autumn he was made Bishop of this great territory, but spent many years in the West. You should hear these two great leaders.

LET US SMILE

Biding His Time

They had new neighbors and the wife was much interested in them. In a few days she reported:

"They seem a most devoted couple, John. He kisses her every time he goes out, and even waves kisses to her from the sidewalk. Why don't you do that?"

"Why don't I?" replied John. "Good heavens, I don't even know her yet."—Boston Transcript.

Children Enrolled in Old English Colleges

A curious possibility of the turning of the wheel is suggested by the plea which is being made for an earlier entry into the universities, partly in order that distressed modern parents may be relieved a little earlier of the cost of maintenance of sons and, presumably, daughters. It is true that at present boys enter the university at an age when, over a long period, they would have been ready to leave. John Milton had only just passed his fifteenth birthday when he went up from St. Paul's school to Cambridge, and he was nineteen when he took his bachelor degree. Sir John Denham was sent to Oxford at sixteen, though he seems to have behaved himself there very much after the fashion of some young fellows who have matriculated at a later age, for the future poet is described as a "dreaming young man, given more to dice and cards than study." But even fifteen or sixteen, which seems very early to us, would have seemed very late to the authorities of an earlier age, when "thousands of boys, huddled in bare lodging houses, clustering round teachers as poor as themselves, in church porch and house porch" took the place of "the brightly colored train of doctors and heads." It was in those days that scholars like "Edmund Rich, archbishop of Canterbury and saint in later days, came to Oxford, a boy of twelve years." The most ardent advocates of change would scarcely advocate a return to those days.—Manchester (England) Guardian.

Demand for Ambergris Greater Than Supply

Treasure trove was recently thrown up on a Pacific coast beach in the form of a piece of ambergris; at least that was what its finders called it. Ambergris, always scarce and now even scarcer, has been a coveted possession for centuries in view of the high price it commands. It has figured in history and in fiction, and from time to time it has brought a measure of wealth to those who have been fortunate enough to find a piece of it.

This strange substance comes either from the stomach or the intestines of the sperm whale and frequently contains the beaks of cuttlefish, on which the whale feeds. It is a grayish substance, often mottled with darker streaks. Whalers after a kill sometimes found large pieces of it floating in the water. Long ago chemists discovered that ambergris could be melted in boiling alcohol and used in the manufacture of perfumes. Hence it became a valuable commodity. It is much rarer than it used to be, because of the scarcity of sperm whales. In the early days of American whaling the sperm whale was plentiful, ranging into the North Atlantic for its food.

Ruins of Old Roman City

Timgad is a ruined city, 23 miles southeast of Batna, in the department of Constantine, Algeria. Timgad, the Thamugas of the Romans, was built on the lower slopes of the northern side of the Aures mountains, and was situated at the intersection of six roads. The auditorium of the theater, which held nearly 4,000 persons, is complete. A little west of the theater are baths, containing paved and mosaic floors in perfect preservation. Ruins of other and larger thermae are found in all four quarters of the city, those on the north being very extensive. There are the remains of seven churches. Numerous inscriptions have been found on the ruins and from them many events in the history of Thamugas have been learned. Thamugas passed from history after the defeat of Gregorius, governor of Africa, by the Arabs in 647.

Road Versus Rail

It is now many years since the expresses of the railway companies running England to Scotland services used to race against each other, and there is today very little "sporting interest" in connection with trains. On the continent, a new form of railway racing was growing up some time ago, racing cars being run against expresses. This road versus rail racing is now discouraged in Europe. However it is catching on so much in New Zealand that a recent race between a car and the Wellington-to-Auckland train was broadcast throughout the country. The race took place at night and, despite the handicap of bad and very hilly roads, the car won by half an hour.

Had Daughter's Sympathy

Iris had been sitting with an absorbed look on her face, gazing at her father.

"Why did you marry mother, dad?" she suddenly said.

"Because I was a fool, I suppose," he replied.

"Poor Mums," said Iris softly.

"What do you mean, miss?" asked father sharply.

"I mean that it was sad for mother to marry a fool, dad," explained Iris seriously.

Ray Baths for Horses

Race horses and dogs are being treated with artificial sunlight just before they go on the track in England. Some stalls are fitted with four powerful lights, and in the rays from these the animals stand quietly while taking their "baths." Among those in the know the sunbath is considered a factor when deciding racing odds.

First Quarterly Report of Childrens Aid Society ending March 31, 1932

A large number of complaints have been received during the winter months, with 47 investigations, many due to the lack of employment of the wage earner. It is impossible to take action under the Children's Protection Act in the majority of these cases as the object of the Society is to keep families together in their own homes. Assistance is given when possible to improve home conditions.

Four children have been committed to the care of the Society, two permanent and two temporary. 4 wards placed in free foster homes. 23 children under the care of the society in the shelter at the present time.

There are a number of fine boys in the shelter ranging in age from 5 to 10 years. We need your assistance in procuring homes where they will have the care and affection which is their just due.

Here and There

To day we heard one man say "I would like to see this question asked in the local paper, Who is going to pay for this special audit of the village books?" To this we would say that we have never refused to publish letters to the Editor, provided they are signed by the writer. But writers of letters for publication should not expect the publisher to take the responsibility for any statements they might make. We wonder if there is one ratepayer of Streetsville interested enough in his municipality to write a letter to the press and express his convictions on municipal matters.

A short time ago, the Ratepayers Committee held a meeting and asked the Council to suspend the work on the old town hall and call a public meeting to discuss the financial condition of the village. The meeting was never called. We asked the Reeve why it wasn't, and he said—The work won't cost as much as was reported to the Ratepayers Committee, we have the majority of the electors behind us and we are not worrying about what might happen next January.

The Ratepayers Committee met again last night and discussed municipal matters.

The Village Council has made a new agreement with the C. P. R. for supply of water at the rate of $600 per year. The former rate was $750.00 per year. The Railway threatened to pump their own water if the Council would not reduce the rate.

Can't PLAY Can't REST
—child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

CASTORIA

The Lone Scout Dog Show

It sounds like a very ambitious undertaking to hold a show for the pets of the Lone Scouts of Ontario, scattered as they are all over the province. But when operated on the lines which have been circulated to the Lonies, it is not such a big task after all. You see, like a great deal of the activity of the Lone Scout Department, this "Show" is being held by mail!

There are three classes, and any dog can be entered, irrespective of his pedigree (if he has one) or color or size.

The Lonies have been asked to write an essay of not more than 200 words, describing their dog, stating all particulars about him, such as his size, color, what tricks he can do, what work he can do, why he is specially fitted to be a Lone Scout Dog, and why his owner particularly likes him.

That is Class One, and prizes will be awarded for the best dogs, judged from their master's description.

Class Two has prizes for the best worded, written and arranged essay, so that if "Fido" does not win a prize, perhaps his master will be more lucky and get one instead.

Class Three is for the best snapshots received of a Lone Scout in Uniform with his Lone Scout Dog.

Quite a unique method of holding a Dog Show, isn't it?

Don't forget, Lonies, entries must be in not later than Saturday, April 9th.

A Prominent Canadian's Tribute to Baden Powell

Read what the Hon. Lieut.-Col. J. H. Woods, Managing Director of the "Calgary Herald" and Provincial Commissioner of the Boy Scouts of Alberta stated at a Baden Powell birthday banquet:

"No individual man has exerted such a world-wide influence for good on such a vast number of people of all nations as Lord Baden-Powell. His name and example will be remembered when the memory of many of his compeers has faded into oblivion. It is indeed a privilege for any man or woman to be associated with such a movement."

Any full-blooded boy should be proud to be a Boy Scout, and there is plenty of opportunity and room in the ranks of the Lone Scouts for boys who wish to join the movement.

This Week's Scout Law

No. 3—A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others.

At his initiation as a Scout, every boy promises his Scoutmaster that, among other things, he will "Help other people at all times." Thus it will be seen that one of the keynotes of the Scout Programme is "Service." to put oneself to inconvenience, and

To help someone else often means thus the spirit of unselfishness is fostered. We all know what a miserable type is that person who is always too lazy to do anything for another, or who only offers help in the expectation of reward.

But the Scout should always be on the lookout for an opportunity to assist. He should have no time to be lazy, and of course he helps just because he is a Scout, and has no thought of reward.

In useful activity a contented mind is born. Discontent is only found amongst the lazy and amongst those who have nothing to occupy their time, and Boy Scouts are not to be found in this latter category.

The Scout Programme is essentially one of activity, and the boy who follows it thoroughly will soon find that this duty of being useful and helping others will turn into a very pleasant pastime.

Scout World Meet to Boost Hungary

Hungarians predict that Godollo, near Budapest, will earn a place in history alongside Arrowe Park, England, when the fifth world gathering of Boy Scouts is held there next year. They are counting upon the presence of Canadian Scouts.

Lone Scouting is open to boys who cannot join a regular Troop, and is intended primarily for those living on rural routes in small villages. The programme is carried on through the mail, and Lone Scouts are in constant touch with experienced Scout Leaders who assist them in every way possible. The "Lonies" have opportunities to pass tests and obtain badges, and to attend Scout Rallies and Camps just as the city Scouts do, and Scouting provides for them a congenial, instructive and healthful spare time activity, which will help them to fit themselves for their place in life after they are grown up.

Particulars may be obtained from The Boy Scouts Association, Lone Scout Department, 330 Bay Street, Toronto 2.—"Lone E."

Made Most Important Contribution to Mining

Victoria, B.C.—C. P. Browning, general manager of the Britannia Mines, on the Howe Sound, has been awarded the Randolph Bruce Gold Medal for 1931 for the most important contribution to Canadian mining during the year. The award, made annually through the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy, was announced at the annual meeting of the Institute in Montreal.

It was presented to Mr. Browning as a result of the efficiency through which he reduced operation costs in the recovery and treatment of low-grade ores, establishing new records, and incidentally keeping about 2,000 men at work during a period of depression.

North Bay is Assured of an $80,000 Arena

North Bay.—North Bay now has definite asurance that a modernly esuipped and commodious arena will be provided before next winter. It will be equipped with an artificial ice plant. The approximate cost of the new building will be $80,000. Tentative plans approved by the committee call for a structure with hollow tile walls and an area of 128 by 236 feet. The ice area will measure 80 by 180 feet, and seating accommodation will be provided for 3,500 or 4,000, with standing room for an additional 600 or 700 persons. The committee in charge is: L. S. Clark, chairman; Mayor J. W. Richardson, Alderman A. T. Smith, H. B. Nichols, J. L. Gaudreau, and S. J, Cherry.

London Theatres Bemoan Departure of Old Splendour

London—Guide books used to say that you could see Londoners at their best in the theatre.

A brilliant, polished gathering of women resplendently gowned and men meticulous in evening clothes—that was the picture they drew of a theatre audience.

Alas, they draw it no more. A Londoner nowadays does not hesitate to dash for the theatre in his plus-fours, if he feels so inclined. Now Londoners are trying to bring back the evening dress habit.

Autogiro Minus Wings Flies Like a Bullet

London.—Senor Juan de la Cierva, Spanish inventor of the autogiro, was reported recently to have perfected a machine much like the autogiro, except that it is without wings, and to have made several flights in it.

The flying machine, which is now at Hamble Airdrome, Eng., is one of the first of the heavier-than-air type without wings. It was described as capable of bullet-like velocity, getting up and alighting in a remarkably short landing space, and descending safely and gently, like a parachute.

Technical Education Grants To Five Provinces

Ottawa.—Technical education in five provinces was aided by Government grants during the fiscal year 1930-31 to the extent of $391,397. Information placed on the table of the House of Commons revealed that the provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan had received federal assistance in technical training.

Put Advertising Dollar Back Into Circulation

Chicago—The hoarded advertising dollar should be the first to be put back to work, Melvin L. Straus, vice-president of the Straus National Bank, said recently.

Straus said firms doing business with the bank would be urged to maintain advertising appropriations at normal levels. Daily newspaper advertising was recommended by Straus as the best medium with which to stimulate buying.

Lindbergh Pays $50,000 Ransom Is Swindled — One Man Arrested

Child Was to be Delivered "at a Designated Spot, in a Reasonable Time," But Time Goes by With No Word From Kidnappers and No Return of Babe—Banks Warned of Bill Numbers

Hopewell, N.J.—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh last Monday paid out to his baby son's kidnappers, "properly identified as such," the sum of $50,000 for the return of the missing child at a given point. The child was not returned.

This amazing swindle was described at the Lindbergh home here Sunday night as "the most discouraging and tragic event" since little Charles Augustus, Jr., was stolen from his crib on the night of March 1.

One man, declared by police to be a "noted character," is under arrest, his identity undisclosed; he is said to have been named by an informant as having been connected with the kidnapping.

Reports that the kidnappers had offered to return the $50,000 and the baby in exchange for another $50,000 in different coinage were denied at the Lindbergh home.

Expect One More Demand

New York.—New York criminologists, basing their speculation on the known details of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh's payment of $50,000 to the supposed kidnappers of his son, believe the criminals will make at least one more demand for ransom.

They believed the kidnapped child is alive and well cared for.

They believe the fact that the United States treasury has given widespread publicity to the numbers on the ransom bank notes absolutely ends the possibility of bargaining on the basis of that currency.

They think there may be a new effort to establish contact, with the possible stipulation that the "next payment" be made in gold, or bullion which cannot be traced.

Baby Not At Spot Designated

Not until he had waited several days and had lost hope that the kidnappers would fulfill their part of the agreement, did Lindbergh make use of the numbers of the bills, forwarding the list to the treasury, which in turn notified the nation's banks.

At least one man in New York, Dr. John F. Condon, still believes the kidnappers will eventually keep faith. Their failure to return the baby, he feels, is because they are afraid of possible traps.

Dr. Condon, whose mysterious advertisements in New York newspapers signed "Jafsie," led to the Lindbergh contact with the kidnappers, admitted Sunday that he had not been approached first by Col. Lindbergh, and that he had operated alone and independently.

Long Week-End With Pay Follows Salary Increase

San Francisco—Having given his employees two pay increases in the last year "because business is so good with us," Mr. Roman C. Pell Jr., president of the Pelican Paper Company here, now announces the establishment of an alternate five-day week in his plant, with no cut in salaries.

The first increase was granted last May. There was another last January. Beginning the first Saturday in May, half of his employees, Mr. Pell said, would be given the day off. The next Saturday the other half will have the day to themselves. In a letter to employees announcing the change, Mr. Pell said.

"Last year your company was prosperous. Let's keep it so."

Austrian Starts Industry From "Waste" Fruit

Budapest—A visitor arrived in Hungary 10 years ago with only 100 crowns in his pocket. He found fresh fruit prices so abnormally low that fruit was left to rot on the trees.

The Austrian visitor saw his opportunity. He gathered the fresh ripe fruit from beneath the trees in the Kecskemat district, and experimented with various methods of drying it. Today he has a factory employing more than 300 workers, and his dried fruits are exported to Germany, Scandinavia and England. He now includes dried vegetables among his products.

Registration Drops For Autos in Canada

Ottawa.—For the first time, the registration of motor vehicles in Canada showed a decrease in 1931, the total for all classes being 1,206,836 as against 1,239,888 for 1930, a decrease of 33,052 vehicles or 2.7 per cent.

A report issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows passenger automobile registrations decreased from 1,047,494 cars in 1930 to 1,024,385 last year. The decrease in new registrations was very heavy while renewal of registrations showed increases in every province, indicating old cars were retained in service.

Thefts of Cars in Paris Are Rated at 4½ a 1,000

Thefts of automobiles in Paris amounted to 2,394 cars in 1931, according to a report received from H. C. Schuette, United States Trade Commissioner. Of this number 1,416 were recovered by the police, leaving 978, or a proportion of four and a half cars per 1,000 of the 220,000 cars in circulation in Paris not recovered. Out of the 180,000 cars registered in Paris, in 1930, there were 700 vehicles which vanished or 3.87 per 1,000.

Prince of Wales' Horse is Champion

Buy Canadian

Le Droit, Ottawa: To buy a Canadian product in preferance to a foreign product, price and suality being equal, is not merely an act of patriotism but one of a practical business man. Unfortunately we do not think of this enough. We thus deprive our fellow-countrymen of work by our thoughtlessness.

Tax Summary

Ottawa.—Below is given the tax changes which were announced by Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, in his speech in the House of Commons, whereby the revenue will be increased $55,000,000 to balance the budget:

Sales tax increased from four per cent. to six per cent. A limited number of articles, not primary products now exempt, are made subject to the sales tax. The sales tax changes are effective April 7.

Excise tax on all goods imported into Canada increased by two per cent. New rate three per cent.

Income Taxes

The personal exemption in income taxes is reduced, for those with dependents, from $3,000 to $2,400, and those without dependents, from $1,500 to $1,200.

The 20 per cent. reduction now allowed from tax payable under established schedule of rates is discontinued.

In addition, five per cent. surcharge on the amount of tax payable is to be imposed on all taxpayers, personal and corporate, with net incomes in excess of $5,000.

The corporation rate is increased to 11 per cent. Provisions relating to family corporations will be repealed.

Income tax changes will apply to taxes on the 1931 income.

Insurance Taxes

The tax of one per cent. on premiums received by insurance companies, except life, marine, and certain forms of mutual fire companies, is re-imposed. British and foreign companies, maintaining deposits with the Dominion, will also pay this tax. Tax of 15 per cent. is imposed on gross premiums paid to other insurers.

Cheque Taxes

On cheques, money orders over $5 and on promisory notes, bills of exchange, etc., the rate is increased from two cents to three cents on amounts up to $100, and six cents over $100.

A five cent tax is placed on telegrams, cables and radio messages, and long distance telephone calls.

On railway sleeping car berths, the tax will be 10 per cent. with a minimum of 25 cents, and 10 cents on chair car tickets.

These special taxes on cheques, tickets and messages will become effective May 2.

In view of the near approach of the Imperial Conference, the Minister stated, no change is made in customs tariff, except on one item relating to extension to March 31, 1933, of special rates on repair parts for farm implements.

Central-America to Have New Short-Wave Station

Eagle, Pass, Tex.—Short-wave programs from Central America soon will be broadcast from new 50,000-watt radio station to be built at Villa Fuente, three miles from Piedras Negras.

Permit for the $75,000 station has been secured. Two 300-foot towers, similar to those at XER, Dr. J. R. Brinkley's station in Villa Acuna, Coahuila, will be erected. Studios will be maintained at Piedras Negras and Eagle Pass.

Manitoba to Ontario Highway is Completed

Winnipeg.—The trans-Canada highway east from Whitemouth, Man., to the Ontario boundary has been completed. The formal opening of the 45-mile stretch to Keno will take place with appropriate ceremonies on Dominion Day, July 1, under the auspices of the Manitoba and Ontario Governments.

Driving Manners

With the promise of Spring in the air and the consequent unpleasant conditions underfoot, it becomes once more necessary to remind drivers of automobiles that they owe it to the public and to their own reputation to give some consideration to pedestrians who may be waiting on the sidewalks, particularly at street corners.

How often on a dirty day do we see automobiles driven recklessly through pools of water, or mud, or slush, sending up streams of filth and simply splashing pedestrians from head to foot, ruining furs and dresses, and making overcoats look as if they had been rolled in the street.

There is not the slightest excuse for this. Indeed, if people would only strive to follow up such cases and secure the names of the drivers, there might be a considerable reduction in the number of such drivers. They are worse than reckless—they are absolutely forgetful of the rights of others and they show not the slightest conception of what decent conduct means.—Toronto Star.

Message Over the Phone Recorded by New Device

New York—If you would like to have your telephone answered while you are out—or even while you are in—there is a gadget that will do the trick. The Sound Engineering Corporation has announced an automatic telephone answering plan which employes the device now used for making personal phonograph records.

When the telephone bell rings an automatic arm takes the receiver off the hook and a tiny record starts to spin. The message is recorded thereon and when you come home just start the phonograph.

Rome to Raze Old Convent

Rome—The 400-year-old convent of the Mercedarians has been ordered demolished to aid in uncovering the ruins of the ancient Roman senate. The convent was built after the senate had been stripped of marble for use in erecting the Vatican palace.

STRUCK SPEECHLESS

It's pretty hard to get ahead of the youngsters. A teacher called for brief essays on "The funniest thing I ever saw." One boy got through several minutes before the others, and the teacher asked to see his effort. On this paper was written:

"The funniest thing I ever saw was too funny for words."—Boston Transcript.

Can Drought Be Predicted?

The drought in Southern Saskatchewan was so severe last year that scientists are beginning to make exhaustive studies of tree growth in relation to precipitation for the purpose of calculating cycles of dry and wet weather over long periods. Hon. J. F. Bryant, Minister of Public Yorks for that Province, and chairman of the Drought Commission, states that their efforts, up to date, have been remarkably effective in establishing sound data. If it could be discovered that the varying amount of annual rainfall is subject to some simple law, then drought conditions might be predicted and agriculture could be governed accordingly.—Mail and Empire, Toronto.

IMITATION.

It is by imitation, far more than by precept, that we learn everything, and what we learn thus, we acquire not only more effectually, but more pleasantly. This forms our manners, our opinions, our lives.—Burke.

Ancient Custom Continues

Mrs. Taylor and Mrs. Hull receive their Maundy money from the King at Westminster Abbey, London. According to custom, as many men and women as there are years in the King's age—67 this year—get money and an allowance in lieu of food and clothing.

Dog Show.

Big dogs, little dogs, smooth dogs, hairy dogs,
Gay dogs, dull dogs, devil-may-care-y dogs,
Yapping in their baskets, standing in a row;
See them all together at Cruft's dog show! . . .

One's got a first prize and one's been commended,
One's got nothing—he "does" look offended!
Don't they feel important? But of course they know
That only very posh ogs get to Cruft's dog show.
Father likes a big dog that says "Wuff, wuff"
Mother likes a wee dog that looks like a muff.
The children like a middle dog with ears just so,
And all of them are waiting at Cruft's dog show.

I know another dog, just the right size,
A bouncy little play-dog with bright brown eyes,
We think he's quite the nicest dog, as nice dogs go,
Although you'll not be seeing "him" at Cruft's dog show.

MINARD'S "KING OF PAIN" LINIMENT

ARTICLE No. 18

No matter how long you have played Auction or Contract, something novel and interesting always is coming up. There are no other card games that have their infinite possibilities and that is probably why they have retained the interest of the public over such a long period of time. Every hand is different and the bidding and play of each one is a separate and distinct problem. All that any writer or teacher can do is to point out the way and it is up to the player to adapt what he has learned to each particular hand. This, of course, is not easy, but, if a player is really serious and sincere in his desire to improve, there is no better way than by an analysis of various hands that bring out points of play and bidding that every one should thoroughly understand. The following hands came up in actual play and all during one evening. They are all novel, interesting and instructive:

Hand No. 1

Hearts—Q, 9, 8, 6, 5, 3
Clubs—8, 4

Hand No. 2

Hearts—8, 5
Clubs—7, 2
Diamonds—K, J, 9, 5, 2
Spades—Q, 8, 4, 3

Hearts—Q, 10, 9	Y
Clubs—A, Q, 10, 8, 6, 3	A	B
Diamonds—Q, 10, 7	Z
Spades—9

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one no trump, A bid two clubs, Y passed, B bid two no trump and all passed. Z opened the five of spades. A played the nine, Y the queen and B won the trick with the ace. B now led the king of clubs, followed with jack, winning the trick in A's hand with the queen. All followed so that the clubs are set up. B then led the ace of clubs. What should Y discard and why?

Hand No. 3

Hearts—10, 9, 7, 6, 4
Clubs—A, K, 10
Diamonds—A, Q, 10, 9

	Y
A		B
	Z

No score, first game. Z dealt and bid one spade and A passed. What should Y now bid with the foregoing hand and why, at either Auction or Contract?

Hand No. 4

	Y
A		B
	Z

Hearts—7
Clubs—Q
Diamonds—J, 10, 9, 4, 2
Spades—A, Q, 10, 9, 5, 3

No score and A B a game in. Z dealt and passed. A and Y passed and B bid one spade. Z bid two hearts, A two spades, Y three hearts and B three spades. Z now bid four hearts, A four spades and Y five hearts. B and Z passed. A doubled, and Y passed. What should B now bid and why, at either Auction or Contract?

Hand No. 5

Hearts—A	Y
Clubs—8, 4, 2	A	B
Diamonds—A, 5	Z
Spades—J, 9, 8, 7, 6, 4, 3

No score, rubber game. Z dealt and bid one spade. A passed, Y bid one no trump and B and Z passed. What should A bid with the foregoing hand and why, either at Auction or at Contract?

An analysis of the foregoing hands will be given in the next article. The way to obtain the best results from a study of these hands is to write out your own opinion in each instance and then compare your analysis with the writer's. Even if you don't agree, a comparison of his arguments and opinion with your own will prove invaluable. Every hand is selected because it brings out a principle of play or bidding that should be thoroughly understood by every player so an analysis is bound to be helpful.

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Chas. H. Fletcher
CASTORIA
CHILDREN CRY FOR IT

"NO CASE AS BAD AS MINE"

Now 77—and Fitter Than at 50

HAS TAKEN KRUSCHEN FOR 22 YEARS

"I have been 6 years thinking of writing these few lines. It may seem strange, but I have been watching the papers this last 6 years to see if there was any case as bad as mine has been. But I have not seen one. I used to have sick headaches and rheumatism as bad as could be. I could not walk without two sticks; could not walk round the table without holding on to it. That was when I was the other side of 50.

"Now, if I live till next March I shall be 77. I have taken Kruschen Salts for over 22 years, and I am in good health—better now than the other side of 50. I don't have any rheumatism—haven't had for several years. So if anyone can give Kruschen Salts a good name, I can. I don't feel any older now than I did at 50, and I can walk 4 miles an hour without any trouble."—T. L.

It is common knowledge that rheumatism is associated with an excess of uric acid in the system. Uric acid is composed of needle-like crystals, and the pain of rheumatism is caused by these "needles" settling down in the joints, muscles and tendons.

Kruschen is a powerful solvent of these torturing crystals. It swiftly dulls their sharp edges, then flushes them out of the system. Your pains ease; swellings subside, knotted joints become loose. Afterwards, the "little daily dose" of Kruschen so stimulates the liver and kidneys that regular and complete elimination is ensured. Your inside is kept clean. Mischievous uric acid never gets the chance to accumulate again.

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at all Drug Stores at 45c. and 75c. per bottle.

"I got here just in time"

Tom Walker's wife was taken ill so suddenly that there was no time to take her in to town, so Tom hurried to the telephone and called the doctor.

The doctor was out on his calls, but Tom finally located him at a neighbor's on the next concession and he came right over.

"It's pleurisy", the doctor, told Tom. "She'll be all right, but I got here just in time. It's lucky you have a telephone."

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

How It Works

One of childhood's choicest queries has ever been and ever will be: "How does it work?" and it seemed a wholly enthralling idea to two young passengers, who recently travelled from Nottingham, England, to Lemberg, Sask., when Engineer Fred Munt, of the Canadian Pacific Railway" invited them into the cab of his huge "2800" type locomotive. The young travellers were Walter and Willie Wilson, aged 12 and 10 years, who journeyed alone from their grandmother's home in the Old Country to join their mother. They crossed the Atlantic in the Canadian Pacific liner Montclare and the Dominion on C. P. R. lines, making many friends and seeing many absorbing sights en route. Picture shows the interested pair and their kindly tutor in a brief explanation of the mysteries of the gauges of the great engine. And what boy, either in Canada or England, would not envy them?

The Old and the New

The two models have been showing at the Chateau-de-Ramezay, Montreal, recently in an exhibition of a century of locomotives. Right, is the "Dorchester", operated in 1836 to 1850 on the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad between St. John's and La Prairie, Quebec, the first train to run in Canada. Left, is the 2800 type Canadian Pacific Railway locomotive, a model of the great machine that draws modern passenger trains across the Dominion. Comparison of the two locomotives will bring home the immense development in the past 100 years. The four driving wheels of the "Dorchester" were 48 inches in height. The six driving wheels of the 2300 type locomotive are 75 inches in height. Engine and tender weight of the "Dorchester" was just over 10,000 lbs; of the 2300 it is 648,300 lbs. Tractive force of the "Dorchester" is not given, but it must have been greatly less than the 45,000 lbs of the Canadian Pacific engine. Engine and tender of both locomotives had respectively eight wheels and twenty wheels. A further indication of the vast spread in operation values between the old and the new is seen in the figures of the latest and most powerful Canadian Pacific engine, the "8000" type, capable of pulling a freight train of 150 cars, or over a mile in length.

MINERALS TO EAT

Minerals are important as they are required to regulate the activities of the body, and to furnish materials for building body tissues.

The minerals in the diet have been likened to the oil which is used in machinery, as they act as lubricators and promote the smooth running of the various bodily processes. It is, for example, from the minerals that the digestive juices and other secretions obtain the acidity or the alkalinity necessary for their functioning.

We know that we should eat a balanced diet, one which provides the body with a sufficiency of its various food requirements. The body itself must maintain a chemical balance. The blood must be kept alkaline in order that it may deal with the acids which are produced as a result of tissue activity.

In order to determine whether a food is acid or alkali-forming, it is burned and the ash is tested. To keep the body in a state of health and to maintain the alkalinity of the blood, a reasonable balance between the two must be obtained. Milk, and fruits and vegetables, with a few exceptions such as prunes and rhubarb, are alkali-forming foods; meats eggs and cereals are acid-forming foods.

Calcium is required for the building of strong teeth and bones, to keep the blood normal, and to regulate body functions. Expectant and nursing mothers and young children require an abundant supply of lime, and this is to be found in milk, cheese, leafy vegetables, carrots, turnips, oranges and whole-grain cereals.

Iron forms a necessary part of the blood as it is the carrier of oxygen. It makes the energy in the foods available for use by the body. Iron is present in eggs, lean beef, liver, leafy vegetables, molasses, dried beans, potatoes, dried fruits and whole-grain cereals.

It is obvious that an adequate supply of calcium, phosphorus and iron will be obtained by the person who uses a variety of foods, making sure to include in his diet milk, leafy vegetables, fruits and whole-grain cereals. This is of practical importance because the regular use of these same foods ensures also an adequate supply of vitamins.

A diet lacking in minerals means ill-health and inefficiency. If we wish to keep healthy and enjoy a larger measure of health, we should use liberal amounts of a good variety of vegetables, particularly the leafy ones, fruits, whole-grain cereals, and milk. The minerals in vegetables which are eaten cooked are preserved by cooking the vegetables in their jackets and paring them afterwards; they may be baked or steamed. If they are pared and cooked in water, the water should not be thrown away, but used as a base for soups or sauces.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.
